Second appeal against the decrees of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, South Karana, in A. S. Nos. 167, 166 and 165 of 1922, preferred against those of the Court of the District Munsif, Udipi, in O. S. Nos. 133, 134 and 135 of 1920 respectively.

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated therein, the High Court will be pleased to dismiss the Second Appeal No. 1416 of 1923 without costs as disputes between the parties to it have been settled in pursuance of a compromise referred to in the affidavit filed in O. M. P. No. 2638 of 1925 on the file of the High Court praying for leave to compromise detailed in the affidavit filed herewith as being beneficial to the minor respondents Nos. 8 to 10 in the said Second Appeal No. 1416 of 1923.

Messrs. B. L. N. Rai and B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These three suits are brought for maintenance against the first defendant who is the ejman of the Aliyasantana family to which the plaintiffs belong. Separate maintenance is claimed in all three suits on the ground that the defendant had refused to maintain the plaintiffs. Both the Courts have found that this case is untrue and that there was no refusal by the defendant to maintain the family but both the Courts have given a decree for maintenance. The lower Appellate Court has held that "defendant and the plaintiffs are not moving well and that a joint mess in the family house has become extremely inconvenient" and on that ground has awarded separate maintenance. The right of a member of an Alayasantana family for maintenance in the tarwad house is undoubted and under certain circumstances he is entitled to separate maintenance outside. It has been held that when a wife goes to live with her husband or when a husband goes to live with his wife in a separate house, they are entitled to separate maintenance. Vide Maravadi v. Pamakkar (1), Kunbi Amma v. Ammu Amma (2), Muthu Amma v. Vellathumkara Gopalan (3) and Govindan Nair v. Kunja Nayar (4). But it is not suggested in these cases that any of the members has gone to reside separately for any proper purpose. One Seshappa, the head of the branch, which brings the Suit No. 133 of 1920 did apparently leave the tarwad house for a year or two but he admits that he returned there when he found that both his branch and the other two branches were being treated alike. It is not suggested that any of the other members has gone away to live separately, except temporarily and from time to time. It is now urged for respondents that they are entitled to separate maintenance because of the quarrels that have taken place in the family. There have been suits between the ejman and some members of the family and also one suit between two branches of the family, but there is no evidence to show that these disputes have been of such a nature as to make it impossible or dangerous for the members to continue to live together in the same house and take meals together. The lower Appellate Court has merely found that their living together was extremely inconvenient. It has been pointed out in Kunhi Amma v. Ammu Amma (2) that the right to separate maintenance cannot be put on the mere ground that there is no such complete harmony in the house as to ensure the happiness of the claimant. Mere inconvenience, therefore, is not sufficient to warrant separate maintenance. It may be observed that the lower Appellate Court does add to these reasons the following "I, therefore, agree with the lower Court in holding that the plaintiffs are entitled to claim separate maintenance" and he must be deemed to have adopted the District Munsif's reasoning. When we look at the findings of the District Munsif, we see nothing more definite than the finding of the Subordinate Judge. The Dis-strict Munsif elaborately discusses the evidence and finds the plaintiffs are not debarred from claiming maintenance, but the mere fact that they are not debarred in suitable circumstances from so claiming is no evidence that such suitable circumstances do exist and that point he has not considered, his main ground being that the defendant had refused to permit the plaintiffs to "freely participate in the family income," defendant had acted up to the terms of a family karar which defined the rights of the parties and it was not incumbent on him to distribute any spare money that he had in his pocket among all the other members or even among some of them. Similarly the District Munsif seems to think that when some members resided away for a portion of the year with their husbands or wives, as the case might be, they were entitled to claim from the ejman a sum equivalent to their maintenance during the period of absence. Such a right has certainly never been recognised by the Courts and the District Munsif gives no authority for his opinion. Even, therefore, if we take the findings of the District Munsif together with those of the Subordinate Judge no adequate reasons have been given for awarding separate maintenance in these suits. In view of these findings it is unnecessary for me to say anything about the rate of maintenance; but I would point out that the Subordinate Judge has given very inadequate reasons for rejecting the actual income shown in the leases and accepting in preference some vague estimate of what the yield would have been and the price that it would have fetched. He has also divided the income into exactly equal shares for each person and allotted it accordingly not taking into account the right of the karnavan to something more and the right of those members who continued to live jointly in the family house to enjoy the same mode of living as they formerly enjoyed subject only to the rights of those who have separated from the family.

Second Appeal No. 1416 of 1923 has been compromised as between the defendant and all the plaintiffs except the third. There will be a decree in accordance with that compromise and also a decree dismissing the suits with costs throughout, the costs in S. A. No. 1416 of 1923 being met by 3rd plaintiff alone.

Babu J. M. Mitra, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Rule obtained at the instance of the landlords and directed against an order passed by the Rent Controller on the 25th September 1924 purporting to fix a standard rent of the premises in suit.

The material facts are as follows. On the 21st March 1922 the tenants applied for standardization of rent and a written statement was filed by the landlords on the 27th April in that year. On the 8th June the tenants' case before the Rent Controller was dismissed for default. On the 29th April 1922 the landlords served a notice to quit on the tenants and the determination of the tenancy was to take place as from the 1st June 1922. In the following December the landlords commenced a suit on the Original Side of this Court for ejectment for non-compliance with the notice and for arrears of rent and mesne profits. Subsequent to this on the 20th June 1923, the tenants whose previous application before the Rent Controller had been dismissed, again applied for standardization of rent. On the 29th June 1923, the landlords' suit for ejectment was decreed ex parte. But the suit was subsequently restored and was again heard on the 24th July 1924 when the suit was decreed on contest and an order was made for possession to be given within four weeks. The rent for the five months, January to May 1922, was fixed at a sum of Rs. 250 for the five months and mesne profits were decreed at the rate of Rs. 220 per month.

The question before us is whether the Rent Controller was entitled to fix standard rent of the premises on the 24th September 1924. In our opinion he clearly had no jurisdiction to deal with the matter on this date. The suit for ejectment had been decreed on the 24th July 1924 and thereby the notice to determine the tenancy on the 1st June 1922, was held to be a valid notice. Consequently, at the time the tenants' application was made for fixing a standard rent, namely, on the 20th June 1923, and on the date when the Rent Controller purported to fix a standard rent, namely, the 5th September 1924, there was no tenancy in existence and consequently there was nobody who could, as a tenant, apply to the Rent Controller for fixing standard rent. Consequently, in our opinion, the whole of the proceedings before the Rent Controller was incompetent and the order purporting to fix a standard rent on the 25th September 1924 was without jurisdiction. Some suggestion is made that there was a statutory tenancy under the Rent Act in existence until the suit was decreed on the 24th July 1924 but it does not seem that there is any substance in this argument and we do not see how this contention can really be raised.

In the circumstances, therefore, we make the Rule absolute and the landlords, the petitioners, will be entitled to their costs which we assess at five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of remand by the lower Appellate Court in a promissory note suit. The plaintiff sued the defendant in the District Munsif's Court on an on-demand promissory note for Rs. 700. The defendant admitted execution and the receipt of the money, but pleaded that the promissory-note was taken by the plaintiff as a sort of guarantee that the plaintiff would not resile from his bargain to empower the defendant to manage his lands and get possession of them for him by criminal proceedings that the plaintiff promised to pay him Rs. 10 a month for his services and a bonus of Rs. 500 if the criminal proceedings turned out successful, that he thus got the Rs. 700 as a sort of advance of his pay and bonus which were going to fall due to him, and that this advance was to be discharged as and when that pay and bonus became due and that the plaintiff agreed to this course being adopted; the defendant further pleaded that pay to the extent of Rs. 200 and more and the bonus of Rs. 500 had actually fallen due to him before the date of suit and that, therefore, the promissory-note had been fully discharged.

The District Munsif held that the defendant could not put forward the above agreement in defence in a promissory-note suit as such an agreement contravened the provisions of s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act. The lower Appellate Court held that the agreement could be proved and remanded the suit for evidence, and against this order the present appeal is filed.

Neither of the lower Courts has, we think, quite clearly understood the nature of the case. The defendant's written statement is not as clear as it might be but we think that his plea really amounts to a contention that the promissory-note sum was paid to him as an advance of pay and bonus, that advance to be paid off as and when that pay and bonus fell due. Now, if this is a plea that the promissory-note was not payable on demand and was not enforceable until the pay and bonus became due, i. e., was not enforceable until it was discharged and was, therefore, never really enforceable at all, that would be a plea of a condition in defeasance of the on-demand contract and the District Munsif's view would be perfectly correct. But it is not that and the defendant himself admits so much. His plea is rather an admission that if the plaintiff chooses to sue before the pay and bonus were due then he cannot resist the demand but if the plaintiff chooses to delay his suit until the pay and bonus had fallen due, then the promissory-note is in fact discharged because the plaintiff agreed to allow that pay and bonus to be credited towards the promissory-note debt. That that was the case between the parties from the first, is clear from the fact that the first issue in the case was whether the discharge pleaded is true, the defence being treated not as plea of non-enforceability of the note, but as a plea of discharge, and it was until another District Munsif took up the case that the third issue was framed, namely, whether the written statement discloses any valid defence. Now, as the plaintiff has on the defendant's case deferred his suit until the pay and bonus were due from him to the defendant, we can see no bar under s. 92 of the Indian Evidence Act against the proof of this agreement. It is not in any sense an alteration of the original terms of the contract. It is for the purposes of the present defence a mere agreement as to the method of payment proveable and enforceable when a state of affairs is reached where it does not conflict with the on-demand condition in the promissory-note. The note is still and has always been payable on demand; but when in answer to the demand the defendant is in a position to say that he has already discharged the note according to the method agreed upon between the plaintiff and himself, there can be no bar under s. 92 to prevent proof of that agreement.

In this view, no question of legal or equitable set off will arise. If it is proved that there was an agreement that the note should be discharged in that way, then the note is either discharged or it is not, and the correct issue for decision in the case is Issue-I—whether the discharge pleaded is true?

The defendant has also put forward a plea of general set off against the plaintiff that the plaintiff owed him various sums of money amounting to much more than the promissory-note amount and that, therefore, the promissory-note amount is not owing. But he did not in the first Court pay any fee on the amount claimed by him as a set off and the District Munsif, therefore, refused to entertain that plea. The defendant did not appeal on that ground and he never urged that ground before the lower Appellate Court. We are not prepared, therefore, to allow him to take the point here in appeal, nor need we deal also with the further ground put forward by him that this promissory note was merely an item in a series of running accounts that being a point which he also never put forward before the lower Appellate Court. We are here concerned only with the question whether the lower Appellate Court's order of remand is a proper one. We are of opinion for the reasons given above that it was and that the suit after remand should be dealt with by the first Court on the lines that we have indicated above. We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Mr. Gordhandas A. Kikla, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—"Can the plaintiffs as auctioneers, maintain a suit for the recovery of the value of the goods sold at an auction sale"? is the issue on which I have been invited to pronounce my judgment prior to the consideration of the evidence as to the merits of their claim.

Mr. Kikla for the defendant urges that they cannot. His argument is that the auctioneers in the present suit were merely agents for known principals, and as according to the law of agency, an agent can neither sue nor be sued, the present suit by the plaintiffs is incompetent. He relies on s. 230, Indian Contract Act, in support of his contention. He contends that the exceptions to the section have no application in the circumstances of the present case as they obviously have none, nor has it been established that there was any contract to the contrary, and, therefore, this suit must be dismissed at the very threshold.

There is no definite statutory provision as to the rights and liabilities of an auctioneer, and the Indian case law on the point is very meagre. The industry of the Pleaders for the respective parties has succeeded in unearthing only one authoritative case which is reported as Subramania Pattar v. Narayanan Nayar (1). No doubt an auctioneer, is classified as an agent, but it must not be over-looked that the nature of his duties invest him with certain rights which differentiate him from an ordinary agent. In his capacity as an auctioneer he has an interest in the goods entrusted to him for auction sale. He has alien upon them for his charges and advances. His custody of the goods is not the bare custody of an ordinary agent, but he by virtue of the auction of his principal acquires a special property in the goods which are in his possession for the purposes of the auction-sale. It is, therefore, essential to discriminate between the legal possession of an agent, and that of an auctioneer, and the interest which the latter acquires in the goods that are entrusted to him for auction sale differentiate his legal rights and duties from those of an ordinary agent. The English authorities are very explicit as to the right of an auctioneer to sue, and his liability to be sued. Mr. Kikla however argued that there is a divergence between the Indian and English law as to legal position of an auctioneer, and consequently the English authorities could not be accepted as safe guides in determining the law in India. It will appear from the commentaries of different authors on the Indian Contract Act that in their opinion the rights and liabilities of auctioneers are identical both in England and in India. In Cunningham and Shephard's Commentaries to s. 230 of the Indian Contract Act, page 534, there occur the following pertinent observations:—"The case of an agent who has an interest in the contract made by him as such is not within the rule. He is the person to sue, and he is liable to be sued on the contract. An auctioneer or factor, being in possession of his employer's goods having a lien on them for his charges and advances, is in this position. An auctioneer may be sued for non-delivery of the goods sold and he may sue the buyer for the price."

In Pollock and Mulla's commentaries on the same section, page 742 there are the following remarks:—"It is settled law that when an agent has made a contract in the subject matter of which he has a special property he may, even though he contracted for an avowed principal, sue in his own name. Such is the case of a factor, and of an auctioneer, who 'has a possession coupled with an interest in goods which he is employed to sell, not a bare custody, like a servant or a shopman' and a special property by reason of his lien". The above observation are no doubt based on the English authorities, but the learned commentators of the Indian Contract Act say that the like rule is laid down by our Indian Courts and cite Subrahmaniam Pattar v. Narayanan Nayar (1). In this case it was held that "where an agent enters into a contract as such, if he has an interest in the contract he may sue in his own name".

In my opinion, therefore, the English and the Indian law are analogous on the point that where an agent has an interest in the contract he may sue on that contract in his own name. This is a proposition of law deducible from the English authorities and I see no reason for its non-application in India. In Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. 1, page 519, para. 1063, the law on the point is stated as follows:—"An auctioneer, may by reason of his lien on a special property in goods, maintain an action in his own name for the price of goods sold . . . . This right to sue continues as long as the auctioneer's lien on the proceeds of the sale exists, and cannot be affected by any settlement or set-off between the vendor and purchaser". In Williams v. Millington (2) it was held "that an auctioneer employed to sell the goods of a third person by auction, may maintain an action for goods sold and delivered against a buyer, though the sale was at the house of such third person, and the goods were known to be his property." In the present case though, no doubt, the principals were well known, the plaintiffs were employed to sell the goods by public auction. They did so, and they sue for recovery of the value of the goods which were knocked down to the defendant as the highest bidder, and delivery of which was given to him, the plaintiffs were in possession of the goods not merely "as a servant or a shopman", they had a lien on them and on the price realised for their charges and expenses. They, therefore, had an interest in them, or what may be designated as special property. Their position, therefore, was not of a bare agent, but of agents who had an interest in the goods which were entrusted to them for sale. Therefore, by reason of this interest I hold that the suit in their own name is competent.

My finding on this issue is, therefore, in the affirmative.

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—This is an appeal from the judgment of the learned Officiating Chief Justice in S. A. No. 940 of the 1921 which was in turn an appeal from the Second Additional Subordinate Judge's Court of Tanjore.

The matter came before us sometime before the vacation when we heard arguments at considerable length. We, however, deferred giving judgment in view of representations that were made to us that there was a strong probability of the parties coming to terms. We were informed just before the beginning of the vacation that these negotiations had broken down and we, therefore, posted the case for fresh argument after the vacation.

The litigants are Muhammadans, the plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2 being the children and the 3rd plaintiff the wife of one Sheik Muhammad Rowther. The defendant is the brother of Sheik Muhammad Rowther uncle of the present male plaintiff. The subject of the litigation is certain property and this has been a fruitful subject of controversy between the parties or their ancestors in the past. In O. S. No. 15 of 1905 Sheik Muhammad Rowther through whom the plaintiffs claim filed a suit against the present defendant his brother for disturbance of his possession of the suit property. The defendant pleaded that the property was not the exclusive property of the plaintiff but belonged to the whole family, the plaintiff being entitled only to a quarter share. The plaintiff put the defendant on his oath which defendant took and the suit was thereupon dismissed without trial. Ten years afterwards in O. S. No. 38 of 1915 one of the daughters of a sister of the family sued her uncles and aunts for a partition of her share. The present plaintiff was the 6th defendant in that suit and the present defendant was the 6th defendant. The plaintiff contended that he was the owner of the property as did also the 6th defendant, but the Court finding that the property belonged to the 5th defendant who is the present plaintiff, the suit was dismissed.

Now the present suit is O. S. No. 502 of 1918 and this is a suit, to use a neutral term for the present, for recovering the three quarters share belonging to the plaintiffs. The plaintiff recognises that owing to the litigation in O. S. No. 15 of 1905 the plaintiff cannot now say that he is entitled to the whole property and the question before us has been first, whether the plaint is in fact one for partition of his property and or whether the suit is barred by reason of O. S. No. 15 of 1905. There is no doubt that the suit of 1905 was based on ownership and Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer's argument for the respondent in this case is that the suit is also based on ownership. The plaintiff failed in the suit of 1905 because he failed to prove that the whole of the property was his or that the property was entirely his. The learned Officiating Chief Justice in his judgment observes that the suit does not purport to be a suit for partition of property between co-owners. I think what the learned Chief Justice means is that the plaint is practically a plaint for the recovery of the property (minus a certain proportion) on the score of ownership residing in the plaintiff. On a careful consideration of the matter which speaking for myself has caused some difficulty, I am not prepared to say that the learned Officiating Chief Justice was wrong. If that is so, i. e., if the suit of 1905 in which the plaintiff claimed the whole and if the present suit of 1918 in which without claiming the whole he still bases his claim on his ownership are so regarded; there can be no doubt that the suit of 1905 bars the plaintiff's claim in the present suit. This seems to have been the opinion of the learned Officiating Chief Justice basing his judgment on Naina Muhammad Rowther v. Abdul Rahman Rowther (1). He thought, however, that on the plain admission, by the appellants that a suit for partition, if properly constituted, would lie, the proper course to take was to allow an amendment of the plaint and for the plaintiffs to be allowed to rectify the mistaken course on which they have, I think, plainly embarked. I do not disguise that my first feeling was that a proper decision had been come to by the learned District Munsif, and Subordinate Judge. The judgment of the District Munsif particularly strikes me as luminous and exhaustive. But I see the difficulty and inconvenience which even if the state of the pleadings allowed it this course would have entailed. It seems no doubt that there are ladies in this family who are entitled to shares and who are now at present on the record and if we divided this property now among the plaintiff and the defendant in whatever proportions, it is extremely likely that we should be embarrassing these ladies in the recovery of their proper shares. I think, therefore, if I may say so with respect, that the proper course was followed by the Officiating Chief Justice and that this Letters Patent appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree. The facts of the case are somewhat complicated but for the purpose of this Letters Patent appeal the real question requiring consideration is whether the plaint in the case is one for partition of the suit property between the plaintiff and the defendant as co owners thereof. The parties are Muhammadans. The plaintiff's case is that the property is absolutely his own and that, since the defendant asked for two-eighths of that property in O. S. No. 15 of 1905, he is willing to let him have that portion, with the result that according to him he is now entitled to claim six-eighths, i. e., the remainder of the suit property. A perusal of the plaint clearly shows that the plaintiff has based his title on his exclusive ownership, then the allegations in the plaint would certainly be different; the plaintiff will not allege that the property is exclusively his own. A suit for partition based upon plaintiff's exclusive ownership of the property is admittedly barred in view of the decision in O. S. No. 15 of 1905. However, it is conceded that the plaintiff has a cause of action for asking for partition on the ground of co-ownership. The learned Officiating Chief Justice has, therefore, allowed an amendment of the

The learned Officiating Chief Justice has given specific directions that this should be done and that the defendant should be allowed to alter his written statement in whichever way he pleases. In my opinion, the course adopted by the learned Officiating Chief Justice, if I may say so respectfully, is certainly right. The Letters Patent appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER No. 1 OF 1925.

September 24, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Devadoss and Mr. Justice Waller.

MUTHUVENKATARAMA REDDIAR AND OTHERS—PETITIONERS—APPELLANTS
versus

THE OFFICIAL RECEIVER, SOUTH
ARCOT AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 60 (c)— Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28 (5)— Agriculturist, who is—"House occupied by agriculturist," meaning of.

The word 'agriculturist' in s. 60 (c), C. P. C., is not used in its etymological sense, it is used to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words, one whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean only a person who works with his hands. The protection from attachment under the clause is given only to small owners of land as well as actual tillers of the soil. [p. 398, col 2; p. 399, col 1]

A large landed proprietor, even though his sole income is from land, is not an "agriculturist" within the meaning of s. 60 (c), C. P. C., and is not entitled to protection thereunder. [p. 399, col. 1]

Jivan Bhaga v. Hira Bhatji, 12 B 363, 6 Ind. Dec. (S. S.) 726, followed.

The exemption from attachment under cl (c) of s. 60, C. P. C., is given in respect of a house or building occupied by an agriculturist, i.e., a house dwelt in by the agriculturist as such and necessary for his effectively pursuing his occupation as an agriculturist. [ibid.]

A mansion in a large village in which the owner lives, even though he has no other source of income except that from land, is not such a house as is contemplated by cl. (c) of s. 60, C. P. C., nor is the house of an ordinary agriculturist situated at a considerable distance from the land which he cultivates and which is not necessary for effective or convenient cultivation of the land. [p. 399, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, South Arcot, at Cuddalore, dated the 17th of November 1924, in I. A. No. 399 of 1924, in I. P. No. 14 of 1922.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Appellants.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—The appellants were adjudicated insolvents on their own petition in 1922. They applied to the District Court on 24th July 1924 for a declaration that the two items of property, a terraced house and a cattle-shed, did not vest in the Official Receiver. The District Judge dismissed their petition, and they have preferred this appeal.

The contention of the appellants is that they are agriculturists and the two items which are buildings which they occupied are exempt from the operation of the Insolvency Law by reason of s. 28, cl. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. The appellants are large landed proprietors owning about 300 acres of land worth nearly a lakh and their debts amounted to Rs. 1,35,000 and odd. The two items are valued by the appellants themselves at Rs. 6,000 and Rs. 1,000 respectively. Under s. 28, cl. 5 all properties which are exempt by reason of s. 60 of the C. P. C. or by any other law from liability to attachment and sale in execution of a decree do not vest in the Official Receiver and are, therefore, not liable to be sold to satisfy the claims of the creditors. The question for determination is whether the two buildings come within s. 60, cl. (c) of the C. P. C. Clause (c) is in these terms:—

"Houses and other buildings with the materials and the sites thereof and the land immediately appurtenant thereto and necessary for their enjoyment belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him."

In order to claim exemption under s. 60, cl. (c) two points should be found in favour of the appellants, (1) the appellants are agriculturists within the meaning of cl. (c) and (2) the house and cattle-shed are such as are mentioned in cl. (c).

The term, "agriculturist", means etymologically one versed in agriculture and is not used in cl. (c) in its etymological sense, but it is used to denote a person making his living by tilling the soil, in other words one whose sole means of livelihood is gained by cultivating land and does not necessarily mean only a person who works with his hands. But it means and includes a small holder of land who tills the soil and cultivates it. Clause (c) has to be read in the light of cl. (1) and (2). What is exempt from attachment is what is absolutely necessary to enable a person to live such as wearing apparel, cooking vessels, bedding, etc., tools of artisans, implements of husbandry, etc. A large landed proprietor, even though his sole income is from land, is not an agriculturist within the meaning of cl. (c). Mr. Srinivasagopalachariar's contention is that a man whose sole income is from land, whatever its extent may be, whether he cultivates the land himself or leases it, is an agriculturist. If this is the correct meaning of the word "agriculturist" a man owning say, 1,000 acres of wet land is an agriculturist provided he has no other source of income. It could not have been the intention of the Legislature to give protection to such people. The protection is given to small owners of land as well as actual tillers of the soil. The word "agriculturist" must be interpreted in a strict sense. In Jivan Bhaga v. Hira Bhaiji (1) West, J., observes

"It was for agriculturist in the strictest sense and for an agriculturist in that sole character that the protection of s. 266, cl. (c) of the C. P. C., was intended." We hold that the appellants are not agriculturists within the meaning of cl. (c) of s. 60.

Even if the contention of the appellants that they are agriculturists is upheld, they would not succeed in the appeal unless they make out that the house and cattle-shed are houses and buildings within the meaning of cl. (c). In order to make out that the house and cattle-shed come within the meaning of cl. (c), they must beshown to have been occupied for purposes of agriculture, that is, in order to enable the owner or occupier to cultivate land. The expression "and occupied by him" gives the clue to the meaning of cl. (c), i. e., that they are occupied by the agriculturists as such, as houses or buildings as are necessary for pursuing the occupation of the agriculturists—a shed in a field or a house in the midst of fields which is occupied, so that the agricultural occupation may be carried on effectively and without loss of time, or in other words without such buildings and houses the agricultural operations would suffer. A mansion in a large village in which the owner lives, even though he has no other source of income except that from land, is not such a house as is contemplated by cl. (c) nor is the house of an ordinary agriculturist situated at a considerable distance from the land which he cultivates and which is not necessary for effective or convenient cultivation of the land. A man may have a house in a town and a small holding at a considerable distance from the income of which he maintains himself. As the house in the town is not occupied by him for purposes of agriculture, it is not exempt from attachment and sale under cl. (c).

We are glad to find that the view that we hold is in accordance with the view expressed by West and Nanabhai Haridas, JJ., in Radhakisan Hakumji v. Balvant Ramji (2). The learned Judges observes at page 531*:

"The exemption is of a house or building occupied by an agriculturist, and this, we think, means a house dwelt in by an agriculturist as such, and the farm buildings appended to such dwelling. It does not include other houses, which in one sense may be occupied; what is meant is a physical occupation, by an owner, of his house as a dwelling appropriate or convenient for his calling."

The house and cattle shed are in the midst of a village containing, it is said, about 300 houses and cannot be said that they were occupied by the appellants for purposes of agriculture and they do not come within the meaning of "houses and other buildings belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him" within the meaning of s. 60, cl. (c) of the C. P. C.

The decision in Devara Hegde v. Vaikunt Subaya Sonde (3) does not help the appellants. The learned Judges cite with approval the passage in Radhakisan Hakumji v. Balvant Ramji (2) extracted above and hold that if the building came within the exemption given by s. 60, cl. (c) at the time of the attachment, the benefit thereof, would not be lost by the death of the judgment-debtor.

That the present contention is an after-thought is clear from the fact that the appellants mention the two items in their schedule as assets available for distribution among the creditors and delivered possession thereof to the Official Receiver two years before they made the application to the lower Court.

In the result the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Waller, J.—I do not consider that appellants can any longer be described as agriculturists. Their land has vested in the Official Receiver and there is nothing to show that they cultivate any other land as labourers or tenants. A house to be exempt from attachment under s. 60 of the O. F. C., must belong to or be occupied by an agriculturist as such, i. e., for the purpose of agriculture. Apart from that, appellants placed the Official Receiver in possession of goods before the adjudication and I do not think that they should now be allowed to plead exemption. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Execution of decree—Partition decree—Partition not ordered by the decree, whether can be carried out—Jurisdiction of Court in partition cases.

In executing a decree for partition, the Executing Court has no power to effect a partition which has not been ordered by the decree and for which there is no properly framed application before the Court. In such a matter no consent of parties can give the Court jurisdiction. [401, col. 1.]

Petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Coimbatore, dated the 3rd March 1923, in I. A. No. 628 of 1922, in O. S. No. 3 of 1915.

Mr. S. Subramania Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff obtained a decree declaring that he and the 9th defendant were each entitled to a moiety of the plaintiff B and E schedule properties. In this petition we are only concerned with the B schedule properties. It would appear that after that decree was passed, the plaintiff and the 9th defendant were put in possession of the B schedule properties, for a statement of the Vakil for defendants was put into Court stating "that the plaintiff and the 9th defendant are in possession of the properties mentioned in the B schedule for the last two years, the defendants Nos. 5 and 12 have no objection to their continuing in possession and that the defendants have no objection to their taking possession through Court." On that memo. the plaintiff and the 9th defendant put in a memo. on the 19th September 1922 asking that the properties should be delivered by Court, but they asked that such of the survey numbers in the B schedule as belonged to their share exclusively should be delivered to them but as regards the survey numbers in which they had only a share they asked that B and C schedule properties should be put together and partition effected according to good and bad qualities. There was no decree for such a partition. The plaintiff in his plaint had not even hinted that the B schedule properties were not ascertainable and in the written statement it was alleged that the partition had taken place years before and that the properties had been allotted to the various sharers. In Ex. A also the plaintiff's father purported to give possession of the B schedule properties. It is, I think, abundantly clear from these pleadings that there was a partition by metes and bounds and the plaintiff's application to effect a further partition of some of the B and C schedules properties is not at all warranted. Apart from that the Court had no jurisdiction to effect such a partition. The order of the petition runs:—

"With the consent of the Vakil for defendants Nos. 1, 5, 7 and 12, I order that properties in B schedule 1, 1a 1b as given in their petition be delivered to the plaintiff and 9th defendant and that a Commissioner be appointed to divide the properties in B schedule II as suggested in their petition."

By "their" I assume that the Subordinate Judge means plaintiff and 9th defend.

ant who in their memo. had divided B schedule properties into B schedule 1, 1a, 1b and II. This consent appears to be based on an affidavit filed by the 5th defendant and docketed as being on behalf of defendants Nos. 1, 5, 7 and 12. In the affidavit the 5th defendant alleged the prior partition and stated at the end of the affidavit :—

"The plaintiff and 9th defendant desire to have a division. We have no objection to do so."

Presumably the Vakil who appeared raised no objection to the Commissioner appointed. It is on this statement of consent that the jurisdiction must be founded; otherwise the Court had no power to effect a partition which had not been ordered by the decree and for which there was no properly framed application before the Court. No consent of parties could give the Court jurisdiction in a matter like this, for the question was not pending before the Court and had never been put in issue in any proceedings. I may also observe that when the Commissioner had sent in a report, objections were ordered to be filed before the 5th January. On the 5th January, the Court was closed on account of plague. It does not appear when it was re-opened but an affidavit was filed on the day when the petition was next taken up and rejected as being out of time. It is not quite clear whether it was filed on the day the Court re-opened or not, and consequently I cannot say that this order is incorrect, but it seems strange that this objection to a division by the 7th defendant, the present petitioner who had never consented to it specifically should have been rejected on this ground. I must set aside the Subordinate Judge's order of the 3rd March for delivery according to the partition made by the Commissioner. Respondents will pay the petitioner's costs in this petition.

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal, dated the 3rd July 1924, in S. A. No. 265 of 1923, printed as 82 Ind. Cas. 326.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Gulzari Lal and Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the appeal of the plaintiffs who had instituted a suit as reversioners of one Ram Charan for the possession of 2 bighas of land. In 1884 Ram Charan appears to have been in difficulties and he had a 9-pie odd share in a certain village. He executed a sale-deed which has had to be construed in all the Courts and on the proper construction of that sale-deed the rights of the parties depend. The plaintiffs are the reversioners but the defendants are the purchasers of whatever rights the vendee had. The real point is whether the sale was an out-and-out sale of the 9-pie odd share or whether it was a sale by the vendor of the 9-pie odd share minus the 2 bighas now in dispute. The document lies before us and it starts by Ram Charan stating that he had a 9-pie 3-kauri 2-dant zemindari share in the property and then, after usual formal parts, says that he has absolutely sold with the exception of 2 bighas of nankar land numbered as below (1460) the entire property. Pausing there and putting the sale in the plainest possible terms, it was a sale of the 9-pie odd share minus the 2 bighas specifically numbered. At a later portion of the deed he says :—

"Let this be known that the 2 bighas of nankar land which I have excluded from the sale shall remain in my possession for life and after my death in the possession of my aulad khas without payment of rent or Government revenue. I or my lineal descendants have no right to transfer the property excluded either permanently or temporarily. If none of my lineal descendants is alive in my family then the said land shall be declared to be the own property of the vendee and his heirs and the persons of my family shall have no claim to the same."

It remains only to notice one further reference to this land. In the detail we find the share sold, viz., 9-pie 3-kauri 2-dant nankar land excluded from the 2 bighas No. 1460. The construction that we put upon the passages that we have read is that the vendee got on the 12th of February 1884, the date of the sale, the 9-pie odd share with No. 1460, the 2 bighas definitely excluded, but that they had a possibility of becoming its owners at a future date provided that provision was one which the law would recognize. We can see in the document no indication whatever of the vendees having acquired the whole of the property in the whole of the land including the two bighas. What we do find is an acquisition of the whole of the 9-pie odd share except that particular area of 2 bighas numbered 1460. Now if that be so, what is the position when a contest arises between the nearest reversioners and the successors of the vendees? The position was that Ram Charan having died, he was succeeded by his son Mauzzam Ram, who in turn died childless in 1918, and, therefore, these 2 bighas of land would as it happened, if there was no law to the contrary, become the property of the vendees within a life or lives in being and twenty-one years after. But the fact that it happened to fall in within the legal limitation is not the test which is to be applied to these cases. What you have to see is whether the event can be postponed to beyond the period of a life or lives in being and 21 years after and not what in fact happened. Now applying that test it is perfectly evident that these 2 bighas of nankar land might have remained with the lineal descendants of Ram Charan for 100 or 200 years, and that being so, we are of opinion, that this was a condition repugnant to the law and being so repugnant to the law the defendants could not set up this document on which they rely as entitling them to possession of the property. We are, therefore, of opinion that the plaintiffs were right in bringing this action and that the decision of the learned Judge of this Court must be set aside and the decree of the First Appellate Court which confirmed the judgment of the Munsif must be restored with costs and fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Madras Estates Land Act (I of 1908); s. 151—Ejectment—Agricultural land—Sale by ryot for building purposes—Actual building only on small portion—Value as agricultural land, whether impaired—Landlord's right to eject.

Where a ryot sells the major portion of an agricultural holding for building purposes he in effect converts the agricultural land into a building site, and thereby materially impairs the value of the holding for agricultural purposes and the landlord is entitled to a decree in ejectment under s. 151 of the Madras Estates Land Act. It is immaterial that on the date of the suit only a small portion of the land has been built upon [p 403, col. 1].

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Kistna at Masulipatam, dated the 5th March 1923, in A. S. No. 119 of 1922, preferred against that of the Court of the Additional Deputy Collector, Bezwada, dated the 31st March 1922, in Summary Suit No. 439 of 1921.

Messrs. C. S. Venkatachariar and A. Venkatachalam, for the Appellant.

Sir K. V. Reddi, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff leased 15 acres 65 cents of dry land to the predecessor of defendants Nos. 1 to 4 in 1907 for a period of 30 years. Defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have now sold 14 acres of land to defendants Nos. 5 to 10 and the 5th defendant has begun the erection of a building on 100 square yards, has planted about 25 or 30 trees and fenced in one acre of this land and sunk a well. The plaintiff accordingly brings this suit under s. 151 of the Estates Land Act for the ejectment of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The sale-deed of the 14 acres is not filed but the 8th defendant, who is the only defendant examined in the suit admits that the 14 acres were purchased for about Rs. 1,800 and that the land has been purchased for building purposes, cattlesheds and storage of hay. Although, therefore, the 5th defendant alone has begun building on the land, it is clear that defendants Nos. 5 to 10 have all purchased the land for building purposes and defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have executed the sale-deed for that purpose. Both the lower Courts have found that the erection of this building by 5th defendant on two cents of land and the planting of fruit trees and the sinking of the well have not materially impaired the value of the holding for agricultural purposes.

It is contended for the respondent on the authority of Hari Mohan Misser v. Surendra Narayan Singh (1) that this is a finding of fact which is binding on me in second appeal, but this contention cannot be upheld in the present case, for s. 151 contemplates a suit against the ryot for materially impairing the value of the holding. In this case the ryot is defendants Nos. 1 to 4 between whom alone and the plaintiff there is the relation of landlord and tenant. We are not concerned here with the action of the 5th defendant, except in so far as it is in pursuance of the act of defendants Nos. 1 to 4. The sale to defendants Nos. 5 to 10 is not binding on the plaintiff, and inasmuch as each of the vendors is only entitled to  $2\frac{1}{2}$  acres, the landlord can object to the sub-division of the land, inasmuch as each sub-division is less than 5 acres of dry land. When we come to consider whether the tenants have materially impaired the value of the holding we have to realise what it is that the tenants have done. The land is leased for agricultural purposes and by selling 14 acres out of 15.65 acres for building purposes, the tenants have in effect converted the agricultural land into building sites. It is true that at present only a small extent of the land has been actually built upon, but defendants Nos. 1 to 4 have agreed to buildings being erected upon the whole 14 acres and have precluded themselves from raising any objection thereto. When we, therefore, consider the holding as an agricultural holding, there only remains 1 acre 65 cents of agricultural land. If the ryots wished to cultivate the whole, they could not do so because of their contract with defendants 5 to 10 under which the nature of the holding is entirely altered, and in this view it appears to me that they have materially impaired the value of the holding for agricultural purposes and rendered it substantially unfit for such purposes.

The plaintiff is accordingly entitled to a decree for ejectment.

Plaintiff has also claimed compensation. It cannot be suggested that the erection of this small building has materially injured the plaintiff and it would be very difficult to fix the amount of compensation. It is, however, recognised by Napier, J., in Sankaralinga Moopnar v. Subramania Pillai (2) that some compensation would be admissible as otherwise ryots will be enabled to convert agricultural land into town plots and take the whole increased value to themselves, but as in this case the buildings have not yet been erected over any considerable portion of the holding, I do not consider that any compensation need be paid.

The second appeal is allowed and there will be a decree for ejectment with costs throughout.

Custom—Shamilat—Grazing rights—Proprietors, right of, to cultivate—Pasturage—Sufficient area to be set apart.

Plaintiffs, malikan-i-qabza, sued defendants, proprietors, for a declaration that they were entitled to graze their cattle in and to take away wood from the shamilat deh, and for an injunction restraining the defendants from cultivating their land. It appeared that the plaintiffs' right to graze their cattle, to take away fuel and to cut grass from the area in dispute had been established in previous litigation between the parties :

Held, that though the defendants were entitled to cultivate the land, the plaintiffs were entitled to have sufficient pasturage for their cattle and that, therefore, the defendants' right of cultivation should extend only to so much of the land as will leave plaintiffs a sufficient amount of area for grazing purposes. [p 405, col. 1.]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Sargodha, dated the 30th of April, 1924.

Lala Ram Chand Manchanda and Lala Hargopal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and Chuni Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case, who are 375 in number are the malikani-qabza and certain inhabitants of the village Girote in the Khushab Tahsil of the Shahpur District. The defendants are the shamilat-deh. The dispute relates to the shamilat-deh 11,110 bighas and 1 $\frac{3}{4}$  kanals in area which the plaintiffs allege they and their ancestors have always been using as pasturage, but which the defendants are now trying to encroach upon and to bring under cultivation. The right to take away fuel and to cut grass from the land in dispute for the use of their cattle is also claimed, and it is contended that the defendants are preventing plaintiffs from the exercise of these rights. The learned Senior Subordinate Judge has granted plaintiffs a declaratory decree to the effect that they are entitled to graze their cattle and to take away wood from the area which is free from cultivation, and has refused their prayer for an injunction restraining the defendants from cultivating their lands when the same are vacant and the sowing of the crops is possible.

Against the decision the plaintiffs have preferred a first appeal to this Court, and the main contention put forward on their behalf is that the learned Senior Subordinate Judge was not justified in refusing their prayer for an injunction, and that the area which the defendants were entitled to cultivate ought to have been specifically defined in the decree. It is further contended that the decree and the judgment were not in conformity with each other, and that it should have been stated in the decree that the plaintiffs were entitled to cut grass, to which right they were found entitled in the judgment. After hearing the learned Counsel for the parties we are of opinion that the appeal must succeed and that the decree of the learned Senior Subordinate

Judge should be modified to some extent. A reference to the jamabandi papers printed at pages 4 to 9 of the supplementary paper-book of First Appeal No. 4405 of 1915 shows that in Sambat 1935-36 the land was entered as shamilat-deh and shown in the column of remark as unassessed to land revenue and being used by the inhabitants of the village for grazing purposes. This entry was continued till Sambat 1948-49, corresponding to 1893-94, when about 918 bighas of land were for the first time brought under cultivation. A note was made in the revenue papers showing that this area was under the cultivation of non-occupancy tenants, but that no rent was paid. In the same year a dispute appears to have arisen between the proprietors and the inhabitants of the village as to the extent of the area which should have been entered in the revenue papers as shamilat-deh. The matter went up to Court, and on the 14th of July 1893 Munshi Ghulam Farid, Assistant Collector, decided that the land should be shown as owned by the Bilochis, who were entitled to cultivate it, but that it should also be entered that the inhabitants of the village had the right of grazing their cattle in the thal land and that the proprietors had no right to prevent them from doing so. A further entry was ordered to be made to the effect that no dues in respect of grazing were chargeable by the proprietors. In the present suit, which was instituted in 1914, it was stated by the plaintiffs that the defendants had ploughed and brought about 220 bighas of land more under cultivation in different places, and that they were gradually trying to reduce the area which the former were using for grazing purposes from time immemorial.

That the plaintiffs have a right to graze their cattle, to take away fuel, and to cut grass from the area in dispute cannot be doubted for a moment, and in fact the finding of the learned Senior Subordinate Judge is also to the same effect. The rights have been peacefully enjoyed till 1914, and it has not been shown that the defendants are in any way entitled to interfere with the exercise of these rights. The sole question for consideration is whether it is necessary that the area which the plaintiffs are entitled to use for grazing purposes should be sufficiently defined in the decree. By the order of Munshi Ghulam Farid, dated the 14th of July 1893, it was declared that the defendants were the owners of the land in dispute and that they were entitled to cultivate it. It was further declared that the plaintiffs have the right to graze their cattle over the whole of the area in dispute. There is nothing on the present record to show that the whole of the land is required for grazing purposes. There can, however, be no doubt that, though the defendants are entitled to cultivate the land, the plaintiffs are entitled to have sufficient pasturage left for the use of their cattle and that it appears to us advisable that a provision to this effect should be inserted in the decree. It will tend to prevent disputes in future and will also prevent the defendants from bringing the whole of the land under cultivation as apprehended by the plaintiffs. We are accordingly of opinion that it should be stated in the decree that the defendants' right of cultivation will extend only to so much of the land as will leave plaintiffs a sufficient amount of area for grazing purposes. The right to cut grass is included in the right of grazing as found by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge himself, and there is no reason why the plaintiffs' suit in respect of this right should not have been decreed. We are further of opinion that the plaintiffs should also be given a decree for an injunction restraining the defendants from preventing plaintiffs from the exercise of these rights. The question as to the sufficiency of pasturage to be left for the plaintiffs need not be decided in this case and may be left for execution proceedings. We accordingly accept the appeal and order that the decree of the lower Court should be modified to the extent above indicated. The defendants shall pay the costs of the plaintiffs in this Court.

A suit under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, to set aside a fraudulent alienation by a debtor is governed by Art. 120 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p 406, col. 1.]

Authikesavaloo Naicker v. Shah Abdulla, 29 Ind. Cas. 62, 2 L. W. 479, (1915) M. W. N. 337 and Venkateswara Aiyar v. Somasundram Chettiar, 44 Ind. Cas. 551, 7 L. W. 280, (1918) M. W. N. 244, relied on.

The right of suit under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, is an individual right which each creditor has, although if one creditor obtains a decree in a suit under s. 53 that decree accrues to the benefit of the other creditors as well [p 410, col. 2, p 411, col. 1.]

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The right to sue under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, accrues when a creditor exercises his option . . . . . fraudulent alienation and the starting point . . . . . a suit by him, therefore, is the date when he exercises this option [p 406, col. 1.]

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—The starting point for limitation for a suit under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, is not the date on which the creditor exercises the option to avoid the transfer, but it is the date on which the circumstances entitling the creditor to have the transfer avoided, first become known to him. Letters Patent Appeal against the judgment of Mr. Justice Krishnan, dated the 19th February 1924, in Second Appeal No. 796 of 1921, preferred to the High Court against a decree of the Court of the Second Additional Subordinate Judge, Guntur, in A. S. No. 70 of 1920 (A. S. No. 392 of 1920, District Court, Guntur, O. S. No. 134 of 1919, on the file of the Court of the Second Additional District Munsif, Guntur.)

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided in this appeal is one of limitation. This suit was filed under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The plaintiff, being the Receiver in insolvency represents the body of creditors of the insolvent. The transaction impeached is a mortgage, dated 27th July 1908, executed by the insolvent in favour of the defendant. The suit was filed on the 15th of February 1918.

The first question that arises is what is the Article that is applicable? Article

120 seems to be the appropriate Article. The decisions seem to be to the same effect: see Authikesavaloo Naicker v. Shah Abdulla (1) and Venkateswara Aiyar v. Somasundram Chettiar (2). It was conceded before us, and, in my opinion, rightly that the Article applicable is Art. 120. The more difficult question, however, is what is the starting point of limitation? On this point, there is no authority. Phillips, J., in Venkateswara Aiyar v. Somasundram Chettiar (2) expressed the view that the time runs from the date when the plaintiff had knowledge of the facts entitling him to relief. This though an obiter dictum is entitled to great weight as the point was fully considered by him. Krishnan, J., in the judgment under appeal, as I understand it, is not quite definite on the point. He thinks that limitation runs from the date when the creditor exercises his option; in the alternative from the date when he has knowledge of the facts that give him a right to relief. As I read his judgment, he is more inclined to take the former than the latter view. It seems to me that he expressed the alternative view, as on the facts, whichever view was taken the same result followed. Krishnan, J., having held that the suit was filed in time, the defendant has filed this appeal and Mr. Jaganadha Das has argued the case very fully on his behalf. His contention is that the date of alienation gives the starting point. He supports his contention by relying on what I may describe as grounds of convenience. Before advertng to these grounds, I shall deal with the point with reference to the two provisions of law that have a bearing, viz., s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act and Art. 120 of the Limitation Act. Under s. 53 a transfer that offends against the rule enacted in it is voidable at the option of any person defrauded, defeated or delayed. Under Art. 120 the suit may be brought within six years of the date when the right to sue accrues. The question resolves itself into this. When does the right to sue accrue? If the transaction is voidable at the option of a creditor he may avoid it at any time at his pleasure. Section 53 does not say that, after the lapse of a certain time, he shall not be able to avoid the transaction. It does not prescribe a limit of time. What then constitutes the exercise of the option? In the words of Wallis, C. J. in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (3) a voidable transaction may be avoided by any open and unequivocal declaration of an intention to avoid it, see page 769*. The right to sue accrues when this option is exercised. Under Art. 120 the suit may be instituted within six years from the date when the right to sue accrues. As that right accrues, as I have shown, when the plaintiff exercises his option, the suit may be filed within six years from the date of the exercise of the option. The proper construction of the sections compels us to take this view and it seems to me that this is what Krishnan, J., intended to hold. If so, I entirely agree with him.

The alternative view, namely, that time begins to run from the date when the plaintiff becomes aware of the facts that entitle him to relief found favour with Phillips, J., in Venkateswara Aiyar v. Somasundram Chettiar (2). But a perusal of his judgment shows that only two theories were put forward before him namely, (1) the date of alienation gives the starting point, (2) the date of knowledge. These were the two rival views that were placed before him and he preferred the view that knowledge gives the starting point. His judgment leaves no doubt in my mind that if what may be compendiously described as the option theory was suggested to him, he would have gladly adopted it. Indeed in this connection, he uses the word "option" but does not go the necessary length. Section 53, it is needless to point out, does not take note of knowledge at all. It speaks of option and not of knowledge. Under Art. 95 of the Limitation Act which relates to a suit for relief on the ground of fraud, knowledge, no doubt, would be a material element, for the prescribed period of three years runs from the date when the fraud becomes known to the party wronged. But the suit contemplated by s. 53 is not one for relief on the ground of fraud, and the knowledge of fraud to which Art. 95 refers is, therefore, not a material circumstance. Moreover, it is not necessary that there should be actual fraud to invalidate a transaction unless s. 53 as the second clause of that section shows, which runs as follows:—

(3) 59 Ind. Cas. 947; 43 M. W. 760; (1920) M. W. N. 572; 39 M. L. J. 350; 28 M. L. T. 173; 12 L. W. 475.

"Where the effect of any transfer of immoveable property is to defraud, defeat or delay any such person, and such transfer is made gratuitously or for a grossly inadequate consideration, the transfer may be presumed to have been made with such intent as aforesaid."

In my opinion, therefore, fraud or knowledge of fraud is not a relevant consideration and on the strict construction of the sections, I have arrived at the result and it is a matter for satisfaction that considerations of convenience and justice point to the same conclusion. From this point of view, I shall next deal with three different standpoints suggested.

First, let me take the date of alienation, being the starting point. Section 53 refers to an intention to defraud prior or subsequent transferees, co-owners and creditors. I shall take the case of creditors as this is the most usual case. It is settled that the benefit of the section is not restricted to existing creditors alone. Even subsequent creditors may impeach the transaction. Suppose then a trader makes an alienation of the property which offends against the terms of this section. Why should any creditor call in question the alienation if the trader is possessed of sufficient funds to satisfy him? Why should a subsequent creditor be barred although the alienation was made long previous to his debt having come into existence? Creditors are not generally interested in impugning the transaction entered into by their debtor. In spite of the fact that a property worth Rs. 10,000 has been alienated, the debtor may yet be possessed of assets worth lakhs and why should any creditor take the trouble of impugning the alienation, or again the debtor may have alienated the property, but may still be expected to make large profits or to amass large wealth. The creditors are only concerned with this that the debtor must one day be in a position to re-pay the amounts due. To say that the right to avoid a transaction becomes barred at the lapse of six years from the alienation, is practically to throw upon them the burden of impeaching every suspicious transaction, although for the time being, it may not be necessary to adopt this course of conduct. In the case of subsequent creditors whose interest accrues at a period too remote, the section will remain on this construction a dead letter. Further, if the date of alienation is the starting point, creditors may become barred for no fault of theirs, as it is very likely that they may not in time become aware of the transaction itself without even, be it noted, any active steps being taken by the debtor to conceal the transaction from his creditors.

Let me now take the second theory suggested, the date of knowledge being the starting point. As I have said, it matters little to a creditor that his debtor has alienated some of the property. Why should a creditor be driven to embark on litigation merely because it has come to his knowledge that his debtor has entered into a transaction not above board? The property still remaining, as I have said, may suffice or they may hope that the debtor may in time rally and no creditor can be expected to have before him a balance sheet disclosing actually the debtor's affairs.

The view then I have taken, namely, that the exercise of the option is the starting point imposes no unnecessary burden on the creditors. When they find that their interests demand that the transaction should be set aside they exercise the option and avoid the transaction. Moreover it is now settled that the option may be exercised otherwise than by the institution of a suit. Firstly, a creditor may attach the property alienated and he may do so, whatever may be length of time that lapses from the date of alienation. Secondly, if, on attachment, the transferee prefers a claim under O. XXI, r. 53, C. P. C., and the claim is allowed, the judgment creditor may file the statutory suit prescribed by r. 63 without regard again to the lapse of time from the date of alienation: see Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Bulathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamed (4). Thirdly, if the claim, is on the other hand, disallowed and the transferee files the suit under r. 63, the creditor may defend it by showing that the transaction was in fraud of creditors: see Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (3). In all these cases, the creditor exercises the option without resorting to the suit, under s. 53, and it would be anomalous to hold that although his right to file a suit is barred, his right still subsists to question the transaction by these other methods.

Mr. Jagannadha Das strongly argued that the starting point should not be made to rest upon such a shifting ground as exercise of option. I see nothing objectionable in this. To take another instance from the Limitation Act, under Art. 60 the period of limitation for a suit to recover money deposited under an agreement that it shall be payable on demand, is three years from the date when the demand is made. The making of the demand is entirely dependent upon the volition of the plaintiff and the period of limitation may be indefinitely prolonged and a suit may be instituted without even a demand being made, in which case no question of limitation arises. The exercising of the option is analogous in this respect to the making of the demand and the option may be exercised by the filing of the suit itself, in which case the question of limitation will likewise not arise. Mr. Jagannadha Das in his exhaustive argument contended that this will be a startling result. I do not in the least agree with him. On the other hand, the English cases show that this is assumed to be the normal position. In re Maddever; Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever (5) a creditor brought an action to set aside a conveyance several years after it was made and although he had been aware of the facts during the whole period and gave no satisfactory reason for his delay, the Court of Appeal held, affirming North, J., that his right to impeach the transaction was not barred. The only limitation recognised is that the debt should be subsisting. North, J., puts it thus: "Where the parties have been merely non-active, I do not see any reason why they should not take proceedings at any time while the debt is a subsisting debt. The time might have arrived when the Statute of Limitations would be a bar, and, of course, when the debt was gone, no proceedings could be taken in respect of it." Cotton, L. J., observes: "The plaintiffs in this case say 'We are creditors whose debt is not barred, and we seek payment out of property conveyed away by the debtor by a deed which the Statute of 13 Eliz., c. 5, makes void as against us.' The defendant relies on the delay of the creditor; but I am of opinion that this defence is not effectual." See also May on Fraudulent Conveyances, page 120, when the learned author says:—

(4) 51 Ind. Cas. 714; 42 M. 113; 25 M. L. T. 47; (1919) M. W. N. 39; 9 L. W. 138; 36 M. L. J. 231.

"Since the right of a creditor to set aside a deed under 13 Eliz., c. 5 is a legal right, and not merely a right to set aside the instrument on equitable grounds, the fact that the creditor has delayed to take proceedings to set aside the deed under that Statute, although with full knowledge of the facts, is immaterial, so long as the delay has not been such as to create a statutory bar. Until the right to recover the debt is barred by the Statutes of Limitations, the legal right to avoid the deed exists, and no equity arises from the mere delay to enforce it."

Mr. Jagannadha Das next contended that the nature of the action is representative and if one creditor is barred the whole body of creditors becomes barred. May a creditor bring a suit on his own behalf or must the suit be brought on behalf of all the creditors? This question does not strictly arise although I may say that on this point the preponderance of authority, so far as Madras is concerned, is in favour of the view that a creditor may bring such a suit on his own behalf: see Krishnan, J.'s judgment in Kottarathil Puthiyapurayil Pokker v. Balathil Parkum Chandrankandi Kunhamed (4) and Sadasiva Aiyar's observation at page 781* in Ramaswami Chettiar v. Mallappa Reddiar (3). Again, under s. 11, Expl. VI, C. P. C., the section relating to res judicata, the result of a suit brought by one creditor bona fide contested may be binding on the transferee and on the general body of creditors. I express no opinion on this. But assuming that when there has been a suit the principle of res judicata applies, it does not by any means follow that the inaction of one creditor, that is to say, his failure to file a suit within six years of his exercising the option, bars the general body of creditors. Under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act "Any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed" may avoid the transaction. An individual right is conferred upon each creditor by this section and the inaction or laches of one cannot deprive the others of their rights. The learned Vakil for the appellant relied on the analogy furnished by Challagundla Varamma v. Madala Gopaladasayya (6), where by reason of the nearest reversioner failing to sue within the time limited to set aside an alienation by a Hindu widow, all the reversioners existing as well as subsequently born were held equally barred. The matters are not in pari materia; special considerations apply in the case of suits by reversioners and the analogy is misleading.

As the Receiver represents all the creditors, granting that the inaction of one may lead to the result contended for, it must be observed that in this case it is not suggested that any particular creditor exercised his option at a time too remote for the suit to be brought. Therefore, though I have dealt with the matter at some length, the question as to the nature of the suit under s. 53, Transfer of Property Act, does not, as I have said, on the facts arise.

I hold that the suit is not barred by limitation.

It is lastly urged that the suit is quite a frivolous one as appears from the previous proceedings that transpired in insolvency, but this is a matter we cannot go into as the suit remains to be tried on the other issues in the case.

The only order as to costs that we propose to make is that they shall abide the event.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree with my learned brother that the plaintiff's suit in this case is not barred by limitation, but with regard to the grounds for that decision, I regret I have to differ from him.

I agree that a creditor's suit under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act is governed by Art. 120 of the Indian Limitation Act; but I think that the starting point for limitation is not the date on which the creditor exercises the option to avoid the transfer, but it is the date on which the circumstances entitling the creditor to have the transfer avoided, first become known to him. The result of holding that the starting point for limitation is the exercise of option by the creditor is that the creditor in that case would be entitled to wait any number of years he pleases before bringing the suit, which would mean that in effect, there would be no period of limitation at all for a suit under s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. Having regard to the spirit and provisions of the Indian Limitation Act which contains also a residuary article for all suits not specifically provided for, I think that we should not construe s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, in such a way as to have the above-mentioned effect unless the language thereof clearly compels us to adopt such a construction.

Section 53 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows:—"Every transfer of immoveable property, made with intent to defraud prior or subsequent transferees thereof for consideration, or co-owners or other persons having an interest in such property, or to defeat or delay the creditors of the transferor, is voidable at the option of any person so defrauded, defeated or delayed". The sole basis, as it appears to me, for the view that the starting point for limitation is the date of the exercise of option by the creditors is the use of the expression "at the option of" in the above section. In my opinion, it is not necessary, nor is it right, to interpret that expression in such a way as to make the exercise of option the starting point. The same expression occurs in ss. 2, cl. (1), 19 and 19 (a) of the Indian Contract Act, there it has been used simply to indicate at whose instance it is that the transaction referred to therein is voidable and has no reference at all, to any question of limitation, for Art. 114 of the Limitation Act provides that the period of limitation for a suit for the rescission of a contract commences from the date when the facts entitling the plaintiff to have the contract rescinded first became known to him. I think that the words "at the option of" which occur in s. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act should also be construed in the same manner and the question whether a suit under that section is barred should be judged solely from a consideration of Art. 120 of the Limitation Act.

Under Art. 120 the time from which the period begins to run is "when the right to sue accrues". I agree with my learned brother that the date of the transfer (alienation) sought to be avoided cannot be the starting point for limitation. If we hold that the date of the transfer is the starting point, then in a case where the creditor comes to know of the transfer only more than six years after the date thereof it would have to be held that the right to sue had not only accrued to him, but had terminated as well before he himself knew anything about the transaction, which would mean that the creditors would have no opportunity of avoiding the transfer at all. It is not, therefore, right to hold that the starting point for limitation is the date of alienation. When once the creditor comes to know of the circumstances which entitle him under s. 53 to avoid the transfer, there can be no further impediment in the way of his bringing the suit and I think the right to sue accrues to him within the meaning of Art. 120 from the date of such knowledge. This view finds support in the judgment of Phillips, J., in Venkateswara Aiyar v. Somasundram Chettiar (2). At page 283*, the learned Judge says "that the cause of action arises on the date when the creditor seeking to set aside the alienation knows that he has been defrauded, defeated or delayed". It is true that it is not specifically stated in Art. 120 that this is the starting point and that only the general expression "when the right to sue accrues" occurs in that Article but it is a residuary Article for all suits not specifically provided for and as such, the language thereof has necessarily to be general. The interpretation to be put on that expression would, to a certain extent, depend on the particular class of cases to which the Article is sought to be applied. As observed by Phillips, J.:—"In all cases of fraud, misconduct, etc., the period of limitation for a suit begins to run from the time when the fraud, misconduct, etc., becomes known (vide Arts. 90, 91, 95, 96, etc.), but no such provision could be inserted in Art. 120, for it is a residuary Article and thus applicable to every variety of suits not otherwise provided for and is not confined to suits based on fraud. If such a suit coming within Art. 120 is based on fraud, the time when the right to sue accrues must, I think, be determined in consonance with the principle governing the other specific suits based on fraud, and that is, that the time when the fraud becomes known, becomes the starting point for limitation." No doubt it is stated by the learned Judge that a suit by a creditor under s. 53 depends upon the exercise of option by him but he states this in order to negative the contention that the right to sue accrues on the date of alienation itself. I think, Krishnan, J., also in the judgment under appeal takes the same view; for he observes thus in the concluding portion of his judgment:—"The Receiver himself puts the cause of action as having arisen on the 31st July 1915 when one Sambiah and others learnt that the suit mortgage-deed was a collusive document; it does not appear that Sambiah knew it earlier. Taking this view it seems to me that the suit is not barred by limitation". It is true that the learned Judge makes reference in an earlier portion of his judgment to the exercise of option by the creditor or by the Receiver; but the context shows that he is there considering the question as to whether each of the creditors has got a separate right of suit under s. 53 or whether if one creditor is barred by limitation from bringing the suit the rest are also barred; and I think that he did not intend to lay down that the exercise of option is the starting point for limitation. The decision in In re Maddever; Three Towns Banking Co. v. Maddever (5) does not in my view help us in deciding the present question. That case merely decides that delay on the part of the creditors to take proceedings even after full knowledge of the facts is immaterial provided the delay is not such as to create a statutory bar.

It is true as pointed out by my learned brother that there would be some anomaly if a creditor is allowed to set up in a suit under O. XXI, r. 63 of the C. P. C., the fraudulent nature of the transfer as against the claimant even though he may be barred by limitation from bringing a suit under s. 53 to have the transfer avoided, but it appears to me that the anomaly would still exist even if we adopt the "option theory", for supposing the creditor exercises the option on a particular date and keeps quiet for more than six years without bringing a suit under s. 53, I take it that in proceedings under O. XXI, r. 63, such creditor may still set up the fraudulent nature of the transfer as against the claimant. This consideration, therefore, does not, in my view give us any help in solving the present question.

For the reasons above stated, I am of opinion that the starting point for limitation is the date on which the circumstances entitling the creditor to have the transfer avoided first become known to him. In view of the fact that a few of the creditors in this case knew of the fraudulent character of the alienation in 1909, i.e., more than six years before the suit, it becomes necessary to consider whether the creditors' right of suit under s. 53 is an individual right which each individual creditor has or whether it is only a representative right in the sense that if one creditor is barred by limitation from bringing the suit, the others are also barred. I agree with my learned brother in thinking that the right of suit under s. 53 is an individual right which each creditor has. It is true that, if a creditor obtains a decree in a suit under s. 53, that decree accrues to the benefit of the other creditors as well, but I think s. 53 confers on each of the creditors the right of bringing a suit on his own behalf. As the Receiver presents the whole body of the creditors and as some at least of the creditors knew that the suit mortgage-deed was a collusive document only within six years of the suit, I hold the suit by the Receiver is not barred by limitation.

In the result I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. I agree with him as regards the costs also.

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

A plot of land upon which there were a certain number of fruit-trees was leased to the defendants who were to enjoy the land by erecting houses on it and planting, if they so liked, other fruit-trees. It was provided that the lease should continue to the defendants' heirs, but that if, at any time the lessor should require the land he would give notice to the lessees who would give up the land on receipt of the value of fruit-trees, etc.

Held, (1) that the lease was one for residential and not for horticultural or agricultural purposes and was, therefore, governed by the Transfer of Property Act and not by the Bengal Tenancy Act, [p. 412, col. 1.]

(2) that the rights of the parties must be governed on a construction of the lease itself and that the conduct of the parties after the lease had been entered into could not be taken into consideration, [ibid]

(3) that the land was to be enjoyed by the defendants from generation to generation so long as the landlord did not require it for his own purposes, but that if he so required it, he had the right to re-enter after giving notice and paying compensation in accordance with the terms of the lease. ### JUDGMENT.

Duval, J.—In this case the plaintiff brought a suit in ejectment and for arrears of rent and damages in respect of a piece of land, said to measure 1 bigha, 17 cottas, which was leased to the defendants by a pottah dated the 27th November 1889. The plaintiff's case was that he served on the defendants a notice to quit and determined the lease. The first Court found that the defendants' tenancy was a tenancy under the Bengal Tenancy Act, that notice was not duly served under that Act and that the defendants could not be ejected except under the provisions of s. 25, Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge on appeal confirmed this order and against his order the present appeal is brought.

Now the main point in this appeal is whether on the construction of the pottah this tenure is one which comes under the Bengal Tenancy Act at all or is a tenancy which comes under the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act. It appears that on the land in suit at the time of the lease there were only a certain number of fruit-trees and by the lease the defendants were to enjoy the land by erecting houses on it and planting, if they so liked, other fruit-trees. The provision was that the lease should continue to the defendants' heirs; but there is a further provision that if at any time the lessor should require the land he would give notice to the lessees who would, therefore, give up the land on receipt of the value of the fruit-trees, etc. It is argued on behalf of the appellant that by the nature of the premises and terms of the lease the parties are governed by the Transfer of Property Act and not by the Bengal Tenancy Act and the lease can, therefore, be terminated on the terms let out in the pottah. For the respondent it is argued that the lease is one governed by the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the defendants have acquired a right of occupancy and cannot be ejected. It is clear that the land is not let out for purposes of cultivation. It was let out for residential purposes with the right to take fruit from the trees on the land and to plant other fruit-trees and take their fruits. The pottah is described as a basabati pottah, i. e., a pottah for residential purposes. Now the mere fact that there is a right to plant trees or pluck the fruits of trees would not by itself convert a pottah granted for residential purposes into a horticultural lease carrying the same rights as an agricultural lease and so bring it under the Bengal Tenancy Act. In this connection I would refer to the case of Hedayet Ali v. Kalanand Singh (1) where it was observed that if a lease is for the purpose of gathering fruits from the trees on the land, the lease is not for horticultural purposes. Again in the unreported case of Raj Kumar Nali v. Mohesh Chandra Guha (2) where it was found that after the creation of a lease the defendants possessed the land by enjoying fruits of the trees and that none of the land was under any sort of cultivation and it was held that it could not be said that such land was really let out as subject to the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act. I would also refer to the case of Sashi Bala Debi v. Amola Debi (3) where it was observed that the whole area of a residential holding cannot, ordinarily, be covered with buildings and the fact that the surplus land is planted with fruit bearing trees does not alter the character of holding; and the case was governed by the Transfer of Property Act. On the other hand it is argued on behalf of the defendants that the growing of fruit trees is a horticultural purpose and so the Bengal Tenancy Act applies. Following the rulings set out above we cannot agree to the respondent's proposition of law on the facts of this case. Lastly it is urged that the lease anyhow is a permanent one owing to the covenant in it that the land will be enjoyed down to sons and grandsons in succession and that the covenant as to the right of re-entry on compensation is a purely personal covenant between the original lessor and the original lessee; and it is argued that as the original lessor is dead and the present plaintiff is only an assignee from him that covenant being a personal one is no longer enforceable. We see no force in this contention. It appears to us that the purpose of the lease was clearly one for residential purposes. Incidentally there was the right to plant trees and take fruits but there was nothing agricultural about the land at all. As to the terms, it is clear to us that it was given to be enjoyed from generation to generation so long as the landlord did not require it for his own purposes. He had then according to the terms of the document, the right to re-enter on giving certain compensation. In this view we must hold that the Bengal Tenancy Act does not apply but that the Transfer of Property Act applies. It was also urged that by their conduct the parties have treated the lease as a permanent one. In a matter of this character, rights as between the parties must be determined on a construction of the lease and we have nothing to do with the conduct of the parties after the lease has once been entered into. In view of these findings it has next to be determined whether the lease has been duly determined by notice. The notice appears to be one served by registered post and is not a notice under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The lower Courts have not considered whether such notice is sufficient under the Transfer of Property Act or is one given in accordance with the terms of the lease. It is necessary, therefore, to remand the case to the lower Appellate Court to come to a finding as to whether in the present suit notice has been duly served or not in accordance with the terms of the lease.

The result is that this appeal is allowed with costs of this Court, the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside and the case remanded to that Court to be dealt with in the manner indicated above. Other costs will abide the result.

Suhrawardy, J.—I agree.

Civil Courts have jurisdiction in all cases in which they would have had jurisdiction prior to the passing of the Madras Estates Land Act, except in so far as jurisdiction is expressly or by necessary implication taken away by the provisions of s. 189 of the Act. [p. 413, col. 2.]

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to entertain a suit by a ryot to set aside a sale of his holding held under the provisions of Ch. VI of the Madras Estates Land Act. The fact that an unsuccessful application had been made by the ryot under s. 131 of the Act to set aside the sale makes no difference. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.

Viswanatha Sastri, J.—Plaintiff is the appellant. He sued to set aside a sale held under the provisions of Ch. VI of the Estates Land Act and for a permanent injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with his enjoyment, on the following grounds:—(1) that the sale was held without due notice to him; (2) that there was no publication and (3) that the price was grossly inadequate. The first Court held on all these points in favour of the plaintiff, and passed a decree as prayed for. Defendants appealed, and the Appellate Court held that a Civil Court had no jurisdiction to entertain such a suit and allowed the appeal. That such a suit would lie has been held by a Full Bench of this Court in Rajah of Ramnad v. Venkataramaiyer (1). The Vakil for the respondents contended that this ruling would not apply because there was an application to set aside the sale under s. 131 of the Act, and that O. XXI, r. 92 (1) of the C. P. C. barred the suit. This rule runs as follows:—“Where no application is made under r. 89, r. 90 or r. 91 or where such application is made and disallowed, the Court shall make an order confirming the sale, and thereupon the sale shall become absolute.” I may here state that r. 89 is similar to s. 131 of the Estates Land Act, and it was represented that the applications put in by plaintiff under this section were dismissed, because the proper sum was not deposited. Section 192 of the Estates Land Act relates to the application of the C. P. C. to “suits, appeals and other proceedings under the Act” and it lays down that “subject to the other provisions of this Act and subject to the following modifications and additions, the provisions of the C. P. C. shall apply to all suits, appeals and other proceedings under this Act so far as they are not inconsistent therewith.” And in cl. (a) it is stated that s. 310-A (corresponding to r. 89 of O. XXI) shall not apply. Now if r. 89 of O. XXI, of the C. P. C., does not apply to proceedings under the Estates Land Act, I fail to see how r. 92 (1) of O. XXI, can be made applicable simply on the ground that s. 131 of the Estates Land Act is similar to r. 89 of O. XXI. As observed in the Full Bench case above referred to, the jurisdiction of Civil Courts is taken away only in cases referred to in s. 189 of the Estates Land Act and it was not even suggested that there is anything in this section to bar the suit out of which this second appeal arises.

I would, therefore, allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court direct that that Court do re-hear the appeal. Appellant will get his costs in this Court and costs in the lower Appellate Court will abide and follow the result. Appellant will get a refund of the Court-fee paid on the memorandum of appeal.

Odgers, J.—I agree. It was stated in the referring judgment in Rajah of Ramnad v. Venkataramaiyer (1) as well-settled that the Civil Courts have jurisdiction in all cases in which they would have had jurisdiction prior to the Act except in so far as such jurisdiction is expressly or by necessary implication taken away by the provisions of s. 189 of the Estates Land Act. The question put before the Full Bench was quite general in its terms. It is admitted that the only distinction between this case and that dealt with by the Full Bench is that two unsuccessful applications were made by the ryot under s. 131. I cannot see that this makes the slightest difference in principle and a suit by a ryot who says that his property has been improperly sold is expressly said by the Full Bench to be outside the restrictive provisions of the

Where after the redemption of a mortgage the mortgagee retains possession of the mortgaged property and, after his death, his widow comes to occupy the said property to the exclusion of the rightful heirs of her husband as well as the mortgagor, the possession of the widow cannot be referred to a lawful origin and is adverse to the mortgagor and, in case it extends beyond twelve years, will ripen into ownership. [p. 115, col. 2.]

Letters Patent Appeal against a judgment of Mr. Justice Neave, dated the 28th of April 1924, in S. A. No. 1702 of 1922, printed as 85 Ind. Cas. 740, affirming the decree of the District Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 13th October 1922.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and L. M. Banerji, for the Appellant.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—After hearing the arguments in this case we have come to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed, the decision of the Judge of this Court reversed and the decree of the first Appellate Court restored.

The suit as framed was a suit for redemption in which the defendant was one Musammat Ram Kuer who is now before us as the appellant.

It appears that on the 22nd of November 1884 one Pahar Singh executed a mortgage in favour of four persons one of whom was Ram Prasad. The amount of the mortgage money was Rs. 1,000 and admittedly Ram Prasad was interested in this money to the extent of one-fifth only.

On the 17th of October 1890 Pahar Singh the mortgagor sold some other property of his to three of the mortgagees who left with them a sum of Rs. 938 to discharge the mortgage of 1884. It has been found and has not been questioned that Rs. 938 represented the full amount of the mortgage debt at the time this transaction took place.

It is further proved that Ram Prasad, who as we have said was interested to the extent of 1/5th of this mortgage, received his proportionate share of this money. A further fact which is established by the evidence on the record is that when this money was paid in pursuance of the contract made on 17th of October 1890 the mortgage-deed which was executed on the 22nd of November 1884 was returned to the mortgagor Pahar Singh.

After this transaction had taken place it seems that Pahar Singh in the year 1891 made a mortgage of this property which had been so released to certain other persons by way of conditional sale. In the year 1894 these mortgagees got a decree for foreclosure, the property was brought to sale in the year 1896 and after the sale had taken place there was a suit for pre-emption which ended in the property being transferred to the plaintiffs in the present suit. They got a pre-emption decree on the 26th of April 1898.

It appears that notwithstanding the payment of the mortgage debt in the year 1890 the portion of the mortgaged property in which Ram Prasad was interested remained in possession of Ram Prasad and after Ram Prasad's death, which it seems took place in or about the year 1892, this property came into the possession of his widow Musammat Ram Kuer who is the appellant before us.

The plaintiffs whose title as we have said dates back to 1898, brought this suit in the year 1920 against Musammat Ram Kuer. The position which they took up in the case was that the mortgage of the year 1884 was still subsisting, that the defendant Musammat Ram Kuer was in the position of a mortgagee and that they were entitled to redeem the property as purchasers of the equity of redemption. A number of defences were raised. The only one with which we are concerned was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed on the case so brought. The case put forward by Musammat Ram Kuer was that there was no mortgage in existence and that she had been in adverse possession of this property for more than twelve years.

The Court of first instance dismissed the suit and gave effect to the plea of adverse possession raised by the lady and this decree was affirmed in appeal by the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri. There was a second appeal to this Court and the learned Judge has taken the view that the mortgage was still in existence, that Musammam Ram Kuer could not be heard to set up any adverse title to the property and that consequently the plaintiffs were entitled to have a decree for redemption.

Before us it has been argued that this view taken by the learned Judge of this Court is erroneous. We are of opinion that the learned Judge fell into error in dealing with this question of adverse possession.

To go back to the beginning of things it is clear that the original mortgagor of the property in the year 1884 was Pahar Singh. It is further quite clear that when Pahar Singh in the year 1890 sold some other property to some of the mortgagees and arranged for the discharge of the mortgage debt that after the payment of this money the person who was entitled to immediate possession of the property mortgaged in 1884 was Pahar Singh and no one else. It is quite clear that the other three mortgagees who had entered into the transaction of sale with Pahar Singh in 1890 had no right whatever to this mortgaged property—undoubtedly the mortgaged property was to return to Pahar Singh.

Ram Prasad, as we have said, died some time after the year 1890. It is an admitted fact that Ram Prasad left sons who are still in existence and who, according to the Hindu Law, were his heirs and entitled to possession of all his property. On the other hand, it is equally clear that Musammam Ram Kuer the widow of Ram Prasad had in the presence of her sons no right whatever to any property belonging to her husband. It is admitted, however, that ever since the death of Ram Prasad this lady has been in possession to the exclusion of her sons and all other persons, and that being so, it is difficult to see how her plea of adverse possession of this property can be repelled.

We do not agree with the view which was taken by the learned Judge of this Court. He seems to have been of opinion that the widow of Ram Prasad could not hold adversely to the mortgagor Pahar Singh or his representatives. He thought that the widow's possession might be adverse to her own sons but he held that any right she had would not be a right adverse to Pahar Singh. In our opinion this is not so, for at the time she entered into possession the person who was entitled to immediate possession of this property was, as we have said, Pahar Singh himself.

While it may be that possession which can be referred to a lawful origin is not to be deemed to be adverse, it is quite clear in the present case that the possession of the widow Musammam Ram Kuer never had any rightful origin. On all hands it must be admitted that she took possession as a trespasser. It cannot, therefore, be said that her possession can be referred back to the possession which her husband originally acquired in his capacity as mortgagee. Her possession at once became adverse as against the person who was then entitled to immediate possession, namely, Pahar Singh. The plaintiffs in the present suit derived their title from Pahar Singh and are in the same position as he would have been had he been alive now. In other words, having been entitled to immediate possession of property and having failed to bring their suit within twelve years from the date on which they became so entitled their title to the property has been lost.

We hold, therefore, that the rights of this litigation are with Musammam Ram Kuer, the defendant-appellant, and for the reasons just given we set aside the decree of the learned Judge of this Court and restore the decree of the first Appellate Court. The appellant is entitled to all her costs in this Court including fees on the higher scale.

For deciding the question of the exemption of the liability of the house of an insolvent to be sold for debts, the Court must decide whether the insolvent's chief means of livelihood is agriculture. It is not enough that he be an agriculturist, or that he be a trader. The point is, which profession forms his chief means of livelihood.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Kistna at Masulipatam, dated the 15th August 1923, in I. A. No. 4 of 1923, in I. P. No. 136 of 1920 (Official Receiver's file).

FACTS.—An insolvent applied before the Official Receiver for exempting his house from liability from being sold to discharge his debts on the ground that he was an agriculturist.

Under s. 68, Provincial Insolvency Act, the creditors applied to the Court to set aside the order alleging that the insolvent was also carrying on a trade and was not entitled to the exemption claimed. The Court relying on the evidence of the insolvent and his witnesses who deposed that he lived by ... and trade and following *Surangini Deby v. Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepur, dated the 19th January 1925.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Pohla, son of Gujar Singh, a Jat of village Dina in Tehsil Moga, has been sentenced to death by the Sessions Judge of Ferozepur for the murder of Kapur Singh (or Kapura) of the same village. The story disclosed by the prosecution evidence is as follows:—Kapura and his brother, Phumman, (witness) owned a field, half of which was mortgaged to Musammatt Punjabo, a creditor, and cultivated for Musammatt Punjabo by Gujar Singh, father of Pohla and Subha. There was a dispute over the cultivation of this field between Kapura and his brother on one side and Gujar Singh on the other and a panchayat was held on or about the 17th July 1924 to settle the matter. At this panchayat Kapura and Gujar quarrelled. Gujar's nephew Phumman intervened on his uncle's behalf and pulled Kapura's beard. The people present separated the two men, but Gujar declared that he would be revenged and would "drink Kapura's blood." Pohla was not present when this happened.On the 22nd of July at 6 30 A. M. Phumman, brother of Kapura, reported at Nihal Singhwala Police Station five kos from Dina, that Pohla and Subha the sons of Gujar, together with Phumman, Gujar's nephew, had waylaid Kapura on his way home from his field at sunset on the previous evening and beaten him to death with dangs. The murder he said, had been seen by Pritam Singh, Puran Singh and the son of KeharSingh and one Attar Singh had seen the accused going armed with dangs towards the place of the murder. Phumman added that he had heard of this from one Ralla (who had himself heard the story from Pritam Singh) when he (Phumman) had returned to the village later the same evening. He had gone to the place and found his brother dead, bleeding at his mouth and nose and with his hands and feet bound with his turban. The Police went to Dina on the same day (22nd). The statements of witnesses were not, however, recorded until the 23rd, on which day also a post mortem examination was made by the Assistant Surgeon at Moga. From this examination it appeared that Kapura's death was due to strangulation probably effected by hands. There were twelve contusions and swellings on Kapura's legs, chest, back, arms, head and neck.

The Police found no evidence against Phumman accused. Subha was absconding and Pohla was tried alone.

Besides the evidence of the Assistant Surgeon, Rai Bahadur Dr. Mathra Das (P. W. No. 1) and the necessary formal testimony, there is evidence as to the motive (the ill-feeling engendered by the quarrel in the panchayat) and the evidence of no less than nine witnesses who profess to have seen Pohla and Subha assaulting the deceased Kapura. Their story is that from various points of view they saw Subha striking Kapura with dang while Pohla was seated on or beside Kapura, pommelling or beating Kapura with his fists or squeezing his neck. According to one witness Ganda (P. W. No. 15) it was Subha who was throttling Kapura while Pohla used a dang.Pohla admitted that there had been a quarrel in the panchayat (at which he himself had not been present). He declared he had no enmity with the deceased, but Kehar Singh, Santu, and Chanan (eye-witnesses) who were interested in a canal with the deceased were at enmity with him. Karela, father of Kehar Singh, and Rullia, father of Santu, had once beaten him and Gujar, his father, and he and Gujar had complained to the Sufedposh. At the time of the murder he was ploughing land on the other side of the village. He produced one witness to prove his alibi.

The truth of the evidence as to motive is not seriously questioned by Dr. Nand Lal who appears for the appellant. It is to be remembered that Pohla took no part in the squabble at the panchayat. The squabble itself was not such as would at first sight appear to be a sufficient motive for the murder of Kapura by Gujar's sons, but in this country and among Jats there is no doubt that murders are actually committed from motives of pride to avenge what appear to be comparatively harmless insults. Moreover the real enmity was over the possession of land, such as is certainly a common origin of murder. There is no reason to doubt that Kapura was throttled to death. It is, however, unfortunate that there is no evidence as to the probable manner in which the various contusions and marks found on the deceased other than those of strangulation were caused.

The defence evidence is of small value. It may, however, be remarked that it discountenances the theory, now advanced by appellant's Counsel, that the murder really took place at night and was not discovered until the following morning. If this theory were true, the story of the eye-witnesses could not, of course, be believed.

The only matter for consideration is whether the evidence of the eye-witnesses or of any of them is to be believed. We may here note that the Assessors' verdict was not a satisfactory one. Virtually, after some vacillation and an expression of opinion that Pohla "participated in the attack," they acquitted Pohla of murder on the grounds, apparently, that there was an unpremeditated assault by Subha absconder with a dang and that they did not believe that it was Pohla who throttled Kapura.

A careful scrutiny of the evidence and the arguments of Mr. Des Raj Sawhney who appears for the Crown have left us unconvinced that the actual murder was really seen by any of the eye-witnesses. Several considerations have influenced us in arriving at our conclusion.

The evidence has been fully described in the Sessions Judge's judgment and we do not propose to repeat a description here, but will confine our remarks to the points which appear to us to justify doubts as to the truth of the story told by the eye-witnesses.

According to Phumman, who made the First Report, he was informed of the murder by Ralla, a Muhammadan, (P. W. No. 19) who got the news from one Indar Singh. This Indar Singh is not produced. The fact by itself would be of small consequence but for the astonishing fact that, though so many people saw what happened and mingled immediately after the murder with the murderers and the villagers, no one said a word about it to any one who had not seen it except Pritam (P. W. No. 14), a child of 10, who told his uncle Indar Singh. It is this Indar Singh who is said to have informed Ralla, the Muhammadan. Now Indar Singh's evidence as to when and in what manner the child informed him would have been of considerable importance, and its absence adds to the feeling of uncertainty provoked by the curious silence of the many eye-witnesses. Pritam says that he told Indar Singh as soon as he returned to the village, i. e., about sunset time, but it was not until night time that there was an outcry in the village. Phumman did not verify the news by questioning the eye-witnesses before going to the thana. When he made his report there he accused Phumman Singh as well as Pohla and Subha. In his evidence before the Committing Magistrate he declared that Rulla had named Phumman as one of the culprits. But at the trial he admitted that he included Phumman's name on no evidence, but merely on conjectures. According to the evidence Pritam (aged 10), Puran (aged 16) and Chanchal (aged 13) saw the assault together. But none of these except Pritam the youngest spoke a word about it to any one until the second day of the investigation, the first having been occupied in "looking for witnesses" (see evidence of Sub-Inspector Muhammad Sharif, P. W. No. 21). Some witnesses had, however, been named in the First Information Report.

We come now to examine the story told by the supposed eye-witnesses.

Kapura was a stout man of 44. His assailants were only two. The evidence is that Kapura kept crying out loud enough to be heard 200 karams away and the actual words ("Pohla and Subha, don't beat me") were heard 80 or 100 karams away. There were very many people in the fields all round, but no one went to Kapura's help. Two men Ganda Singh (P. W. No. 15) and Vir Singh (P. W. No. 16), approached, so they say, to within 20 karams of where the assault was going on. They did not interfere. All the eye-witnesses say they saw Pohla and Subha, either leaving Kapura after the beating or going to the village together immediately afterwards. None, however, went to see if Kapura was alive or dead. None except the child Pritam mentioned anything to any one until the 23rd July. It is certain that Kapura's hands and feet were found tied up with his turban when his body was first seen by Phumman. No witness mentions that Kapura's hands and feet were tied. We find it difficult to believe that any witness who really saw the murder being accomplished could possibly have failed to notice that Kapura was bound hand and foot.

There is a remarkable discrepancy in the evidence of Ganda Singh (P. W. No. 15) and Vir Singh (P. W. No. 16) whose testimony would otherwise have carried some weight. Both knew Pohla and Subha and both were standing, so they say, close to the place of the assault. But while Ganda says that Pohla was using the dang while Subha was pressing Kapura's neck and pulling his beard, Vir Singh declares the exact opposite. This discrepancy, as the learned Sessions Judge points out, does not necessarily absolve either accused; but it adds to the doubt in our minds both as to whether the alleged eye-witnesses really saw any assault and as to whether if they did see an assault this assault was the one in which Kapura was killed. Here we may refer to a discrepancy between the evidence given by Chanan (P. W. No. 4) and his statement made to the Police. He told the Police that he saw Pohla and Subha "scuffling with Kapura in Bishan Singh's field." At the trial he altered this so as to make his evidence confirm with that of others and declared that Pohla was seated on Kapura and Subha was beating him. According to most of the witnesses the accused after assault replaced their bundles of grass upon their heads and went off to the village. Ganda Singh says "they ran away." There is a curious passing reference in the evidence of Pritam Singh (P. W. No. 14) to a second beating in his examination-in-chief, where he states that he did not see accused beating Kapura a "second time." This may be of no importance, but, in our opinion, suggests that it was known or guessed that the murder took place after the scuffle at sunset.

We have given due consideration to the arguments addressed to us by Mr. Des Raj Sawhney who points out the absence of any motive on the part of the witnesses to charge the accused falsely. We admit that there is force in this argument. But we are unable to rid our minds of the impression of doubt left upon us by the evidence as a whole. We are not convinced that the murder was seen by any of the witnesses. It is upon the direct evidence of the eye-witnesses that the conviction depends and finding ourselves unable to accept and act upon this evidence we accept this appeal and acquit Pohla.

Application to revise the judgment of the Sessions Judge, Hyderabad Sind, dated the 9th April 1925.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Applicant.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Kishanchand and three other accused persons, namely, Dharamdas, Isarsing and Urs have been tried together on a charge of conspiracy to cheat under s. 120 B read with s. 420, Indian Penal Code, and have been convicted and sentenced to twelve months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000 each by the City Magistrate of Hyderabad. The appeals filed by them before the Sessions Judge of Hyderabad have failed. The revision applications filed by the three accused Dharamdas, Isarsing and Urs have been summarily dismissed. The application of Kishanchand has now come up before us for hearing.

The facts which led to the trial of the four accused briefly stated are that in June 1924 one Nebhraj who is said to have been one of the gang of cheats met the complainant Partabrai at a certain place of resort for the public and considering him to be credulous enough to fall into their trap introduced his conspirator Isarsing to the complainant representing Isarsing to be the faithless clerk of a wealthy and extravagant Hindu Sethia who had helped Nebhraj to win Rs. 3,000 from his Sethia by playing at cards and that he would help the complainant in the same way on payment of a handsome commission. The process of playing with a specially arranged pack of 36 cards was explained to him and he was taken to his Sethia who was no other man than their co-conspirator Urs. The first day's operation resulted in Partabrai winning Rs. 4,500. The Sethia, however, would not part with the money on the pretext that Partabrai had brought no money with him and in the event of his losing he would have paid nothing. This made Partabrai to take Rs. 2,000 on a subsequent day to enable him to secure his previous day's earning and to make more money. The result, however, was disastrous and not only did he lose his previous day's gains and the money he took with himself but a further sum of Rs. 300. He apprised his brother Chellaram of what had happened who suspected foul play and put himself in touch with the Police. Partabrai subsequently pretended to fall in with the views of Isarsing to join in the conspiracy and by inducing other victims to recoup himself of his loss. He introduced one Kishanchand a friend of his who after being initiated in the process of manipulating the special pack of cards took with himself Rs. 5,000 to play with the wealthy master of Isarsing who on this occasion was personated by the accused Dharamdas in place of the accused Urs. The Police who kept themselves in touch with what was being done were up on the scene when Sobhraj was about to part with Rs. 4,980 having lost that amount. The applicant appears not to have taken any part either in luring Partabrai or his friend Sobhraj to their den or to have been in any way implicated in the two affairs.

Subsequent investigation led the Police to rope in the applicant as a co-conspirator. Nebhraj has not been run in as his services were required by the Police in bringing to book the offenders.

The case of the other accused presents no difficulty. They were all concerned in attempts to cheat Sobhraj and whether there was a conspiracy to cheat other persons besides Sobhraj or not, the evidence of the conspiracy to cheat him is conclusive on that point. The case of the applicant however stands on a different footing.

It would be convenient to re-produce the charge framed against the accused and which is as follows:

"That you between September 1920 and August 1924 at Hyderabad (and other places in Sind) did agree with one another (and other persons unknown) to do or cause to be done an illegal act to wit the commission of cheating by deceiving persons by inducing them to play with cards dice and by pretending to double currency-notes and thereby to induce them to deliver money and currency-notes to you. You were thus partners to a criminal conspiracy and in pursuance of that said conspiracy you have done the following acts.

1. In October 1920 you (Dharamdas and Urs) induced Shewaram to part with 9 notes of Rs. 100 each on the pretence of doubling them.

2. You Dharamdas and Kishanchand in company with another person unknown induced in similar manner Jethomal to deliver to you notes of Rs. 500 in October 1923 on the same pretext.

3. You Isarsing on 26th or 27th June 1924 induced Partabrai to play with particular cards with your pretended master Urs in a particular manner suggesting that he, i. e., Partabrai was only to win. You taught him the trick of the play and made him win Rs. 4,500 which were never paid to him. You Isarsing and Urs dishonestly induced Partabrai to bring money to take his gains and thus dishonestly induced him to part with Rs. 2,000 which you took away.

4. You Isarsing and Dharamdas in the above related manner on 31st July 1924 or 1st August 1924 induced Sobhraj to play and make an attempt of making him deliver to you Rs. 4,980 the payment being interrupted by the arrival of the Police.

5. You Dharamdas along with Bava Subhlal (since deceased) induced Chellaram Pleader to play with you loaded dice and dishonestly induced him to part with Rs. 1,600 on Thadri holidays in September 1923. And thereby committed an offence punishable under s. 120-B read with s. 420, Indian Penal Code and within my cognizance. I hereby direct that you be tried by me on the said charge".

Several objections have been raised by the learned Pleader for the applicant as to the legality of the charge framed against the accused. They are based on a misconception of what the charge is and are due to the failure to keep in view the distinction between the charge and the evidence adduced in proof of the charge.

The gist of the offence of criminal conspiracy as defined in s. 120-A, Indian Penal Code, which is by itself punishable as a substantive offence is the very agreement between the co-conspirators to do or cause to be done an illegal act or a legal act by illegal means subject however to the proviso that where the agreement is not an agreement to commit an offence the agreement does not amount to a conspiracy unless it is followed up by an act done by one or more persons in pursuance of such agreement.

The case of the prosecution as disclosed by the charge in effect was that at one time or the other between the years 1920 and 1924 there was an agreement between the four accused to cheat such members of the public as they could defraud by deceitful means inter alia by playing with a specially arranged pack of cards loaded dice or by pretending to double currency-notes for them.

As so stated there was nothing wrong about the charge. It was a charge in respect of but one agreement which afforded the Crown one single cause of action to try all the accused jointly for one single offence, namely, the offence of cheating the public within the meaning of ss. 233 and 239, Cr. P. C. It was also immaterial if all the four had concocted the scheme of the charge or that all of them should have originated it. It was sufficient if it originated with some of them and others had subsequently joined the original conspirators. [R. v. Murphy (1).]

It was equally open to the Crown to prove the conspiracy by direct evidence which as observed by Earl, J., in R. v. Duffield (2) is hardly available in such cases or by proof of circumstances from which the Court may presume the conspiracy R. v. Parsons (3), R. v. Murphy (1), Emperor v. Annappa Bharamganda (4) Birenara Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (5), and Jumo Allarakchio v. Emperor (6). In the present case the Crown relied on certain criminal acts of the accused said to have been done in pursuance of the conspiracy. The fact that such criminal acts were in themselves substantive offences again cast no obligation on the Crown to prosecute the individual offenders for such specific offences or deprive the Crown of its right to proceed against all of them for conspiracy pure and simple.

The plea that where the only evidence given in proof of the conspiracy is the evidence of abetment of an act which is in itself an offence is equally untenable. As pointed out by Pratt, J. C. in Udhasing v. Emperor (7) the words "Where an express provision has been made in the Code for the punishment of such a conspiracy" appearing in s. 120-B, Indian Penal Code, do not mean that where there is proof of an abetment of an offence the charge should be for such abetment and that it is optional for the Crown to proceed for abetment of the offence committed in pursuance of conspiracy or of the offence of conspiracy.

The inclusion in the charge of certain specific offences relied on by the prosecution in proof of the substantive offence of cheating again had not the effect of rendering the charge illegal as being one in respect of the different offences specified therein. The recital of the specific offences was at most a surplusage. Though it is not uncommon to set out in the charge overt acts by which the object of the conspiracy is sought to be attained recital of such acts was not essential in the present case. Defrauding the public by deceitful means is an offence and the allegation of the charge of such object without specifying the persons defrauded was sufficient to maintain a charge of conspiracy R. v. De Berenger (8), and R. v. Gurney (9), Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. IX note to para. 1401.

Though the several technical objections raised on behalf of the applicant have failed we are not satisfied that the evidence relied on by the prosecution is sufficient to maintain the conviction against the applicant. The first circumstantial piece of evidence relied on by the Crown is the deceit practised on one Shewaram to part with currency-notes of Rs. 900 on the false pretence of doubling them. The only accused concerned in it were Dharamdas and Urs.

The second act relied on is that in September 1923 three years later when again the accused Dharamdas in company not of the applicant or any of the other accused persons but of one Bawa Sukhlal since deceased cheated one Chellaram Pleader by dishonestly inducing him to part with Rs. 1,000 by playing with loaded dice.

There is no evidence in either of these two cases which could inculcate the applicant as having taken any part in them or which would show that the deceit was perpetrated in pursuance of a common agreement to which the applicant was a party.

The third act is the only one in which the applicant is said to have been directly concerned. It is said that in October 1923 the applicant the accused Dharamdas and an unknown person cheated one Jethmal Pleader of currency-notes of Rs. 500 on the pretext of doubling them. The accused Issarsing and Urs again appear to have taken no part in this deal.

The fourth and fifth acts of cheating Partabrai in June 1924 and of attempting to cheat Sobhraj in August 1924 which led to the apprehension and the trial of the accused again in no way inculcate the applicant

The only connecting link between the different acts complained of is that the accused Dharamdas is a common factor in all of them. This evidence by itself is not sufficient to warrant our holding that all or at any rate the third act of October 1923 in which the applicant was directly concerned was done in pursuance of one common agreement between all the four accused persons.

The evidence of Dharamdas being a common factor in all the acts complained of is equally consistent with the existence of more than one separate conspiracy and to the third act having been done in pursuance of a separate conspiracy to which Dharamdas and the applicant were parties but the other two accused persons were not parties.

In O'Connell v. Reg. (10) where a Court in an indictment charged several defendants with conspiracy together to do several illegal acts and the Jury found some of the defendants to do one of the acts and guilty of conspiracy with others of the defendants to do another of the acts such finding was held bad as amounting to a finding that one defendant was guilty of two conspiracies though the Court charged only one. In the present case the charge and the only charge for which under the circumstances of the case all the accused could have been jointly tried framed against them was in respect of an agreement to cheat the public generally. And if the evidence is equally consistent with the existence of two separate agreements one in which Dharamdas and the applicant alone were concerned and the other in which Dharamdas and the other two accused were concerned the irresistible inference that all the acts were done in pursuance of one agreement does not arise and the charge as laid cannot be said to be conclusively proved against the applicant. This aspect of the case has escaped the attention of the learned Sessions Judge.

We think under the circumstances the applicant is entitled to the benefit of the

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s 512—Absconder—Evidence recorded in absence Finding as to absconding, whether necessary

Section 512 of the Cr P C requires only that before the Court records the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution it should be proved that the accused person has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, and not that a finding should be recorded to that effect. [p. 423, col 2]

A Magistrate before recording evidence under s. 512, Cr P. C., took the statements of two constables who had searched for the accused and had not been able to find him, and also issued a proclamation against the accused under s. 87 of the Code.

Held, that the requirements of s. 512, Cr P C., had been fulfilled and that evidence had been properly recorded under that section [p. 424, col. 1]

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Ludhiana, dated the 21st April 1925.

Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Appellant.

Mr. Abdul Rashid, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant, Daya Ram, a Jat of Sudhar, in the Ludhiana District, has been sentenced to death for the murder of one Mangal Singh, whose death was caused by numerous incised wounds on the head. The case for the prosecution is briefly as follows:—

On the morning of the 4th February 1922 Mangal Singh got drunk in a drinking bout at the house of a friend named Nigahiya (P. W. No. 4) at Sudhar, and was afterwards brought by Nigahiya and Indar (P. W. No. 15) to the shop of Pala Ram (P. W. No. 7), where he lay down. Shortly afterwards the appellant came to the shop and called out to Mangal Singh. The latter did not reply and the appellant then went into the shop and with a chhavi, the blade of which he had concealed under his arm, he dealt Mangal Singh a number of blows on the head, and neck. The assault was witnessed by Atma Singh (P. W. No. 2) and Pala Ram's uncle Thakar Das (P. W. No. 3) who were sitting at the shop. They raised an outcry, and Thakar Das went and informed Pala Ram, who was at his house at the time. Meanwhile the appellant left Pala Ram's shop and went to the Sath, where several men were sitting, and attacked one of them, named Sucha Singh (P. W. No. 10), with his chhavi, one blow striking Sucha Singh on the arm. Two other men, Sawan Singh (P. W. No. 11) and Sham Singh (P. W. No. 12), managed to seize the chhavi from the appellant, who then ran away and absconded for nearly three years. The murder appears to have been committed in consequence of an altercation which had occurred when Mangal Singh shortly before coming to Pala Ram's shop, met the appellant and asked him whether a camel which the appellant had with him was a stolen one.

We see no reason for rejecting the evidence of Atma Singh and Thakar Das, who have deposed to having witnessed the commission of the murder by the appellant. Mangal Singh was found lying dead in Pala Ram's shop, and Pala Ram's evidence shows that Atma Singh and Thakar Das at once told him and the other people who collected that the appellant had committed the murder.

Thakar Das' deposition is that which he made before the Honorary Magistrate of Raikot in 1922 in the proceedings taken under s. 512 of the Cr. P. C., as he could not be found at the time of the Magisterial enquiry or of the trial in 1925. It is contended for the appellant that the statement made by Thakar Das in those proceedings is inadmissible, because no finding was given in them, that the accused person had absconded and that there was no immediate prospect of arresting him. But the section requires only that before the Court records the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution it should be proved that the accused person has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, and not that a finding should be given to that effect. The Honorary Magistrate in the proceedings of 1922 before he took down the depositions of the witnesses in regard to the murder took the statements of two constables, who had searched for the accused and had not been able to find him. Those statements afforded the proof that was required, and the fact that the Honorary Magistrate issued a proclamation against the appellant under s. 87 of the Cr. P. C. would show that he was satisfied with the proof given. Counsel for the appellant has referred to Wahid v. Empress (1) Ghurbin Bind v. Queen-Empress (2) and Rustam v. Emperor (3). In the first of those cases no evidence had been taken as to the accused person having absconded, and in the second the deposition recorded had not been recorded under s. 512, Cr. P. C., against the absconder, but had been recorded in the ordinary course of proceedings against other persons. Those two cases are, therefore, not in point. In the third case the learned Judges expressed the opinion that the language of s. 512 showed that the Court which records the proceedings must first of all record an order that in its opinion it had been proved that the accused person has absconded and that there is no immediate prospect of arresting him, but a different view on this point was taken by the same Court in Bhagwati v. Emperor (4). In the present case it was proved in the proceedings taken against the appellant under s. 512, Cr. P. C., in 1922 that he had absconded and that there was no immediate prospect of arresting him, and we hold, therefore, that Thakar Das' statement taken in the proceedings under that section was admissible in evidence at the trial.

Besides the direct evidence of Atma Singh and Thakar Das in regard to the murder there are the statements of P. Ws. Nos. 10—13 as to the appellant having come to Sath armed with a chhavi and attacked Sucha Singh. The chhavi was handed over by Sawan Singh (P. W. No. 11) to the Sub-Inspector on his arrival, and was forwarded to the Imperial Serologist who found it to be stained with human blood.

The statement made by Nigahiya before the Committing Magistrate was admitted in evidence under s. 33 of the Evidence Act as he was in the Malerkotla Jail. Objection has been taken to this, but even if Nigahiya's statement is excluded there is other evidence also against the appellant which is ample. Nigahiya's statement was in regard to the altercation which led to the commission of the crime and that altercation is mentioned also by Ishar (P. W. No. 5) and Shera (P. W. No. 6).

The guilt of the appellant who has produced no evidence in his defence, has, in our opinion, been clearly established. We accordingly dismiss the appeal confirming the sentence of death.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against the order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Tatta, who has set aside an order of the Second Class Magistrate, Ketibunder, awarding Rs. 100 as compensation to the accused, for a false and malicious prosecution brought against him by the complainant.

It is stated before us that the accused had no notice of the proceedings which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate held; and that he had no opportunity of presenting his aspect of the case in appeal. Inasmuch as the Sub-Divisional Magistrate set aside the order of compensation, we consider it would have been desirable if notice had been issued to the present applicant, before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate had set aside the order in favour of the accused. It is pointed out, on the other hand that in the case of Ambakkagari Nagi Reddi v. Basappa (1) it was held that no such notice was legally necessary. That is true, but it is desirable in general that before an order of this kind is made, the accused person should have notice of any intended interference with an order of compensation made in his favour. In the present case, however, we have looked into the judgments of the Second Class Magistrate and the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, and we think it unnecessary to interfere in revision.

The application will, therefore, be dismissed.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 411, 457—Stolen property found in house occupied by several persons—Exclusive possession—Offence.

Certain stolen property was found concealed in a dung heap in the courtyard of a house which was owned and occupied by four persons.

Held, that the property could not be said to be in the exclusive possession of any of the occupants of the house and that none of them could, therefore, be convicted of any offence under s. 457 or 411 of the Penal Code. [p. 425, col. 2.]

Petition, for revision of an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Gujranwala at Sialkot, dated the 25th August 1924, affirming that of the Magistrate First Class, Gujranwala, dated the 12th July 1924.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Petitioner.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the night between the 6th-7th of May 1924 a burglary was committed in the house of Mathra Das complainant and some property was stolen. Somehow suspicion fell upon the applicants Qaim Din and Muhammad Din and their brother Sardara. On information being given to the Police it arrived at the house belonging to these three brothers and their father Ghulam Mohammad. Some property was found in a dung heap in the courtyard of the house and some was recovered from kotha No. 3. All the three brothers and the father Ghulam Mohammad were prosecuted. The case against Sardara being doubtful he was given the benefit of the doubt and was acquitted by the Magistrate. The petitioners were convicted under s. 457 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment each. Ghulam Mohammad was found guilty under s. 414 of the Indian Penal Code and was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. On appeal the learned Additional Sessions Judge found the case against Ghulam Mohammad also to be doubtful and acquitted him. He, however, upheld the convictions of the applicants and maintained their sentences. They have come up in revision to this Court.

The following facts have been established by the evidence for the prosecution in this case:—

(1) That some of the stolen property was identified by Mathra Das complainant as his property. The petitioners did not claim the articles recovered as their property.

(2) That some of the stolen property was found in the dung heap situated in the courtyard of the house and some other property was recovered from kotha No. 3. If this finding had stood alone the Courts below would not have convicted the petitioners, because the house admittedly belonged to all the four persons, namely, the three brothers and the father, jointly, and it could not be said with certainty as to who was in exclusive possession of the stolen articles. There was, however, some evidence which went to show that the petitioners were seen soon after the theft carrying away some trunks, etc. This evidence in the opinion of the Courts below connected the petitioners with the stolen property.

The trunks and the bags recovered from the house were not, however, identified by the witnesses as being those which they had seen the petitioners carrying away. This evidence, therefore, falls short of bringing home to the petitioners the theft of the stolen articles. The circumstances no doubt raise a great suspicion against the petitioners and make it highly probable that the things were stolen by them; but it cannot be said to be conclusive. Under these circumstances, in my opinion, the Courts below were not justified in holding that the case has been conclusively proved against the petitioners. In any event there is some room for doubt and the petitioners must be given the benefit of that doubt.

I accordingly accept the petition for revision, set aside the convictions and sentences of the petitioners and order that they be forthwith released. Qaim Din petitioner is on bail. He shall be discharged from his bail-bond.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 453 OF 1925.

August 31, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal.

Pandit RAM SARUP—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

U. P. Municipalities Act (II of 1916), ss. 118, 178, 183, 186, 307—Sanction to erect chabutra—Notice prohibiting stone brackets to support chabutra, disregard of—Offence

Where a sanction to erect a chabutra does not limit the discretion of the builder to build it in any particular form, it is open to him to erect stone brackets for supporting the new chabutra and his refusal to stop the erection of the brackets on a notice being served on him under s. 186 of the U P Municipalities Act does not make him criminally liable.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Aligarh, dated the 2nd June 1925.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Ram Sarup applied to the Municipal Board of Hathras to extend his chabutra by two feet in an almost triangular line so as to make the new chabutra and the old chabutra form a rectangle. He also mentioned that he may be granted permission to put a stone on the drain to serve as a stop for getting on to the chabutra. The map attached to the application explains the position and the form in which the new chabutra was to be built. This sanction was granted. At the time the application for sanction was made, it was not mentioned that the new chabutra would rest on stone brackets. The applicant is now being prosecuted for having put up stone brackets to support the new chabutra, for the construction of which the Municipality had already granted its sanction. A chabutra can only rest on earth or on pillars or on brackets, and as the sanction did not limit the discretion of Ram Sarup to build it in any particular form, it was open to him to erect stone brackets for supporting the new chabutra. The prosecution is wholly unjustified. The construction of the chabutra was made with the sanction of the Municipal Board obtained under s. 178 of the U. P. Municipalities Act, II of 1916, and a separate sanction for the erection of stone brackets to support the chabutra was not needed. The Municipal Board issued a notice under s. 186 requiring Ram Sarup to stop the erection of the stone brackets but he refused to stop the erection. The Trying Magistrate and the learned Sessions Judge were of opinion that by refusing to stop the erection of the stone brackets he had incurred a liability under s. 307 of the Act, but s. 186 read with s. 185 refers to the construction made either in contravention of the requirements of s. 178, or in contravention of the written directions given by the Board under s. 118 or any by-law. There is no by-law pointed out to us in this case, and there is nothing in the sanction to forbid the use of stone brackets as supports for the chabutra. The learned Sessions Judge also observes that Ram Sarup had extended his chabutra beyond the size sanctioned by the Board by 6 inches, but there is no mention of any such extension in the notice issued to him by the Municipal Board, nor was that one of the grounds taken by the Municipal Board in the Trial Court. In fact the contention of Ram Sarup is that his chabutra does not extend beyond 2 feet anywhere, and that matter not having been a part of the original complaint, it cannot be tried here. The application is allowed and the conviction and sentence passed on the applicant are set aside. The fine if realised will be refunded.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 195 (c) —Document handed up to Judge but not placed on file, whether “produced”—Prosecution in respect of document—Complaint, whether necessary

▲ decree-holder filed an application for execution of his decree. In answer to that application the defendant produced what purported to be a receipt in respect of a certain payment which he alleged he had made to the decree-holder and handed up the document to the Judge. The Judge did not place the document on the file on the ground that the date it bore showed that it was out of time for the purpose of evidencing any compromise or payment of the decree, and returned the document to the judgment-debtor. The judgment-debtor was subsequently prosecuted for an offence under s. 467 of the Penal Code in respect of the document.

Held, that the document had been “produced” in Court within the meaning of s. 195 (c) of the Cr. P. C. and that a complaint by the Judge was, therefore, necessary in order to give jurisdiction to the Court to try the accused for an offence under s. 467 of the Penal Code. [p. 428, col. 1]

Criminal application against an order of the Resident Magistrate, First Class at Nadiad.

Mr. H. C. Coyajee (with him Mr. H. M. Chokshi), for the Applicant.

Mr. S. S. Patkar, Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Mirza, J.—This is an application in revision on behalf of the accused against an order of the Resident First Class Magistrate, Nadiad, who rejected the accused's application to quash certain criminal proceedings pending in his Court under ss. 467 and 109, Indian Penal Code, against the accused.

The contention of the accused is that a document in respect of which a charge of abetment of forgery is made against him in those proceedings was “produced” before the Extra First Class Subordinate Judge of Surat in the Civil Suit No. 529 of 1922, that any prosecution against him in respect of such a document can be instituted only on a written complaint of the Subordinate Judge and admittedly as there is no written complaint the present proceedings are irregular and should be quashed.

It appears that the accused was the defendant in Civil Suit No. 529 of 1922. The plaintiff in that suit had obtained a decree against the accused and had filed a darkhast in the Extra First Class Subordinate Judge's Court for execution of that decree. In answer to that darkhast the defendant had produced the document in question and had handed up the same to the Subordinate Judge. That document purported to show that the decree had been compromised for a payment of Rs. 1,500. The Subordinate Judge did not take the document on the file on the ground that the date it bore showed that it was out of time for the purpose of evidencing any compromise of the decree. In doing so the learned Subordinate Judge failed to observe the provisions of O. XIII, r. 6, C. P. C., which lays down—

“Where a document relied on as evidence by either party is considered by the Court to be inadmissible in evidence, there shall be endorsed thereon the particulars mentioned. . . .”

The learned Subordinate Judge returned the document to the Pleader of the accused. It is now alleged that that document is being suppressed by the accused and is, therefore, not forthcoming. Under these circumstances the question before us to decide is whether what happened before the Subordinate Judge was tantamount to the “production” of the document in question within the meaning of s. 195, cl. (c), of the Cr. P. C. That section provides:—

“195 (1) No Court shall take cognizance—(c) of any offence described in s. 463 or punishable under s. 471, s. 475 or s. 476 of the same Code, (Indian Penal Code) when such offence is alleged to have been committed by a party to any proceeding in any Court in respect of a document produced or given in evidence in such proceeding, except on the complaint in writing of such Court, or of some other Court to which such Court is subordinate.”

Reliance is placed by the learned Counsel for the accused upon O. VII, r. 14, as showing that production of a document is different from giving the document in evidence. O. VII, r. 14, C. P. C., provides:—

“Where a plaintiff sues upon a document in his possession or power, he shall produce it in Court when the plaint is presented, and shall at the same time deliver the document or a copy thereof to be filed with the plaint.”

Like O. VII, r. 18, O. VII, r. 14, contemplate that a record of the document or its copy should be kept in the Court when it is said "to be produced" although it may not be given in evidence.

Our attention has been further called to Queen-Empress v. Nagindas (1) where a Division Bench of this Court consisting of Birdwood and Jardine, JJ., held that a document is given in evidence within the meaning of s. 195, Cr. P. C., when it is handed over by the person tendering it to the Court though the Court on inspection may reject it as evidence, for insufficiency of stamp or want of registration. This decision was prior to the date of the amendment of the Cr. P. C., whereby the words "produced or" have been added.

Our attention has been further called to a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Nalini Kanta Laha v. Anukul Chandra Laha (2). That case decided that where a document was called for by a party to a proceeding under s. 145 of the Cr. P. C., brought into Court and referred to by his Pleader in argument and by the Magistrate in his judgment, though he expressly refrained from any opinion, as to its authenticity, that the document was "produced" in the proceeding within the meaning of s. 195 (1) (c) of the Code.

We are further referred to a more recent case of our own Division Bench in In re Gopal Sidheshwar (3). In that case Chandavarkar and Pratt, JJ., held that s. 195 (c) of the Cr. P. C., 1898, applied to a document which was alleged to be forged and was produced in a Court of Justice. "Production" of a document in Court, they say, is not the same as "giving it in evidence." A document produced in Court according to this decision means "one which is produced for the purpose of being tendered in evidence or for some other purposes." We are of the opinion that this interpretation of s. 195 (c) is binding upon us. The circumstances in that case were very similar to the circumstances in the present case.

In a still more recent judgment in In re Bhau Vyankatesh (4) Macleod, C. J., and Coyajee, J., have given the same wide interpretation to the word "produce."

We, therefore, make the Rule absolute and quash the Magistrate's proceedings in the matter of the complaint against the applicant. This order, however, will not preclude fresh proceedings being instituted after a complaint is made in writing by the learned Subordinate Judge which in his discretion he is competent to do.

Percival, J.—I agree in regard to the legal aspect of the case. I should like to add that, while it will be a matter of discretion for the learned Subordinate Judge whether to make a complaint or not, in the peculiar circumstances of the case it appears that the complaint by the Subordinate Judge is rather a formality, owing to the fact that, although the document was technically produced in his Court, it was not retained there; and, therefore, the Subordinate Judge will probably not find anything on his record regarding it. It is even a question whether the document is in existence now or not. Thus, while on technical grounds the complaint by the Subordinate Judge is necessary, it cannot be expected that he will have any personal knowledge of the subject under consideration.

CRIMINAL REVISION CASE No. 1619 OF 1924.

January 23, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Broadway.

KALLU—ACCUSED—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 480—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 179, 193—Witness, prosecution of—False answer to question—Refusal to answer question.

Where a witness on being asked the name of his paternal grandfather, replies that he does not remember it, it is not a refusal to answer the question, and the witness cannot be prosecuted under s. 179, Penal Code, read with s. 480, Cr. P. C., although if the answer is false, the witness could be prosecuted under s. 193, Penal Code. [p. 429, col. 1.]

Case reported by the District Magistrate, Karnal, with his No. 2411-M of 21st November 1924.

FACTS.—The accused Kallu was a witness in a criminal case before Sardar Jai Singh, Magistrate of the First Class. In cross-examination he was asked the name of his paternal grandfather. His reply was that he did not know. On this the Magistrate taking action under s. 480, Cr. P. C., sentenced him to a fine of Rs. 50 under s. 179, Indian Penal Code.

GROUND.—Section 179, Indian Penal Code, only applies in cases where the accused person refuses to answer any question. Here the accused did not refuse to answer, but gave an answer which the Magistrate considered to be wrong. This might have come under s. 193, Indian Penal Code.

The application of s. 179 appears to be wrong and the case is reported for the orders of the High Court with the recommendation that the sentence be reversed.

The fine has already been paid.

ORDER.—Kallu son of Data Ram has been convicted of an offence under s. 179, Indian Penal Code, read with s. 480, Cr. P. C., and has been sentenced to a fine of Rs. 50, or in default to undergo one week's simple imprisonment. The learned District Magistrate has reported the case to this Court recommending that the conviction be set aside and the fine refunded.

This recommendation is based on the fact that the said Kallu had not committed the offence of which he has been convicted. It appears that Kallu was being examined as a witness and was asked the name of his paternal grandfather. To this question he applied that he did not remember the name of that gentleman. The learned Magistrate treated that as a contempt of Court holding that the reply given was "not consistent with reason," and that, therefore, Kallu had refused to answer the question put to him. The learned District Magistrate is right in his view that Kallu did not refuse to answer the question. As a matter of fact he did give an answer to the question put. If the answer was a false one Kallu committed an offence under s. 193, Indian Penal Code. He certainly did not render himself liable to being dealt with under s. 480, Cr. P. C. I, therefore, accept the recommendation of the learned District Magistrate and set aside the conviction. The fine must be refunded.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 8th July 1925.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicants.

Messrs. Saila Nath Mukerji and Jai Kishen Lal, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision asking for further inquiry into a complaint of defamation under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code which has been dismissed under s. 203 of the Cr. P. C. An application was made to the Sessions Judge who has rejected it. One Musammat Champa Devi filed a complaint charging PIRBHU LAL, Basdeo and Banarsi Das with offences under ss. 451 and 506 of the Indian Penal Code. When asked for their answer to the charge they said that they would file a written statement. In the course of that written statement they made an imputation of unchastity against the complainant alleging that she had an illegal connection with one Piare Lal and that the case had been instituted at the instigation of Piare Lal in consequence. That complaint was dismissed, and Musammat Champa Devi and Piare Lal then filed this complaint of defamation against Pirbhu Lal, Basdeo and Banarsi Das.

The Deputy Magistrate made an inquiry under s. 202 of the Cr. P. C. He then dismissed the complaint partly on the technical ground that the written statement had not been formally proved and partly on the ground that the defamatory imputation was not a "serious, direct, clear and complete imputation" and was not made with the intention of harming, or knowledge that it was likely to harm, the reputation of the complainants. The learned Sessions Judge has rightly brushed aside the reasons given by the learned Deputy Magistrate. He decided the case on the broad ground that a statement made by an accused person in a written statement filed by him in answer to a criminal prosecution is privileged, and that even if the privilege is not absolute it covers the present case because the imputation was made for the protection of the persons making it and not with the intention of doing harm to the complainants.

The learned Judge refers to the decision of the Madras High Court in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (1), in which they held that an oral statement made by an accused person was absolutely privileged, but I am not sure that he intends to adopt the view taken in this case, otherwise he would have hardly remarked below that the privilege may not be absolute. The view consistently taken by this Court has been that there is a distinction between criminal and civil liability for defamation. Civil liability is to be determined by the principles of English Law, but criminal liability is governed by the provisions of the Indian Penal Code and by those provisions alone. This view was taken by Mr. Justice Aikman in Isuri Prasad Singh v. Umrao Singh (2), and was re-affirmed by a Full Bench in Emperor v. Ganga Prasad (3). The view taken by this Court has quite recently been unanimously approved by a Full Bench of five Judges of the Calcutta High Court in Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (4). The immunity conferred by s. 342 (2) does not extend to a written statement.

I entirely concur with the Sessions Judge in finding that in the circumstances of this case the statement was made for the protection of the interests of the persons making it. The statement was undoubtedly a defamatory statement which the parties making it must have known to be likely to harm the reputation of the complainants. The only further question is whether the imputation was made in good faith within the meaning of ninth Exception to s. 499. If there had been a definite finding of the Court below that the imputation was made in good faith I would have unhesitatingly refused to interfere, but I cannot read any such finding into the general statement of the learned Sessions Judge that the case is covered by privilege and that the statement was not made with the intention of doing harm to the applicants but with the object of saving the persons making it. Indeed on the materials on the record I do not see how it would have been possible for the Courts to arrive at any such finding. No notice had been issued to the accused and all that the Deputy Magistrate had before him was the statements of the complainants and the statements of their witnesses called under s. 202. I, therefore, accept this revision and direct further inquiry to be made into the complaint.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Tharrawaddy, in Sessions Trial No. 26 of 1924.

JUDGMENT.

Robinson, C. J.—The appellant, Nga Wa Gyi, and two others were arrested on charges of kidnapping and murder. Nga Wa Gyi was tendered a pardon, which he accepted, and he was examined as a witness at the trial of the other two accused. On the conclusion of that trial the District Magistrate ordered the Police to prosecute him of the original offence. He overlooked the provisions of s. 339 of the Cr. P. C. The accused went before a Magistrate, who also overlooked those provisions. The Magistrate committed Nga Wa Gyi to the Court of Session on charges of murder, etc. On the case coming up for trial, the learned Sessions Judge noticed the absence of the certificate from the Public Prosecutor. The Public Prosecutor desired time to see if he could make the necessary certification, and the trial was accordingly adjourned. On the adjourned date, a certificate was filed and accepted by the learned Sessions Judge, and the trial proceeded; in other words, the learned Sessions Judge accepted the commitment as an irregular commitment in exercise of the powers conferred by s. 532 of the Code. He convicted Nga Wa Gyi under s. 365, and sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. Nga Wa Gyi has appealed, and the question, whether the commitment is illegal, having been made without a certificate, has been referred to a Bench.

The authorities naturally refer to cases concerned with the absence of sanctions that were required by the old Code, but the principles governing the matter are much the same although it would not necessarily follow that the absence of a Public Prosecutor's certificate, under s. 339, is as fatal a defect as the absence of a sanction.

In the first place, it must be pointed out that, what s. 339 lays down is that where a person who has been tendered a pardon and the Public Prosecutor certifies that he has, either by wilfully concealing something essential or by giving false evidence not complied with the condition on which the pardon was given, such person may be tried for the offence, in respect of which the pardon was so tendered. In the case of sanctions under the old Code, the provision was that no Court should take cognisance, and, in cases under the Arms Act, it was laid down that no proceedings may be instituted without certain sanction.

In the next place, it is to be noted that proceedings before a Committing Magistrate fall under Ch. XVII of the Code which deals with the enquiry into cases triable by a Court of Session. The charge in the present case was one which was exclusively triable by a Court of Session, and the Magistrate, making the enquiry, was doing so only with a view to committal, and not with a view to trial by himself, though he could, no doubt, have found the accused guilty only of an offence triable by himself, or have discharged him.

In a case referred to the High Court at Madras In re Sessions Judge of Tanjore (1), it was pointed out that an enquiry before a Magistrate is not a trial, the trial itself taking place before the Sessions Judge at a later stage. This is important, for the certificate of the Public Prosecutor is only required for the trial of a person who has accepted the tender of the pardon.

Coming now to the authorities in reference to cases of sanction, the first case that I will refer to is of Queen-Empress v. Morton (2). There a magisterial enquiry was held without the previous sanction required by s. 197 of the Code of 1882, and it was held that proceedings were irregular and without jurisdiction and that the sanction subsequently obtained was of no effect; but it was further held that the Judge presiding at the Sessions had nevertheless power in his discretion to accept the commitment and to proceed with the trial of the prisoner under the provisions of s. 532. That case was followed in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bal Gangadhar Tilak (3).

Again in Dilan Singh v. Emperor (4), it was held that a conviction by a Court of Session cannot be set aside simply on the ground of defect in the initiation of proceedings in the commitment Court, or on the ground of some irregularity in the commitment proceedings, more especially when that point was not raised in the lower Court, and it was held that s. 532 would cure such a defect. Morton's case (2) was again followed. No reference, however, was made to an earlier decision of the same Court in Barindra Kumar Ghose v. Emperor (5), in which it was held that there being no complaint under s. 121 of the Penal Code, authorised by the Local Government, or in fact preferred, the Magistrate had no power to commit thereunder, and that the defect was not cured by a subsequent order obtained while the case was before the Sessions Court. It was further held that s. 532 did not cure the defect. That, however, was a case of an order under s. 196 of the Code, and, in the complaint that was filed, a number of sections were actually specified, but s. 121 was not amongst them. The case can, therefore, I think, be distinguished.

There is one other case, viz., Emperor v. Bhimaji Venkaji Nadgir (6). The enquiry into the case was instituted and the whole of the evidence was taken in the absence of sanction to prosecute. The Magistrate committed the case to the Sessions Court and the Sessions Judge referred the case to the High Court, as he was of opinion that the commitment was illegal. It was held that, owing to the absence of sanction the whole of the proceedings before the Magistrate were without jurisdiction and totally invalid. The Sessions Judge did not accept the commitment.

By s. 193 of the Code it is laid down that no Court of Session shall take cognisance of any offence as a Court of original jurisdiction unless the case has been committed to it by a Magistrate duly empowered in that behalf. In this case, the Magistrate was, in my opinion, duly empowered to commit it. The proceedings before him were merely an enquiry and what is forbidden by the provisions of s. 339 is the trial of the accused which, in this particular case, had to be a trial by a Court of Session as a Court of original jurisdiction. Even in the case of a Magistrate, who commits for trial by a Sessions Court, the fact that he had no territorial jurisdiction over the place where the alleged offence was committed has been held to be no ground for the Court, to which the commitment was made, quashing the commitment under s. 532, the accused not having been injured thereby. And in that case, objection was taken before commitment. See Queen-Empress v. Abbi Reddi (7). Having regard to the weight of authority and to the wording of s. 339, I am of opinion, that it was open to the Sessions Judge, in this case, to accept the commitment even if it was irregular. Before the trial began, the provisions of s. 339 had been complied with, and the trial was in order. The proceedings before the Magistrate were not, therefore, in my opinion, totally invalid and there is no ground for setting aside the proceedings on this ground, more particularly, as no objection had been taken either before the Magistrate or before the Sessions Court even after the point was brought prominently to notice.

It is not right that the mere fact that a confession has been made should lead to the conclusion that if withdrawn the man must be held to have failed to comply with the condition on which it was granted. False confessions wrongfully extorted or induced are not unknown and no man should be led to adhere to a false confession for fear of having his pardon forfeited.

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CRIMINAL APPEAL No. 105 OF 1924.

November 27, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Kennedy, J. C., and

Mr. Rupchand Bilaram, A. J. C.

F. C. WOODWARD—ACCUSED—APPELLANT
versus

EMPEROR—OPPONENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 304-A, 337, 338, 465, 471—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 235—Accident causing loss of life and injury to person—Neglect of duty—Forgery committed by accused to screen himself from criminal liability and to continue in employment—Joinder of charges—"Same transaction, meaning of—Contributory negligence, plea of, whether relevant.

In a prosecution under ss. 304-A, 337 and 338 of the Penal Code the accused cannot claim the benefit of an error of judgment when he has exercised no judgment at all. [p. 437, col. 1.]

The expression "gross neglect" finds no place in the Criminal Law of India. That law does not render a mere casual inadvertence of duty criminal, but such neglect of duty as either directly results in loss of life or injury to person or such neglect as endangers life or property. [p. 437, col. 2.]

Where a person is charged with the offence of causing loss of life by a negligent omission it is not open to him to rely on the plea of contributory which is distinctly recognized in the Law of Torts but finds no place in an indictment for criminal negligence. In such a case the question is what was the proximate cause of the accident [p. 438, col. 1.]

The arena of facts covered by the expression "same transaction" used in s. 235 of the Cr P C varies with the circumstances of each case. The real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one transaction depends upon whether they are so related together in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal or subsidiary acts as to constitute one continuous action. [ibid]

It was the duty of the accused to make a periodical inspection of certain boilers in order to see that the boilers were in a fit condition to be worked. One of the boilers exploded and caused loss of life and injury to person, the accident being due to the fact that the crown stays of the boiler were badly corroded, some of them having disappeared altogether. If the accused had carried out his duty of inspecting the boiler from time to time all possibility of the accident would have been avoided. During a departmental enquiry into the cause of the accident the accused produced a Dak Despatch Book in order to prove that he had submitted periodical reports of his inspection of the boiler to his superior officer. He also relied on certain entries made by him in a private book to show that he had reported on the condition of the crown stays. The entries in the Dak Despatch Book and the private book produced by the accused were suspected to be forged and the accused was put on his trial on three different charges, (1) under ss. 304-A, 337 and 338 for neglect of duty resulting in the bursting of the boiler and causing loss of life and injury to person, (2) under ss. 465, 471 or in the alternative under s. 193 of the Penal Code for having forged entries in his private book with the object of inducing the officer who was holding an enquiry to form an erroneous opinion and (3) under s. 477-A of the Penal Code for falsifying Dak Despatch Book. He was convicted under the first and second heads but was acquitted on the third.

Held, (1) that the neglect of the accused resulting in the bursting of the boiler and the subsequent forgeries with the object of screening himself from criminal liability and in order that he might be retained in his employment were part of the same transaction within the meaning of s. 235 of the Cr P C, and that there was consequently no misjoinder of charges; [p. 438, col. 2.]

(2) that the bursting of the boiler being due to the neglect of duty of the accused and that the accused having forged the entries in the private book with the object of being retained in employment his conviction on the first and second charges was justified. [p. 438, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against a decision of the Sessions Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Fatehchand Assudomal, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—On 23rd February 1924 at about 4-40 P. M. a serious Railway accident occurred while the 100 Down Goods Train was passing over a bridge on the down line between Mahesar and Pano Akil Stations on the North-Western Railway line. The boiler of the locomotive engine was blown off the frame and implanted at the 14th pier of the bridge damaging the pier and the embankment close by, the frame of the engine was lifted off the rails and thrown down in the nulla between piers Nos. 8 and 9, the spans of the bridge between piers Nos. 7 and 9 were smashed and the space in between piled with a jumbled mass of waggons. The engine driver had been terribly burnt and before he died, all that he could say was "I know only about the falling." The two firemen who were on the engine were found dead. Five coolies of the contractor, who were scrapping the paint of the girders of the bridge, were found dead and eight other coolies injured. These coolies were doing their work sitting on planks swung by cords from the bridge, and were overwhelmed by the falling waggons.

The inquiry held immediately thereafter by the Senior Inspector of the Railway disclosed that the accident was due to the unsafe condition of the boiler of this engine. The crown stays of the boiler were badly corroded and some of them completely gone. The crown plate had been ripped open, causing an explosion in the fire-box, with the result that the boiler had blown off. The engine was of the "H. B." class bearing No. 1591, the number of its boiler being 121. It was one of the eighty engines housed at the Rohri Shed and had been sent out for work on the previous day to Khanpur. After the usual rest at Khanpur for about six hours it was returning to Rohri with another load.

The appellant was then employed as a European boiler-maker at the Rohri Shed. It was his duty to have periodical inspection of the boilers of the engines housed at Rohri. At the inquiry he produced a Dak Despatch Book similar to an ordinary peon's delivery book to prove that he had submitted the periodical reports of his inspection through the Foreman of his shed to the District Loco Superintendent, and further relied on certain entries made by him in a private book to show that he had reported on the crown stays of this engine not being perfect. The entries in the Dak Despatch Book were believed to be forged, and the appellant was put on his trial on three different charges:

(1) Under ss. 304-A, 337 and 338, Indian Penal Code, for neglect of his duty in not complying with rr. 42 and 49 of the Rules and Regulations of the Locomotive Department made under Act IX of 1890, resulting in the bursting of the boiler and causing loss of five lives and injury to eight other persons.

(2) Under ss. 465 and 471, or in the alternative under s. 193, Indian Penal Code, for having forged entries with the object of inducing the Senior Government Inspector who was holding an inquiry intending that such forged entries might cause him to form an erroneous opinion.

(3) Under s. 477-A, Indian Penal Code, for falsifying the Dak Despatch Book.

He has been convicted and sentenced to six months' simple imprisonment on the first count, to one month's simple imprisonment under ss. 465 and 471, Indian Penal Code, on the second count, and acquitted on the third count. He has appealed against his conviction. A notice has also been issued to him to show cause why the sentences inflicted on him should not be enhanced.

We have no hesitation in holding that the proximate cause of this terrible accident was the bursting of the boiler on account of the corroded stays giving way and the crown plate being ripped open. The evidence of the experts who examined the scene of occurrence immediately after the accident shows that the boiler was blown off the chassis of the engine at pier No. 7 when the engine was running on the rails. There were marks of sludge on the top of pier No. 7, on the face of that pier between the girders on the ground, and at the base of pier No. 6 and also on some sleepers that were blown down through the bridge. The marks of this sludge were inconsistent with the sludge which passes from the blow off cock which was only to the right side of the engine and were consistent with the theory that the sludge was dropped from the boiler when it was bodily lifted by the explosion.

The sleepers were blown forcibly downwards between the rails leaving their ends undisturbed, due evidently to three or four tons of metal and live coal crushing down through the sleepers. A number of bridge timbers immediately before pier No. 7 and on the side of it facing pier No. 6 had been completely shattered between the inner flangs of the top girders.

The boiler of the engine had received a violent dent on the front upper portion which was originally flat which showed that it had turned somersault over on its head and had again come down the right way up and facing in the same direction as before. It was lying almost in front of the train about eighty yards away from the place where it first left the chassis. The rear part of the boiler and the barrel are less strongly fastened down than the smoke-box in front, and the rear part of the boiler naturally blew up first. If the boiler had blown off after the chassis had fallen off the rails or into the nulla, it is least likely that the boiler would be implanted on the bridge just in front of the train on the down line or would receive the dent on the front upper portion of the boiler.

The place where the chassis was found lying in the nulla showed that it had been thrown off the rail after the boiler had burst and had been pushed further up to pillar No. 9 where it was imbedded in the nulla. There are also other indicia, for instance the discovery of the smoke-box door, near pier No. 7, which seems to have dropped out when the rear part of the boiler had been lifted up.

Added to it was the state of the crown plate and the crown stays. The flat top plate on the firebox, which is of copper, is stayed to the crown plate of the boiler by stays 192 in number. Each of these stays has a nut at the end. These stays are liable to be corroded with heat and water and galvanic action of the copper and iron. The place of corrosion of a stay is just above the firebox crown. If a sufficient number of stays are corroded the top of the firebox is liable to collapse under steam pressure. A new stay is about  $1\frac{1}{4}$ " in thickness. The inspection of the boiler by the Railway experts disclosed that out of the 192 crown stays ten were completely gone and except a few stays, towards the front of the boiler, the rest were badly corroded and the average thickness of the stays reduced to about  $\frac{5}{8}$ th of an inch, and the crown plate had ripped open under pressure of steam, the corroded stays having been broken by the pressure.

There was no other ostensible cause of the accident. The line between the two stations is a main line subject to constant traffic both up and down. The coolies working on the bridge found no obstacle being placed on the line to cause a derailment, and the accident occurred in broad daylight. There is also the evidence of three coolies who were sheltered under trolley refuge on pier No. 5 who speak to the explosion and the shooting out of the sludge as the first thing that occurred, and have been believed as true witnesses by the learned Sessions Judge.

The expert evidence further shows that the minimum average thickness of the stays for purposes of safety should not be less than  $\frac{7}{8}$ th of an inch, and according to Welsh Foreman, Boiler-maker, Karachi, Ex. 18, it was very dangerous to send out for work the engine with its crown stays so badly corroded, and according to Brooks Foreman, Boiler-maker, Lahore, Ex. 16 the boiler in that state was unsafe for work.

There can be also no doubt that it was a part of the duty of the appellant to examine the crown stays periodically, at least once every three months.

The crown stays require watching as they are liable to corrosion. There are nine plug holes provided for inspection, five of the plugs being in the top plate of the fire-box and so situated as to render the examination of the outer rows easily observable from the plug holes. These outer rows corrode the quickest. At least two stays can be examined through each hole and those so examined serve as an index to the condition of the rows to which they belong. Stays commonly become encrusted and require to be cleaned with a chisel to remove the encrustation and corroded portions to see how deep the corrosion has progressed. The thickness of the stays is judged by the use of the chisel through one of the holes and by introducing a light through another hole to observe the result of chiselling. This part of the work is the duty of an experienced European boiler-maker like the appellant and not of any of the subordinates working under him.

Rule 49 of the rules requires the European boiler makers to carry out the quarterly examination of the running engines; and one of the chief things which requires examination is the crown and side water stays which are liable to corrosion.

The appellant was aware that the water at Rohri was likely to cause greater corrosion than ordinary water. His special attention had been drawn to the effect of criminal neglect of examining stays by Ex. 71, dated 18th December 1923, which was issued in consequence of another boiler having been sent to a workshop with a majority of the crown stays badly corroded, and showing that the European boiler-makers who were supposed to have examined the engines had neglected to examine the stays and for which they were punished. This circular is signed by the appellant and requires him to have a proper examination of boilers.

The statement of the appellant before the inquiry officer shows that the appellant was aware of the importance of the stays, his duty to periodically examine them, and the serious danger resulting from the stays giving way. He admits that in 1906 a boiler of an engine on the Great Eastern Railway was blown off the chassis while the engine was running, on account of the side water stays giving way and causing the explosion, the boiler in that case having blown off on one side owing to the greater pressure on that side. The appellant further admits that it was a part of his duty to immediately report to the District Loco. Superintendent, if he found a boiler of any engine to be unsafe for work and to stop the engine from running, pending instructions from the District Loco. Superintendent. The appellant is an experienced boiler-maker of over sixteen years standing and was fully cognizant of the serious danger to life and property in permitting an unsafe boiler to work.

The expert evidence further proves that the crown stays of this boiler were so badly encrusted and corroded that it was not likely that the appellant could have removed the encrustation or examined the stays for a period of nine to twelve months.

This evidence finds ample support in the conduct of the appellant in attempting to create evidence at the inquiry to show that he had examined the boiler every three months and had submitted his quarterly report of inspection. He produced a Dak Despatch Book, Ex. 87, with certain interpolations to prove that the quarterly reports were delivered to the head clerk of the Foreman who had signed for them in the book. He further relied on certain entries made by him in his private book, Ex. 88, which recited inter alia that he had examined the boiler of this engine on 15th January 1924 and found "the crown bolts badly encrusted, patches leaking and to be watched and the tubes as far as they could be seen in a good condition." The object of producing these books was evidently to lead the Inspector to believe in the first place that the appellant had discharged his duties properly and that his failure to stop the boiler from working at most amounted to an error of judgment and not to neglect of duty.

The story of his having submitted quarterly reports is false. None of the Shed office or the District Loco. Superintendent's office remember having seen the reports nor does Spiers, the Assistant Loco. Superintendent, or Brock, the District Loco. Superintendent, remember having received them. The life history of the boiler in the life register kept in the District Loco. Superintendent's office has not been written up, and no office copies of the reports have been produced by the appellant, though it is usual to make out the reports in duplicate and to retain one as an office copy. The Dak Despatch Book, Ex. 87, shows distinct signs of interpolations and manipulations. It would be sufficient to refer to the last entry of the despatch of the last quarterly report. It reads as follows:—

		28 1-24 returned on date 30-1-24 and quarterly Boiler report.

The words "and quarterly Boiler reports" are a clear interpolation. We think that the learned Judge was right in holding that the different entries in this book, showing that the appellant had despatched reports for the different quarters from November 1922, were manipulated. The private book, Ex. 88, could not possibly have formed the basis for the appellant to make out his quarterly report. It does not contain notes of inspection of several engines which were housed in the same Shed during the period, though this book purports to have been kept from the time of the appellant's transfer to the Rohri Shed upto the time of the accident. It would appear that when the appellant was off and on required to carry out Shed repairs to any boiler or to re-place worn out parts he made notes of it in this book. It is not at all a book maintained as a substitute for the office copies of the quarterly report. He has availed of it to prove that he carried out the quarterly inspection of the boiler in question by making certain additions about the state of this boiler and the dates on which he examined it. The notes in Ex. 88 do not however prove that the appellant carried out quarterly inspection of the boilers in his charge or that he submitted the quarterly reports. The learned Sessions Judge has rightly pointed out that after the accident the appellant was in a dilemma. If he said that he had noted in the report the boiler as safe in January, the state of the boiler would show that his report was incorrect, and if he said that he had noted the boiler to be unsafe, he would have to explain why he did not despatch an urgent memo to the District Loco. Superintendent, and stop the boiler from working. He therefore, fabricated an evasive entry in this book Ex. 88: "Crown bolts badly encrusted, patches leaking, to be watched, tubes good as far as can be seen." The appellant was himself uncertain as to the effect of this entry and when questioned by Mr. Brock he said that he had sent a memo stopping the engine, thereby showing that he considered the boiler unsafe, though no such memo could be traced, and when questioned by the Senior Government Inspector he told him that he considered the boiler safe. If this entry be true, and the appellant really found that the bolts were badly encrusted and patches leaking and to be watched, there was a greater obligation on him to examine thoroughly the crown stays and also to watch the state of the boiler each time the engine was sent out of the Shed. There is nothing in his notes to show that he did either.

We are of opinion that the appellant's action in manipulating Exs. 87 and 88 was most foolish and ill-advised.

Mr. Fatehchand, the learned Pleader, for the appellant has urged that the conduct of the appellant in not stopping the boiler from work is consistent with his having committed an error of judgment.

In support of this plea it is urged that it is a matter of opinion if the minimum thickness of crown stays for safety should be  $\frac{1}{8}$ th of an inch or less, and that even if the thickness of the stays were only  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of an inch, they would be able to bear the maximum pressure of steam. As the stays were of an average thickness of  $\frac{5}{8}$ th of an inch the act of the appellant in not stopping the engine from work was an error of judgment.

There may have been some force in this argument if the appellant had removed the encrustations and cleaned the stays. He cannot claim the benefit of an error of judgment when he exercised none. Again it is to be observed that, if all the stays were of the uniform thickness of  $\frac{1}{4}$ th of an inch, they could withstand the pressure of steam. It does not follow that stays of less than  $\frac{1}{8}$ th of an inch would be able to bear the same pressure when some of the stays were completely gone, and others reduced to less than  $\frac{5}{8}$ th of an inch. The front ten stays afforded a fair index to the appellant as to the condition of the stays in the back rows, and as these ten stays were completely gone, it is difficult to believe that if the appellant had applied his mind to it, he could have fallen into any error of judgment.

The second contention raised by Mr. Fatehchand is that the dereliction of duty, if any, was not so gross as to make it culpable, and has relied on certain English rulings in support of his contention. These rulings which are based on the English Common Law have very little bearing on the codified law in force here and should be applied with some caution. Under the Common Law whether a dereliction of duty in any particular case is criminal or not is a question of fact in each case. As said by Lord Blackburn in R. Eyre (1) "criminal negligence" is a phrase constantly used in criminal cases, but the amount of negligence that would make a man so responsible cannot be defined. It is not a little failure in duty that would make him criminally responsible. A great failure of duty undoubtedly would. The line between the two is hard to define and must be left to a very great extent in each individual case to the common sense of the Jury whether or not the degree of failure of duty is criminal."

So far as the facts of this case go, there can be no doubt that the appellant is not guilty of a little failure of duty, but a great failure for over a long period of the very duty with which he was particularly entrusted, for it is in evidence that stays could not have got corroded and reduced to that thickness in the course of two or three months, and he failed to perform this duty notwithstanding his special attention being drawn by the circular of December 1923 to the importance of the stays being examined periodically and his personal knowledge of a boiler having burst in consequence of the side stays giving way. This dereliction of duty is as gross as it could possibly be. The expression "gross neglect" however finds no place in the Indian Criminal Codes and there is no occasion or reason for introducing it here. The codified Criminal Law of India does not render a mere casual inadvertance to duty criminal, but such neglect of duty as either directly results in loss of life or injury to person (ss. 304-A, 337 and 338, Indian Penal Code, and in certain special cases) or such neglect as endangers life or property (ss. 279 to 289, Indian Penal Code, ss. 102 and 128 of the Indian Railways Act). In the present case the neglect of duty has directly resulted in loss of life.

Mr. Fatehchand has further contended that the cause of this accident is consistent with the engine driver having put on the brakes too suddenly or negligently thereby causing a greater steam pressure on the boiler, and that the immediate cause of the accident was the act of the engine-driver.

He has urged that as the engine was drawing a load, there was less pressure on the stays and less chance of the crown plate giving way at that time unless a sudden attempt had been made to stop the engine. There is nothing to show that the crown plate may not have yielded to pressure of steam while the engine was moving. Even assuming that the engine-driver saw some person ahead and attempted to slow down the engine or stop the train, and in so doing contributed in part to the accident, this is no defence to the charge. The proximate cause of the accident, however, is not the sudden stopping of the train for it is expected that the boiler of a locomotive should be strong enough to withstand such strain, but the weakness of the stays. It is also not open to the appellant to rely on the plea of contributory negligence which has a distinct and recognised place in the Law of Torts, but finds no place in an indictment for criminal negligence. We are of the opinion that the appellant has been rightly convicted on the first count.

Though the object of the appellant to manipulate Ex. 87 was mainly intended to screen himself from criminal liability for neglect of duty, he stood to gain by it, if he could convince the Senior Inspector that the entries in Ex. 87 were true. As pointed out by the learned Sessions Judge he would have been permitted to continue in service, though he was unfit for it. There is also evidence to show that he used Ex. 87. We are of opinion that he has been rightly convicted on the second count as well.

Mr. Fatehchand has lastly urged that there was a misjoinder of charges which rendered the trial illegal. The three counts under which the appellant has been charged may fairly be said to be in respect of one and the same transaction within the meaning of s. 235, cl. (1), Cr. P. C. The expression "same transaction" is, as pointed out in Crown v. Ghulam (2), incapable of exact definition and has been advisedly used in this section and s. 239. The arena of facts covered by the expression "same transaction" varies with the circumstances of each case. In Emperor v. Sherufalli (3) it was pointed out that the real and substantial test for determining whether several offences are so connected together as to form one transaction depends upon whether they are related together in point of purpose or as cause and effect or as principal or subsidiary acts so as to constitute one continuous action. Criminal misappropriation and falsification of accounts in order to screen the misappropriation in Emperor v. Jiban Krishna Pagchi (4), criminal breach of trust and falsification of accounts made to conceal the breach of trust in Emperor v. Jagat Ram (5), the charge of murder and of causing evidence of the murder to disappear with the intention of screening the offender in Hanmappa Rudirappa v. Emperor (6), Crown v. Ghulam (2) and Emperor v. Bawa Manghnidas (7) causing grievous hurt with the object of extorting a confession from a person and after his death forging entries to conceal the cause of death in Emperor v. Balwant Kondo (8) misappropriation of ornaments taken charge of by a Police Officer from a lady and the subsequent alteration of entries in the Police diaries to show that the ornaments were not taken charge of at the Police Station in Bilash Chandra Banerjee v. Emperor (9) have all been held to fall within the purview of s. 235, cl. (1). Here the appellant was similarly charged with forging entries in order to conceal his offence of criminal neglect. The evidence to prove the charge on the first count was relevant to prove the charge on the second count and vice versa. The appellant cannot even plead that he has been prejudiced by the joint trial. We hold that there has been no misjoinder of charges.

We have carefully considered the question of enhancement of sentence. The criminal neglect of the appellant was to a certain extent encouraged by the District Loco. Superintendent's office in not calling for the quarterly returns. The first expedite sent by the office was after a period of over twenty-two months in January 1923 and was probably a result of the circular Ex. 71. In response to that expedite the appellant submitted the reports for two engines housed at Pad-Idan and five engines at Khanpur which were also under his charge, but was too inactive or lazy to examine and report on the eighty engines housed at Rohri. If the District Loco. Superintendent's office had been more active, probably the appellant would have looked up a bit and this terrible accident might have been avoided. We have been told that the appellant not only loses his appointment, but with a conviction standing against him it will be difficult for him to get employment, and this in itself would be a sufficient punishment for him and for his family who are now rendered helpless in England.

Taking into consideration all the circumstances, we think, it will meet the ends of justice if we sentence him to six months' rigorous imprisonment instead of six months' simple imprisonment on the first count, and to one month's rigorous imprisonment on the second count, both sentences to run concurrently, and order that the portion of the sentence already undergone by him be treated as part of this sentence and be deemed to have been one of rigorous imprisonment.

K and B abducted a woman and committed rape upon her at a place called D. The woman was subsequently taken by B to different places where he alone committed rape upon her. On these facts :

Held, (1) that a joint charge under s. 366 of the Penal Code against both K and B was justified; [p. 439, col. 2.]

(2) that a joint charge under s. 376 of the Penal Code against both of them in respect of the occurrence which took place at D was also justified; [p. 440, col. 1.]

(3) that a joint charge against both of them of having committed rape upon the woman at D and in other places was both improper and embarrassing; [ibid.]

(4) that if it was intended to prosecute B with regard to the offences that he was accused of having committed elsewhere there should be separate charges with regard to those offences. [ibid.]

In order to sustain a charge under s. 366 of the Penal Code, it is not necessary for the prosecution to establish that after the woman had been by force compelled to leave her house, she was by force compelled to go to various places. [p. 400, col. 1.]

Under s. 162, Cr. P. C., no statement or any record thereof whether in a Police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Cr. P. C., is admissible as evidence except as provided in the second para. of that section. [ibid.]

Evidence of statements made by an accused person in the custody of the Police and of his having pointed out the places where he had taken the abducted woman during the course of the night in which the offence of abduction is alleged to have been committed are not admissible in evidence. A statement made by a person who is not examined as a witness that the accused was not in his house on the night on which the offence is alleged to have been committed is not admissible in evidence. [ibid.]

In a case of rape evidence as regards the general immoral character of the woman is relevant under s. 155 (4) of the Evidence Act. [p. 441, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Rajshahi.

Babu Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khondkar, (Deputy Legal Remembrancer), for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants in this case Keramat Mandal and Belat Ali Mandal were tried by the Sessions Judge of Rajshahi with the assistance of a Jury on two charges under ss. 366 and 376, Indian Penal Code. The Jury returned a unanimous verdict of guilty against the first appellant on both charges and a verdict by a majority of four to one of guilty on both charges against Belat Ali. The learned Sessions Judge accepted the verdict and sentenced both the appellants to transportation for life under s. 376, Indian Penal Code, no separate sentence being awarded under s. 366, Indian Penal Code.

On behalf of the appellants several grounds have been taken the first of which being with reference to misjoinder of charges. With regard to the first charge under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, no objection is taken and it appears to us to be quite in order. The difficulty is caused with regard to the second charge which runs thus: "Secondly that you on or about the 25th day of May 1924 at Dasmari P. S. Paba and other places committed rape on Benodini." The story of the prosecution was that rape was committed on Benodini on a field at Dasmari by both the accused persons. Subsequently this woman was taken either by force or by fraud by Belat Ali alone to different places where he alone committed rape upon her. In this circumstance a joint charge against both the accused of having committed rape upon Benodini at Dasmari and in other places is improper. We are of opinion that such a charge is also . . . . . It is urged on behalf of the Crown that although this is not a proper charge this has not in fact occasioned a failure of justice, because if the evidence on behalf of the prosecution as to the first act of rape in the field at Dasmari was believed by the Jury, both of the accused persons might be convicted of the offence. It is possible that this is so, but having regard to the other questions on which we consider this trial has been vitiated we think that in the subsequent trial this error in the charge should be set right. Although both of the accused persons might have been jointly charged with both the offences which were committed at Dasmari, if it is intended to prosecute Belat Ali with regard to the offences that he was accused of having committed elsewhere there should be separate charges with regard to those offences. While dealing with this matter we may also point out that in his charge to the Jury with reference to the offence under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, the learned Judge has stated this: You shall have to see (a) if the woman Benodini was by force compelled to leave her house and to go to the various places. In our opinion it is not necessary for the prosecution to establish that she was by force compelled to leave not only her house but compelled to go to various places in order to sustain the first charge on which the accused were tried.

The principal question on which we hold that the trial has been vitiated, is of erroneous admission of evidence. The first is that evidence has been admitted as to what Benodini has stated to the Investigating Police Officer and her pointing out the places where she was taken. The statement of another witness, that is, the mother-in-law of Benodini before the Police has also been put in evidence. We should point out that under s. 162, Cr. P. C., no statement or any record thereof whether in a Police diary or otherwise or any part of such statement made by any person to a Police Officer in the course of an investigation under Ch. XIV of the Cr. P. C. is admissible as evidence except as provided in the second para. of that section. It was urged on behalf of the Crown that the statements that were put in evidence were not corroborative of the facts sworn to the witnesses in the box, but were practically harmless and could not affect the decision as regards the main story of the offences. It is difficult for us to say how it worked on the minds of the Jury, and the law forbids such evidence being introduced in the manner it has been done. In this particular case the statements that were made by the witness to the Police Officer and the fact of pointing out the places to him ought to have been kept back from the Jury, as such facts were not brought out in evidence on behalf of the defence as provided by s. 162 of the Code. A still more objectionable thing happened in allowing the evidence of the statements of Belat Ali while in custody of the Police Officer, and of his having pointed out the places where he had taken the woman during the course of the night in which the offence is alleged to have been committed. Although the learned Judge has stated in the last part of his charge that the Jury should reject the evidence as regards the part taken by Belat Ali in pointing out the places, the mischief of introducing inadmissible evidence had already been done. It seems that the learned Judge allowed this evidence to be introduced on the ground that it was the conduct of the accused influenced by a fact in issue. It can hardly be said that the statements of the accused were admissible as his conduct. These statements were certainly of an incriminating nature and were not admissible under the law.

The next objection which is also of substance is that when search was made for Belat Ali two persons Kafil and Sukalal were alleged to have said that Belat Ali was absent from home on the night of the occurrence. These two persons have not been examined in Court but their allegations about the absence of Belat Ali were allowed to go in. Those statements were certainly inadmissible. The learned Judge only refers to that fact while dealing with the arguments on behalf of the defence.

On this ground of wrong admission of evidence we must set aside the conviction and sentence and send the case back for re-trial according to law. While doing so we desire to make certain observations with regard to the nature of the statement made by Belat Ali to the Magistrate by way of confession. This statement is not really a confession, because so far as it goes it is self-exculpatory. The learned Judge was, therefore, wrong in using the expression that it was a confession.

The next point is that the learned Judge begins by saying that on a question of rape the character of the woman is not relevant. It seems to us that what the learned Judge means, as he says subsequently, is that even a woman of immoral character may be the subject of rape. In such a case evidence as regards the general immoral character of the woman is relevant evidence as enacted in s. 155 (4) of the Evidence Act. We noticed that the learned Judge admitted evidence which suggested that the woman concerned in this case was of bad character and he dealt with this matter in his charge. We are of opinion, therefore, that the learned Judge was quite aware of the provisions of the law, but the use of the expression that the character of the woman is not relevant is somewhat misleading.

The result is that we set aside the conviction and sentence passed on the appellants and send the case back for re-trial. The accused will be tried on the following charges. The one charge against both the accused under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, as framed; one charge against the accused No. 1, Keramat Mandal, for committing rape on Benodini at Dasmari; a separate charge against Belat Ali for committing rape on Benodini at Dasmari; and if the prosecution so desires a separate charge of rape against Belat Ali for what has been alleged to have taken place subsequent to Benodini being taken away from the field at Dasmari.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 18th July 1925.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The accused, Abdul Hafiz Khan, was found in possession of one ounce of cocaine lying in a trunk inside his house. He has been convicted under s. 60 (a) of the U. P. Excise Act and sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for eight months and a fine of Rs. 500. It appears that the Excise Inspector received information that certain men had come from Rampur and were engaged in selling cocaine at Cawnpore. The accused is a resident of Rampur and is now living at Cawnpore. When the Excise Inspector received the above information, he arranged that 50 ounces of cocaine should be purchased at Rs. 65 per ounce by the informer. He had completed the arrangement for its purchase and was trying to arrange for the price when on the 19th April he received further information that one of his informers had divulged that information to the smugglers and that they were leaving the shop on the Latouche Road which was in their occupation. He, therefore hurried to the house and the shop occupied by the accused without waiting to obtain a search warrant from the Collector under s. 53 of the Excise Act. The shop was found closed. It was opened but nothing excisable was found in it. The Excise Inspector and the constable who accompanied him then went to the house of the accused accompanied by two search witnesses, one of whom was a neighbour keeping a leather shop in an adjoining house and the other was the Excise Inspector's own tonga-driver. On a search being made in the house the packet containing an ounce of cocaine was found in a steel trunk which also contained clothes and jewellery. Both the Courts below accepted the evidence of the Excise Inspector and the two search witnesses and convicted the accused.

The contention here is that the search was illegal because there was ample time for the Excise Inspector to have obtained a warrant from the Collector before making the search, and to have got two search witnesses from the locality to accompany him when he went inside the house to make the search. Section 53 of the U. P. Excise Act provides that where a Collector or an officer of the Excise Department not below such rank as the Local Government may prescribe or a Police Officer not below the rank of an officer in charge of a Police Station has reason to believe that an offence punishable under certain sections of the Excise Act is being or likely to be committed in a certain place and that a search warrant cannot be obtained without affording the offender an opportunity of escape or of concealing evidence of the offence, he may at any time by day or night enter and search such place, provided that any officer, other than a Collector, taking action under this sub-section shall before entering such place record the grounds of his belief as aforesaid. The learned Sessions Judge had rightly pointed out that even if the Excise Inspector had no opportunity of obtaining a warrant from the Collector and thought that any delay would afford the offender an opportunity of escape or of concealing evidence of the offence, it was his duty before proceeding to make the search to record the grounds for his belief that an offence of the kind mentioned was being or likely to be committed and that an immediate search was necessary. The Excise Inspector does not appear to have recorded any proceeding showing the grounds of such belief; and that was a serious irregularity which but for the clear evidence adduced in this case and accepted by the Courts below might have seriously affected the situation. The object of the provision is that searches should not be lightly carried out on the strength of a suspicion formed without adequate basis and that there should be some guarantee that the information received had been independently examined and found to be reliable and that a search was necessary in the public interest. The learned Sessions Judge thinks that there was ample opportunity in the present case for the Excise Inspector to have obtained a warrant; but even if that was so, the irregularity in the proceedings leading to the search would not mitigate the offence or operate as a bar to the conviction of the accused as satisfactory evidence of an excisable article having been found in his house or possession is forthcoming. As pointed out in Emperor v. Allahdad Khan (1) and Syed Ahmad v. Emperor (2) the absence of the search warrant does not render the subsequent conviction of the person found in possession of an excisable article on such search illegal. It is also urged that the provisions of s. 103, Cr. P. C., were imperative and that the search was illegal because the Excise Inspector and the Police constable who accompanied him did not take two respectable inhabitants of the locality with them when they went to search the house. It is undoubtedly important that an officer making a search should comply with these provisions, for the credibility of his story may in many cases depend on the support it might receive from the persons accompanying him in the search. But if for any reason the officer making the search is unable to get two or more respectable inhabitants of the locality and a search is effected in the presence of one or more men available at the time, leading to the discovery of an excisable article, the accused who is found in possession of that article can all the same be convicted, if the Court is satisfied from the evidence that an offence has been committed. In a case where a search had been carried out in disregard of the provisions of ss. 25 and 30 of the Arms Act it was held that though the search was illegal, the person found in possession of the arms could still be convicted. [Kutroo v. Emperor (3)] There is no reason in these circumstances for interfering with the conviction. The sentence is not excessive. The application is dismissed.

Sessions trial—Judge's charge to Jury—Heads of charge, contents of—Several accused—Duty of Judge—Defence evidence, part of, not placed before Jury, effect of—Earliest version of prosecution case, importance of—Evidence Act (I of 1872), ss. 6, 8, 45, 47, 73, 154—Res gestæ, what is—Statement influencing conduct of witness, admissibility of—Handwriting, proof of—Comparison with admitted handwriting, whether to be made by Jury—Cross-examination of party's own witness, effect of—Permission, when to be granted.

The object of a summing up under s. 297, Cr. P. C., is to enable the Judge to place before the Jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise for their consideration. [p. 444, col. 2.]

It is not the province of the Judge to find the facts for the Jury and then make an attempt to persuade them to accept his conclusions as correct. [p. 445, col. 2.]

A Judge's charge to the Jury must be recorded in such a way as would enable the High Court sitting as a Court of Appeal to judge whether the facts and circumstances of the case had been properly placed before the Jury and also whether the law had been correctly explained to them. [p. 448, col. 2.]

A mere statement in the heads of charge that the Judge explained certain sections of the Penal Code to the Jury does not satisfy the above requirement. [ibid.]

Where several accused persons are being jointly tried and the case as against all of them does not stand on the same footing and their defences are also different, the Judge must ask the Jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually. The Judge's failure to do so is a very serious omission and is likely to prejudice the accused persons. [p. 447, col. 1.]

A verdict obtained from the Jury without placing before them an important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot be sustained. [p. 448, col. 2.]

The earliest version of an occurrence as given by an informant or prosecutor who is the principal witness to the occurrence, and on whose testimony practically the whole case depends, must always be placed before the Jury in order to enable them to judge of the truth or falsity of the prosecution case. [p. 447, col. 2.]

When a witness who has been called by the prosecution is permitted to be cross-examined on behalf of the prosecution under the provisions of s. 154 of the Evidence Act, the result of that course being permitted is to discredit that witness altogether and not merely to get rid of a part of his testimony, so that the accused is deprived of the benefit of any statement which the witness may have made in his favour. For this reason the law has enacted that a party desiring to cross-examine its own witness has to take the permission of the Court, implying thereby that there is a discretion in the Court whether it would permit the witness to be cross-examined or not. That discretion must always be exercised with caution by the Court before which the matter comes up for consideration. [p. 446, col. 1.]

What a person states at the time of an occurrence in respect of the occurrence itself is res gestæ under s. 6 of the Evidence Act. A statement, however, made at the time of an occurrence relating to a previous occurrence which took place a year earlier is not part of the res gestæ and is not admissible in evidence. [p. 446, col. 1.]

A statement made by a person, who is not examined as a witness, is not admissible under s. 8 of the Evidence Act as having affected the conduct of a witness assuming that such conduct is relevant. [p. 448, col. 1.]

A party wishing to prove that a document is in the handwriting of a particular person can rely upon expert evidence under s. 45 of the Evidence Act, or the opinion of a competent witness under s. 47 of the Act, or direct comparison of the document with proved or admitted documents under s. 73 of the Act. [p. 449, col. 2.]

When an accused person puts forward in his defence a letter alleged to have been written by the prosecutor and the latter denies the fact, and the accused requests the Court to compare the handwriting of the letter with the handwriting of documents admittedly written by the prosecutor, the Judge must place the documents before the Jury and ask them to make the comparison and decide whether the handwritings do or do not tally. [p. 450, col. 1.]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Rungpur.

Messrs. S. K. Sen, Wahed Hossein, Babus Pramatha Lall Dutt, Jnan Chandra Roy and Benoyendra Prosad Bagchi, for the Appellants.

Mr. A. K. Basu, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—The three appellants, that is to say, No. 1 Khijiruddin Sonar, No. 2 Nawabali Sheikh and No. 3 Qamruzzaman (alias Quamarulzaman) were tried by the Sessions Judge of Rungpur with the aid of a Jury. The Jury were divided in the proportion of four to one. The majority convicted the appellants in respect of the charges on which they were tried, viz., Nos. 1 and 2 under ss. 364, 344 and 120-B and No. 3 under ss. 364, 342 and 120-B. The learned Judge accepting the verdict convicted the appellants of the said offences and sentenced the appellant No. 1 to rigorous imprisonment for ten years under s. 366, Indian Penal Code and to rigorous imprisonment for three years under s. 344, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run consecutively; the appellant No. 2 to rigorous imprisonment for three years under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, and to rigorous imprisonment for one year under s. 344, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run concurrently; and the appellant No. 3 to rigorous imprisonment for five years under s. 366, Indian Penal Code, and to rigorous imprisonment for one year under s. 342, Indian Penal Code, the sentences to run concurrently. No separate sentence was passed for the offence under s. 120-B, Indian Penal Code.

It is not necessary to set out in detail the case for the prosecution upon which the trial was held, for it is to be found narrated in sufficient detail in the learned Judge's charge to the Jury. Shortly stated, the prosecution case was that a girl Suhasini was abducted by the first two appellants some time in February 1923 from Gaibandha where she used to reside with her parents, that thereafter she managed to escape from the custody of the appellant No. 1 some time in March 1923 when she was again abducted by the appellant No. 1 from a Railway Station called Trimohini. After the second abduction, the case for the prosecution is, the girl remained with the appellant No. 1 for about a year, highly speaking from March 1923 till March 1924. The prosecution case further is that after she had succeeded in escaping from the custody of the appellant No. 1 in March 1924 she was again abducted at Gaibandha by the three appellants acting in conspiracy with each other. She was thereafter detained, according to the case for the prosecution, in the house of the appellant No. 3 for about a day wherefrom she was removed to the house of the appellant No. 1 where she was detained for a period over ten days. According to the prosecution case she was recovered from the house of appellant No. 1 on execution of a warrant issued by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Gaibandha who had in the meantime received an anonymous letter informing him about the abduction. She is said to have been recovered as aforesaid on the 6th of April 1924.

The defences of the three appellants are not exactly the same. But it is unnecessary to set out the defences here, because the learned Judge in his charge to the Jury has given a substantially correct synopsis of the different defences of the three appellants.

Various points have been argued before us on behalf of the appellants by Mr. Sen who has appeared on behalf of the appellant No. 3 and by Mr. Wahed Hossain who has appeared on behalf of the first two appellants. Mr. Basu has appeared on behalf of the Crown. It will not be possible within the short space of this judgment to deal with all the points that have been urged in this appeal. These points vary in the degree of their strength, some being points of very great importance and substance, other apparently appear to be well-founded but have been successfully met by Mr. Basu and others again rest upon very slender basis or upon materials which when examined do not afford any real support. It would only be possible to refer to some of the salient features of the case and a few only of the grounds which to us appear to be of importance.

Before dealing with the points I desire to make a few observations as to the general character of the learned Judge's charge to the Jury. Section 297, Cr. P. C., enjoins that when the case for the defence and the prosecutor's reply, if any, are concluded the Court shall proceed to charge the Jury, summing up the evidence for the prosecution and defence and laying down the law by which the Jury are to be guided. The object of a summing up under that section is to enable the Judge to place before the Jury the facts and circumstances of the case both for and against the prosecution so as to help them in arriving at a right decision upon the points which arise for their consideration. If that be the object with which s. 297 of the Cr. P. C. was enacted I must say that in this particular case that object has not been fulfilled but rather frustrated by the way in which the learned Judge charged the Jury. The heads of charge recorded by the learned Judge read more like a judgment or a speech of a prosecuting Counsel than a summing up of the case as required under the law. Even as a judgment it lacks in sobriety and there is in it a want of a judicial equanimity which is the very essence of a judgment in a trial. As a speech of a prosecuting Counsel it is open to the comment that it uses language which in some instances may be said to overstep the legitimate bounds of advocacy.

I refer to a few instances only. In dealing with the witnesses who are said to have deposed in connection with the occurrence that took place at the Trimohini Railway Station the learned Judge told the Jury that those witnesses had acted selfishly and were morally and legally and on their own showing guilty of abetting a villanous crime and that in his experience he had never come across a more contemptible pair of cowards or one more selfishly deaf to the common claims of humanity. This is not my language but the language of the learned Judge. The learned Judge characterised Banamali and Biseswar while narrating what they did at the Gaibandha Railway Station as a precious pair of poltroons, the evidence of the Sub-Assistant Surgeon of Gaibandha as shilly-shallying evidence, and as the evidence of a witness who showed a more than usual tendency to hedge and play for safety in giving his opinion. When putting the evidence of the Sub Assistant Surgeon in contrast with that of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate he exhorted them with an amount of vigour which is apparent on the face of the charge: he told them that it would not be difficult for them to decide which of the two opinions was the more entitled to respect. This is not all. The learned Judge presented too forcibly before the Jury those aspects of the defence case which would appeal to them as most revolting. The defence which the appellants had seriously put forward before the Court was unquestionably worthy of consideration whatever might have been its worth. The learned Judge told the Jury that if they were to give effect to the defence put forward by Khijiruddin they would have to hold that the girl had done an act which was doubly bigamous and adulterous and which was in defiance of law, custom, religion and morality. A part of the defence of the appellant No. 1 was characterized as having been rather mistily adumbrated. When referring to the fact that there was no evidence in support of the defence which the appellant No. 1 had taken to the effect that he had been married to the girl the learned Judge instead of telling the Jury that it is no part of the duty of the accused person to adduce any evidence in his defence if he does not wish to do so and that the Jury were not entitled to draw any inference from this omission on the part of the accused, went on asking them to take into their serious consideration the fact that the defence had not suggested any answer to some of the prosecution arguments and that they had not given any evidence. He called the Policemen who are said to have been with the appellant No. 3 his henchmen and throughout the charge referred to the acts alleged to have been done by the appellants as partaking of the character of criminal acts. He asked the Jury to consider whether the version given by the defence was one that a person of ordinary prudence and sanity could reasonably accept as true. It is unnecessary to refer to other passages of the learned Judge's charge to the Jury; but, as I have already said, if the object of summing up is to assist the Jury in arriving at their decision this charge instead of helping them informing their own decision impressed the Judge's conclusions indelibly on their minds and gave them no option but to arrive at a decision which the Judge himself had arrived at, namely, that the accused were guilty and that there was no substance in the defence put forward by them. The learned Judge found the facts for the Jury and made a laboured attempt in order to persuade them to accept his conclusions as correct.

Turning now to the points which have been specifically taken on behalf of the appellants there are some which deserve special mention.

The first objection taken to the trial held is to the effect that evidence had been admitted which was not admissible in law. This objection relates to three different matters. The first item to which this objection relates is with regard to Exs. 13 and 13-A. Exhibit 13 is the evidence of prosecution witness No. 11, Jogesh Chandra De as given before the Assistant Sessions Judge in a previous trial of appellants Nos. 1 and 2 the subject-matter of which trial was the two earlier occurrences of abduction, namely, the one which took place at Gaibandha and the other which took place at the Trimohini Railway Station. Exhibit 13-A is the deposition of the same witness before the Committing Magistrate in the course of the commitment enquiry preliminary to the said trial. The circumstances under which these two depositions came to be admitted in the present trial are these: In the course of his evidence in the present trial, the witness made a statement to the effect that at a time when Khijiruddin asserted that he had lawfully married Suhasini, the latter remained silent. This the witness said in his examination-in-chief. The accused declined to cross-examine him. Thereupon certain questions were put to this witness by the Foreman of the Jury. Thereafter the prosecution again examined this witness-in-chief and in the course of this further examination questions were put to the witness by the prosecution in order to bring out the fact that in his depositions as given before the Assistant Sessions Judge in the previous trial as also before the Committing Magistrate in the commitment enquiry which preceded that trial he had made statements which would go to show that the girl was trembling, obviously meaning that even if she had a desire to protest it was not possible for her to do so in the circumstances in which she was at the time. The learned Judge allowed these questions, which were questions in the nature of cross-examination, to be put to the witness. After these questions had been answered the prosecution was permitted to put in the depositions of this witness to which I have referred and they were marked as Exs. 13 and 13-A in the case. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Crown urges that the reception of this evidence, even if it be held that it was inadmissible, did not prejudice the accused persons. With this argument I am unable to agree. The accused undoubtedly must have been prejudiced and for two reasons. When a witness who has been called by the prosecution is permitted to be cross-examined on behalf of the prosecution under the provisions of s. 154 of the Evidence Act, the result of that course being permitted is to discredit that witness altogether and not merely to get rid of a part of his testimony. [Lord Campbell, C. J., in Faulkner v. Brine (1)]. This has been held in a good number of cases in this country as well, amongst which reference may be made to two, namely, the case of Luchiram Motilal v. Radha Charan Poddar (2) and the case of Emperor v. Satyendra Kumar Dutt Chowdhury (3). The net result of allowing these questions to be put by the prosecution was to deprive the accused of the benefit which might accrue to them from any statement which the witness might have made in favour of the accused and which the defence could have availed of if the witness had not been allowed to be cross-examined by the prosecution. For this reason the law has enacted that the party desiring to cross-examine its own witness has to take the permission of the Court, implying thereby that there is a discretion in the Court whether it would permit the witness to be cross-examined or not. That discretion has always to be exercised with caution by the Court before which the matter comes up for consideration. In this instance it does not appear that any permission was sought for or was given. The result of the procedure adopted was to deprive the accused of the benefit of any statement which the witness may have made in their favour. That is one of the reasons why this procedure should not have been allowed. If, however, this was not the intention of the prosecution but their only object was to show that the witness had merely omitted to mention the fact in the present trial but had spoken about it consistently before and should, therefore, be relied upon, then it amounts to this that they wanted to get rid of a part of the testimony of the witness and were relying upon the earlier statement as a piece of substantive evidence in the case which however they cannot be permitted to do. The earlier statements cannot be let in under s. 157 of the Evidence Act as there is nothing in the deposition of the witness in the present trial which may be corroborated by these earlier statements. Moreover there is hardly any justification for the whole of the depositions being brought as evidence in the present record, and the Jury were not directed as to how they were to deal with this evidence. It is true, as the learned Counsel for the Crown has urged that there is enough other evidence which if believed would indicate that there was no marriage between the appellant No. 1 and the girl. But that is a matter as to the weight of evidence which does not concern us, nor it did concern the learned Judge. It was a matter entirely for the Jury.

The next item to which this objection relates is Ex. 14 which is the deposition of Suhasini given by her in the trial before the Assistant Sessions Judge. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Crown urges that in view of the cross-examination of Suhasini it was necessary for the prosecution to put this evidence in. While I can see that it was necessary for the prosecution to put in particular passages from out of this deposition in order to rebut the suggestions which were being made on behalf of the defence that certain statements which were made in the present trial had not been made by the witness in the previous trial, I do not see why it would be necessary to put the whole of the deposition of the witness as given in the previous trial for the purpose of corroborating the witness in the evidence which she has given in the present trial. If it be that any suggestion was made in the course of the cross-examination to the effect that the witness had made a particular statement in the previous trial which as a matter of fact the witness did not make in that trial and that suggestion was not correct, the proper course for the learned Judge was to have disallowed the question. The whole of the deposition is sometimes admitted for the sake of convenience. But the whole of the deposition cannot be used for any purpose in connection with a matter like this and only particular passages which are relevant may be used by the Jury. It does not however appear whether the whole of the deposition as contained in Ex. 14 was read out to the Jury or not and I am, therefore, not in a position to say how far the reception of this deposition as evidence has prejudiced the accused persons.

The third objection under this head relates to the statement recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate in the course of the enquiry which he held on receipt of the anonymous letter. The point urged on behalf of the defence in this connection is that Exs. 5 and 6 the statements made by Krishna Das Banik and Jogesh Chandra De recorded by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate were inadmissible in evidence in the present trial. The learned Counsel for the Crown has urged that these statements were recorded by an authority competent to investigate into the facts and they could be admitted under the provisions of s. 157 of the Indian Evidence Act. I do not see any particular objection to these statements, although I must say that the learned Judge should have either at the time when these statements were admitted or when charging the Jury told them definitely the purpose for which these statements were admitted in the case.

The second ground urged on behalf of the appellants is to the effect that the statement of Suhasini made by her on the 7th of April 1924, before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate and which has been marked in the present trial as Ex. 4 in the case was not brought to the notice of the Jury by the learned Judge in the course of this summing up. This, in my opinion, is a serious omission. In that statement is to be found the earliest version of the occurrence as given by Suhasini, and it was obligatory on the part of the learned Judge to draw the attention of the Jury to that statement so that they might judge whether the case as against the appellant No. 3 particularly and probably the case against the other appellants as well had not been developed gradually and whether facts and circumstances were subsequently alleged against them which had not been stated by the witness in her first statement before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate. The learned Counsel for the Crown has urged that even before the girl made her statement before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate there were other materials existing from before in which it was mentioned that all the accused persons were concerned in the offence, e. g., the anonymous letter Ex. 1 which the Magistrate had received on the 30th March 1924. He has also drawn our attention to the other pieces of evidence, for instance the evidence of the Sub-Divisional Officer, and the evidence of Bisweswar prosecution witness No. 7 and of the girl herself which, if believed, would go to show that the present story of the girl was the story given to the authorities before there was any chance of the girl being tutored. That may be so, but then it was a matter entirely for the Jury to consider and the accused had a right that this piece of evidence, Ex. 4, which was in their favour was properly placed before the Jury in order that they might have given it a proper consideration. The earliest version of the occurrence as given by an informant or prosecutrix who is the principal witness to the occurrence, and on whose testimony practically the whole case depends, has always to be placed before the Jury in order to judge of the truth or falsity of the prosecution case.

The third objection relates to a still more serious matter. The father of the girl Bonomali was not examined as a witness in the case. His son-in-law, P. W. No. 7, Bisweswar, in the course of his examination-in-chief was allowed to state that he and his father-in-law, Bonomali, were in the station platform when the voice of the accused Nos. 1 and 2 or rather of some persons was heard. Bonomali got up hurriedly and said "Bisweswar, destruction has come about. Those ruffians who a year ago took away Suhasini have again come. Let us be off, caste and honour are at stake." Although Bonomali was not examined as a witness, through the mouth of P. W. No. 7 this statement was brought on the record. The learned Counsel for the Crown says that this evidence is relevant under the provisions of ss. 6 and 8 of the Evidence Act—under s. 6 of the Evidence Act as part of the res gestæ and under s. 8 of the Evidence Act as explaining the conduct of Bisweswar in his leaving the place and running away with Bonomali. I am of opinion that the statement is wholly inadmissible and that neither s. 6 nor s. 8 of the Evidence Act would justify the reception of this evidence. What Bonomali told at the time of the occurrence in respect of the occurrence itself is res gestæ under s. 6 of the Evidence Act. But his statement which was with regard to an event which took place a year ago and which was meant to convey that the accused persons who were there had taken away Suhasini by force a year ago would not be part of res gestæ but related to an altogether different transaction separated by a sufficiently long interval of time and by no stretch of imagination would the area of events which may be taken as covering the res gestæ of the present occurrence extend to what happened in the earlier occurrence. Section 6 of the Evidence Act, therefore, would not help the prosecution. As regards s. 8 of the Evidence Act I am exceedingly doubtful whether the conduct of Bisweswar was a relevant fact in the present trial, but assuming that it was, any statement made by Bonomali which would affect the conduct of Bisweswar when Bonomali was not examined would be purely hearsay evidence and would not come under s. 8 of the Evidence Act. I am clearly of opinion that the reception of this evidence prejudiced the accused very seriously, for although Bonomali was not a witness, we have on the record a statement of Bonomali which contradicts and gives a direct denial to the main defence of the appellants which is to the effect that the girl had been made over by Bonomali to the appellant No. 1 and had been married to him. Even if there was nothing else in the case and if this was the only objection taken on behalf of the appellants I should have been prepared to upset their convictions.

The fourth objection relates also to a matter of similar importance. It is to the effect that the personal diary of the Sub-Inspector the appellant No. 3 which was proved by the prosecution and marked as Ex. 10 in the case was not put before the Jury at all by the learned Judge. This diary, it is said by the prosecution, contains an interpolation and, therefore, is a piece of evidence which if put before the Jury might have gone against the defence. Assuming for a moment that there is an interpolation in that diary and that an inference adverse to the appellant No. 3 may be drawn from that interpolation, still according to the case for the defence the diary contains statement recorded by the Sub-Inspector of his own movement and conduct in connection with this case recorded at a time when there was not the slightest indication that any case would be started against him with regard to the occurrence. The Sub-Inspector might well say that this diary contains a true account of what he had done on that occasion. It was absolutely necessary for the learned Judge, if he wanted to put before the Jury the facts and circumstances in favour of the defence, as he should have done, to place the personal diary of the Sub-Inspector, Ex. 10, before the Jury. The fact that the prosecution challenged the authenticity of that diary as containing an interpolation and that they pointed out other circumstances which might indicate that it should not be relied upon did not justify the learned Judge in withholding it entirely from the Jury. A verdict obtained from the Jury without placing before them this important piece of evidence in favour of the defence, whatever may have been its real worth, cannot, in my opinion, possibly be sustained.

The next objection relates to the way in which the learned Judge has recorded in his charge to the Jury as to how he had explained the law. The learned Judge states in the heads of charge that he explained certain sections of the Indian Penal Code. But there is nothing to indicate what he stated to the Jury or how he explained the different elements constituting the offences. It is urged on behalf of the prosecution that in the heads of charge it is not necessary for the learned Judge to record in full what he actually told the Jury and that furthermore the sections of the Indian Penal Code under which the accused persons were tried were not so complicated as to necessitate a record of what the learned Judge might have said to the Jury in explaining the law. It is true that it is not in every case that the Judge is bound to state in his charge how he explained the law to the Jury. But in a series of decisions of this Court it has been laid down that the charge must be recorded in such a way as would enable this Court sitting as a Court of Appeal to judge whether the facts and circumstances of the case had been properly placed before the Jury and also whether the law has been correctly explained. I shall refer to a few of such cases. One of them is the case of Panchu

Das v. Emperor (4) where it has been laid down that it is not only desirable but necessary that the charge should be recorded in an intelligible form and with sufficient fulness to satisfy the Appellate Court that all points of law arising in the case were clearly and correctly explained to the Jury. Reference may also be made to the case of Abbas Peada v. Queen-Empress (5) and the case of Hemanta Kumar Pathak v. Emperor (6). In the present case where there was a charge under s. 120-B of the Indian Penal Code and there was a question as to the bona fides or otherwise on the part of the appellant No. 3 as also various other questions of fact it was absolutely necessary to record the charge in such a way as would have enabled this Court to ascertain whether the law has been properly explained to the Jury or not in relation to the facts of this particular case and also whether the facts in so far as they bear upon the elements necessary to constitute the offences were properly explained to the Jury or not.

The next objection relates to the procedure that was adopted by the learned Judge under the provisions of s. 73 of the Evidence Act. It appears that certain letters were produced on behalf of the defence and it was alleged on behalf of the defence that these letters were written by the girl Suhasini. The letters were not proved as having been written or signed by Suhasini. The defence thereupon asked the learned Judge to proceed under the provisions of s. 73 of the Evidence Act and to have the handwriting of the girl taken in Court so that the writing in the letters might be compared with the handwriting of the girl taken in Court and also with her admitted or proved writings and signatures. This procedure was adopted by the learned Judge. But from the two orders which the learned Judge recorded, one on the 4th of March 1925 and the other on the 5th March 1925 it appears that all that was placed before the Jury were the signatures of the girl as contained in those letters and some admitted signatures of hers. It does not at all appear whether the Jury were asked to compare the handwriting of the girl as alleged to have been contained in the letters with what she had written in Court under the Court's direction. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the Crown urged that so long as the letters were not proved it would not have been proper for the learned Judge to have put these letters before the Jury and the question whether the letters were admissible or not was a question for the Judge and not for the Jury to decide and inasmuch as the learned Judge thought that it had not been proved that the letters had been written by the girl it was not necessary for him to place those letters before the Jury in order to get their opinion whether the letters were written by the girl or not. With all deference to the arguments of the learned Counsel in this respect I am not prepared to agree with this contention of his. The defence in order to use these letters as evidence in their favour had to prove that the letters had been written by the girl. For this purpose they could rely upon expert evidence under s. 45 of the Evidence Act or the opinion of a competent witness under s. 47 of the Act or direct comparison of the letters with proved or admitted documents under s. 73 of the Act. This comparison has to be made by the Court or by a witness called for the purpose. If the defence had succeeded in proving by other evidence that the letters had actually been written by the girl there was no point in making the comparison. It is only where such evidence is not available and where although the handwriting in the letters had not been proved by independent evidence to have been the handwriting of the girl that it is necessary to have recourse to the provisions of s. 73 of the Evidence Act to see whether by comparison it can be determined whether the letters were written by the girl or not. The issue before the Court in a case like this is whether the girl had written the letters. Taylor in his Book on Evidence says—"It further appears that any person whose handwriting is in dispute, and who is present in Court, may be required by the Judge to write in his presence, and that such writing may be compared with the document in question. Moreover in all cases of comparison of handwriting the witnesses, the Jury and the Court may respectively exercise their judgment on the resemblance of the writings produced, with respect to the general character of the handwriting, the form of the letters, the orthography of the words and the style of the composition and also on the fact of one or more of the documents being written in a feigned hand." The result of this comparison is the determination of an issue arising in the case and is quite distinct from the determination of the question of admissibility or otherwise of evidence, which latter is within the province of the Judge alone. Therefore, the learned Judge in not placing before the Jury and in not asking them to compare with the writing in the letters the handwriting taken in Court omitted to give the accused persons an opportunity of getting an opinion of the Jury on the question as to whether the letters were really written by the girl or not.

A further objection appears on the face of the charge and that is to the effect that although there were three accused persons and the case as against all the three did not stand on the same footing the learned Judge nowhere asked the Jury to consider the case as against each of the accused individually. This, in my opinion, is also a very serious omission and is likely to have prejudiced the accused persons, having regard to their defences which were not similar but different.

These are some of the more important objections which have been taken to the learned Judge's charge to the Jury in this case, and in the face of these objections I am not prepared to hold either that the accused had a fair trial or that there was a proper summing up. In my opinion, therefore, the verdict of the Jury should be set aside and the convictions of and the sentences passed upon the appellants on the basis of that verdict should also be quashed.

The question then arises as to whether there should be a re-trial of this case or not. The learned Counsel appearing on behalf of the appellant No. 3 has strenuously urged that in view of certain facts which he has placed before us and also of certain circumstances which may lend support to his argument to the effect that the appellant No. 3 acted bona fide it is not necessary for us to send the case back for re-trial at least so far as the appellant No. 3 is concerned. We have carefully considered the matter. We do not express any opinion on the merits of the case but in view of the evidence on the record we are not prepared to say that this is a case in which we can substitute our own opinion for the verdict of the Jury and we accordingly order that the case against all the three accused should be tried again.

A further question then arises and that is as to where the case should be tried. It is quite clear that in view of the nature of the case, the allegations made on behalf of the respective parties, the length of time that has elapsed since the case was instituted, the fact that the case has been widely talked about and has been discussed in the columns of newspapers and that there has been some agitation over the case in certain quarters, an atmosphere of prejudice has been created locally and possibly in some of the neighbouring districts. It is, therefore, highly desirable that the case should be tried elsewhere that at Rangpur in order that the accused should have a fair and impartial trial. The accused persons desire that the case be tried at Dinajpore and we think that it would be right to accede to their prayer in this respect. We accordingly direct that the re-trial ordered above do take place in the Court of Sessions at Dinajpur.

The accused will remain on bail pending their re-trial.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 209—Inquiry before commitment—Discharge of accused—Subsidiary witnesses not examined, effect of.

When a Committing Magistrate finds that the prosecution evidence is totally unworthy of credit it is his duty to discharge the accused. [p. 451, col. 1.]

Where all the material evidence has been heard and disbelieved, an order of discharge passed by a Committing Magistrate should not be set aside merely because there were one or two subsidiary witnesses who might have been called but whose evidence was not recorded. [ibid.]

Criminal revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Almora, dated the 20th of August 1925.

Mr. S. B. Johari, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application for revision of an order discharging the accused in a charge triable by the Sessions Court. An application in revision was made to the District Magistrate who rejected it. The history of the case is this. The Magistrate who heard it after hearing witnesses under s. 202 originally came to the conclusion that the complaint was groundless and dismissed it under s. 203, Cr. P. C. On application being made to him the District Magistrate directed a further inquiry. The Deputy Magistrate then made a full inquiry and after examining witnesses at length and taking the statements of the accused again came to the conclusion that the charge was false. He accordingly discharged the accused. It is said that in doing so he was usurping the functions of the Sessions Judge, but even in the authority relied on by the applicant, namely, In re Bai Parvati (1) it is laid down that when a Committing Magistrate finds that the prosecution evidence is totally unworthy of credit it is his duty to discharge the accused. The ruling of this Court in Ganpat Lal v. Emperor (2) is to the same effect.

A further complaint is made that all the evidence was not recorded. Only one witness has been mentioned, and it appears from the District Magistrate's order that he was not re-examined. Where all the material evidence has been heard and disbelieved I am not prepared to set aside the order merely because there were one or two subsidiary witnesses who might have been called but whose evidence was not recorded. I find no reason to interfere and I dismiss the application.

CRIMINAL REVISION PETITION No. 634
OF 1925.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 302, 304, 323—Blow struck with heavy weapon—Disappearance of person struck—Offence.

Accused struck his brother's widow with a heavy moosal, felled her to the ground, and then dragged her into the house after which no trace of her could be discovered.

Held, that in the absence of definite evidence that the woman had died and that her death was due to the blow which the accused dealt her, the accused could not be convicted of an offence either under s. 302 or under s. 304 of the Penal Code and that at the most he was guilty of an offence under s. 323 of the Penal Code. [p 452, col 1]

Petition, for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Karnal, dated the 26th March 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Rohtak, dated the 16th March 1925.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant, Bhola, was convicted by M. Abdul Aziz, Magistrate First Class, with s. 30 powers, Rohtak, under s. 304-II of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment. His appeal to the learned Sessions Judge of Karnal was dismissed and the sentence upheld. Hence this petition for revision to this Court. A learned Judge of this Court, while admitting the petition for revision to a hearing, directed notice to be issued calling upon the applicant to show cause why he should not be convicted under s. 302 of the Indian Penal Code and why the sentence should not be enhanced.

The case for the prosecution was that on or about the 21st of November 1924 the appellant struck his brother's widow, Musammatt Lachmi, with a heavy moosal and that she fell down and was dragged into the house. After that no trace of her was found. The occurrence was seen by Ramji Lal and Jug Lal prosecution witnesses who have given evidence in this case. In addition to their evidence there is also the evidence of a nine years old boy named Pirthi son of the deceased who has deposed that since that day his mother had not been traced and that his uncle had been telling him that she had gone to a village and would be returning soon. He has further deposed that on the evening of the day of occurrence he had seen his mother lying in the house and that she had not spoken to him when called. Balram Zaildar has deposed that a pit was discovered in the village from which foul smell had been coming indicating that some corpse had been concealed therein. No dead body, however, was found. As the dead body of the woman was not found there was no medical examination and so there is no evidence as to the nature of the injury caused by the blow given with the moosal and further naturally there is no direct evidence that the woman had actually been killed or had died. The defence tried to make out that for certain reasons she had run away. The Magistrate has further relied on the circumstances that although the woman was the wife of Nagar, brother of the petitioner, no search appears to have been made for her.

The question to be decided is whether the above evidence is sufficient to support the conviction under s. 301 II of the Indian Penal Code. I am of opinion that the necessary facts to bring the case under the above section have not been established by the evidence for the prosecution. At the most he can be convicted of causing simple hurt under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code. No doubt the probability was that she had died in consequence of the injury received from the blow of the moosal, but in the absence of medical evidence it cannot be said that there is any proof of it. There is a good deal of room for conjecture and speculation, but conjecture is no proof. I am, therefore, constrained to hold that the guilt of the accused under s. 302 II of the Indian Penal Code has not been established.

I, therefore, set aside the conviction and sentence under that section and in lieu of it convict him under s. 323 of the Indian Penal Code and sentence him to one year's rigorous imprisonment.

Z. K.

Order accordingly.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 133 to 143, 202—U. P. Village Panchayat Act (VI of 1920), s. 72—Power to make local enquiry—Obstruction case—Procedure.

A Magistrate is competent under s. 72 of the U. P. Village Panchayat Act to make a local enquiry into an offence or charge covered by s. 202, Cr. P. C. But in a case where the question to be determined is whether any unlawful obstruction has or has not been made over a public pathway or other public place, he should follow the procedure laid down by ss. 133 to 143, Cr. P. C., and base his decision on the evidence adduced and not act outside such evidence solely on the report of the panches or on their local investigation.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 22nd May 1925.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—Alongside a small public lane Kadhori has a house, and opposite that house stands the house of Mata Din. The house of Mata Din had a chabutra in front of it which he is said to have extended. Kadhori has also built a shop, which, according to his allegation, was built in the place of an old chapper, and according to Mata Din on the land forming part of the lane or pathway. The effect of these two constructions, it is stated, was that the lane was considerably narrowed. The Trying Magistrate found that both these constructions were encroachments newly made on the land and directed both of them to be removed. The evidence produced by Kadhori to show that he had built the shop on the site of an old chapper appears to have been disbelieved. Certain panches were asked by the Magistrate to make a local investigation and their report was that the shop had been newly built on land which formed a part of the lane or public pathway. The Magistrate examined Tewari Sheocharan Lal, the Sarpanch, who is also an Honorary Magistrate, and acting on the report of the panches he directed the removal of both the constructions.

The procedure adopted by the learned Magistrate was somewhat irregular. He had power under s. 72 of the U. P. Village Panchayat Act, VI of 1920, to make a local enquiry into an offence or charge covered by s. 202, Cr. P. C., but in a case like the present he had to follow the procedure laid down by ss. 133 to 143 of the Code and determine on the evidence adduced whether any unlawful obstruction had been made over a public pathway or other public place. He could not have acted outside such evidence solely on the report of the panches or on their local investigation to determine whether any old chapper existed in the place where the shop had been built and, if not, how far the encroachment extended. Beyond verifying his report Tewari Sheocharan Lal does not say whether he had any personal knowledge about the matter.

The case is, therefore, sent back to the Trying Magistrate with a direction to enquire afresh into the matter from the stage up to which the enquiry had last proceeded, and to determine how far the land or public pathway extended, and whether the encroachments had been newly made thereon, so as to obstruct the pathway and whether the public had suffered in consequence.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 162—Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 165—Statement made to Police, admissibility of—Judge, power of, to question Investigating Officer—Jury trial—Admissibility of evidence—Duty of Judge.

The power conferred upon a Judge under s. 165 of the Evidence Act cannot be exercised for the purpose of introducing evidence in contravention of the law. [1 153, col 2.]

Under s. 162, Cr. P. C., statements made to a Police Officer are prohibited from being used for any purpose save as provided in the section; and there is no provision for allowing the Judge to use such statements for confronting the witnesses with them. To use the statements for this purpose is to contravene the provisions of s. 162 of the Code. [ibid.]

In introducing evidence in a trial by Jury the Judge must be very careful in order to avoid miscarriage of justice. [p 454, col 2]

Criminal appeal against an order of the Sessions Judge, Rajshahi.

Babus Debendra Narain Bhattacharjee and Satindra Nath Mukherjee, for the Appellants.

Mr. Khondkar, Deputy Legal Remembrancer, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This case* came up once previously before this Court on which occasion the conviction of the appellants was set aside and the case sent back for re-trial on the ground of erroneous admission of inadmissible evidence. The Court gave also certain directions as regard the framing of charges on the re trial. On this occasion also the appellants have been convicted on the unanimous verdict of the Jury under s. 366 and 376, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment, each under each section, the sentences to run concurrently.

On behalf of the appellants it has been contended by their learned Vakil that the present trial has also been vitiated on account of the use made by the Sessions Judge of the statements made by witnesses to the Police Officer during the course of investigation under Ch. XIV, Cr. P. C., in contravention of s. 162 of the Code. The learned Judge was of opinion that he was entitled to put question with regard to those statements in the exercise of the power conferred upon him by s. 165 of the Indian Evidence Act in the order to show that the witnesses had made contradictory statements to the Police Officer and before the Court. We have no doubt that the Judge was clearly wrong in making such use of the statements. The power conferred on the Judge under s. 165, Evidence Act, cannot be exercised for the purpose of introducing evidence in contravention of the law. The last para. of s. 2 of the Evidence Act leaves the provisions of the Cr. P. C. unaffected. Under s. 162, Cr. P. C., statements made to a Police Officer are prohibited from being used for any purpose save as provided in the section; and there is no provision for allowing the Judge to use such statements for confronting the witnesses with them. To use the statements for this purpose was to contravene the provisions of s. 162 of the Code. The learned Deputy Legal Remembrancer is unable to support the procedure adopted by the Sessions Judge.

The use of which the learned Vakil complains is primarily that of the statements made by Sukhlal (P. W. No. 13) to the Police Officer which was introduced with the evidence by a question put to the Sub-Inspector by the Judge, that on the night of the occurrence Joyhari and Kailash came to the witness and informed him that Belat, Keramat (the two appellants before us) and a few others had forceably taken away Adhar's wife from Adhar's bari, while he stated in Court that on the night of the occurrence Kailash and Jaihari came to him and said that they suspected Belat and Keramat of having taken away the woman. It is contended that this has occasioned a failure of justice, for if the Jury thought that Sukhlal was a truthful witness in the absence of this contradiction, the verdict might have been in favour of the accused. It is urged that the verdict must, therefore, be set aside and the case sent back for fresh trial. We are not prepared to accept this contention. The statement was with regard to such an unimportant matter and had such a remote bearing on the question in issue, and the contradiction not being at all vital. We are unable to hold that the admission of the evidence could have affected the verdict of the Jury in any way. Jaihari and Kailash were not eye witnesses to the occurrence. They only purported to state what they had heard from another witness Radhapyari. Whether they stated that the accused had committed the act or that they had been suspected to have done that act on the night of the occurrence seems to have a very little bearing on the positive evidence given as to the occurrence itself.

It is next urged that Sukhlal had given evidence that Binodini had immoral relations with the appellant Belat and that if this witness had been believed the verdict would have been otherwise. We are unable to accept this contention also for assuming that Binodini was a woman of immoral character, there was no reason whatsoever for her leaving her home for the whole night and leaving a child five months old uncared for as there was nothing to prevent her from carrying on the intrigue in the manner as was suggested she used to do before the day of occurrence; nor is there any reason why she should have been found next morning at a distance from the village attempting to find her way home, in the condition in which the witnesses depose to have seen her hair dishevelled, eyes blood-shot and her body and cloth all muddy. There is no doubt, therefore, that she did not leave her home with the object of keeping an assignation even assuming that Sukhlal's evidence is true. But against this man's evidence, which is merely hearsay, there is the evidence of a large number of co-villagers who swore that Binodini was of good character, and we have no doubt that the suggestion as to her bad character is unfounded. On the whole we are unable to hold that there has been any failure of justice on account of the erroneous proceeding of the Judge. In this view we are not disposed to reverse the verdict of the Jury.

Before parting with this case, we must express our regret that the Sessions Judge has committed this lamentable error which was due to his not considering the recent amendments of the Code more carefully. This has caused us a great deal of trouble and much waste of time and might have caused further waste of public time and money and also harassment of witnesses if we had found it necessary to reverse the verdict of the Jury and direct fresh re-trial. The course adopted by the Judge is all the more regrettable because there was adequate and proper evidence in support of the case for the prosecution and the contradiction as the statement sought to be introduced was of no practical value. In introducing evidence in a trial with the aid of a Jury the Judge must be very careful in order to avoid miscarriage of justice. With these observations we dismiss the appeal.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 439, 476, 476-B—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Order by Civil Court making or refusing to make complaint—Appeal—Revision, nature of.

A petition for revision of an order passed by a superior Court under s. 476-B, Cr. P. C., on appeal from an order of a Civil Court making or refusing to make a complaint, must be dealt with under s. 115, C. P. C., and not under s. 439, Cr. P. C. [p. 456, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 10th August 1925.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Applicant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from an order passed on appeal directing the prosecution of the applicant under ss. 193 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The applicant filed a suit on the basis of a promissory-note alleged to have been executed by the defendant and also produced a receipt purporting to be of the same date. The defendant denied the genuineness of these documents and denied that he had ever borrowed any money from the plaintiff. The promissory-note and the receipt were sent to the Thumb Impression expert at the instance of the plaintiff, but the report received from the expert was that the impressions were too blurred to be decipherable. The plaintiff then stated before the Court that if the defendant took an oath on the Ganges water that he had not borrowed the money from the plaintiff he would agree to the suit being dismissed. The defendant agreed to take the oath. On the oath being taken by the defendant the Court without going into any further evidence dismissed the suit. Neither the plaintiff nor any witnesses on his behalf were examined. After the dismissal of the suit the defendant applied to the Trial Court for proceedings being taken against the plaintiff under s. 193 and s. 471 of the Indian Penal Code inasmuch as he had verified the plaint and filed documents which were said to be forged. The Trial Court declined to pass any such order. On appeal the learned Judge has reversed the order.

As the case would be merely one of oath against oath without any conclusive documentary evidence to prove that the pronote and the receipt were forgeries I might have inclined to interfere in revision on the criminal side if the application were, as it purports to be, under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C. On the other hand if this is a proceeding of a civil nature and my power of revision is confined to the provisions of s. 115 of the C. P. C., I would find it absolutely impossible to interfere, as there is neither any want of jurisdiction or any irregularity or illegality in the exercise of jurisdiction.

I have, therefore, to consider whether a revision from an order passed under s. 476-B by the superior Court relates to a proceeding within the meaning of s. 439 of the Cr. P. C.

Under the old Code a Full Bench of this Court In the matter of the petition of Bhup Kunwar (1) overruling several previous cases held "where an order is passed under s. 476 by a Civil Court, the case does not fall under s. 439 of the Cr. P. C., and the High Court has no power of interference in revision."

After some years a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court came round to the same opinion in the case of Har Prasad Das v. Emperor (2). There it was held that s.

439 of the Cr. P. C., was inapplicable to a case where a Civil or Revenue Court had passed an order under s. 476.

The Full Bench case had of course been followed by this Court till the Code was amended. The amended Code has made certain alterations in ss. 195, 476, 439 and 537.

A Criminal Revision No. 428 of 1924 came up before Mukerji, J., who considered the question to be of some importance and referred it to a larger Bench. It appears that in the course of the argument he was informed that the general opinion now held is that the earlier view of this Court required reconsideration. I am not aware of the extent to which such opinion is held. The learned Judge suggested that the point required re-consideration in view of the fact that under s. 476-D an appeal is now allowed. The Bench before which the case went up however did not decide this question, but dismissed the application on the merits.

I have, therefore, to consider whether the amendment of the Cr. P. C. has made the Full Bench ruling of this Court no longer a good law.

Section 476 of the old Code as well as the corresponding section of the new Code empowers any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court to take steps mentioned therein. It follows that merely because a Court is taking proceedings under s. 476 it cannot be supposed that that Court is necessarily a Criminal Court. A Civil Court exercising powers under s. 476 remains a Civil Court. Section 476 of the old Code did not provide for any appeal from an order passed by the first Court, but s. 476-D provides an appeal from an order passed by any such Civil, Revenue or Criminal Court to a Court to which such former Court is subordinate within the meaning of s. 195 (3). Then the superior Court is defined in s. 195 (3) of the new Code as being a Court to which appeals ordinarily lie from the appealable decrees or sentences of such former Court or in the case of a Civil Court from whose decrees no appeal ordinarily lies, the principal Court having ordinary original civil jurisdiction. It follows, therefore, that the superior Court to which appeals ordinarily lie and which is empowered under s. 476 B to hear an appeal cannot necessarily be deemed to be a Criminal Court. It can continue to be a Civil Court if it is in fact a Civil Court.

3. Section 435 of the Cr. P. C. empowers the High Court to call for the record of any inferior Criminal Court, but it does not empower the High Court to call for the record of any Civil or Revenue Court. It cannot, therefore, be contended for a moment that the record of the superior Court under s. 476-D can be called for by the High Court under s. 435. It must, however, be noted that s. 439 is slightly wider in scope and covers cases where the record of proceeding has been called for by the High Court or which has been reported for orders or which otherwise comes to its knowledge. Even under the old Code some learned Judges interfered with an order passed under s. 145 of the Code although under s. 435 (3) the record of that case could not be called for. It would seem that the High Court, therefore, may interfere in revision under s. 439 even if it has not been empowered to call for the record under s. 435. But the view taken by the Full Bench of this Court referred to above was that s. 435—439 must be read together and that the word "proceeding" mentioned in s. 439 meant the same proceeding as is mentioned in s. 435. It may be that the word "proceeding" in s. 439 may mean the proceeding in any Criminal Court referred to in s. 435 or it may possibly mean any proceeding to which the Cr. P. C. is applicable. If the latter meaning were to be assumed perhaps the power of revision of the High Court might be wider, but the Full Bench accepted the view that the word "proceeding" meant proceeding in any Criminal Court and not necessarily any proceeding referred to in the Cr. P. C. I am bound to follow that view and I see nothing in the amended Code which can alter the effect of that Full Bench ruling. The mere fact that now an appeal is provided to a superior Court cannot make that Court a Criminal Court nor can it make the High Court before that superior Court one which can be interfered with under s. 439.

Under the old Code there was one difficulty in the way of the view expressed by the Full Bench, namely, that s. 537-B assumed that a High Court could interfere on appeal or revision in cases of an irregularity in proceedings taken under s. 195 or s. 476. The Full Bench, however, took the view that that must refer to proceedings under s. 476 before a Criminal Court. No such difficulty now arises before me. Sub-clause B of s. 537 has altogether been deleted in the new s. 537. It is further to be noted that even in the old Code there was no mention of s. 476 in the old s. 439 but there was a mention of s. 195. In the corresponding section of the new Code even the mention of s. 195 has now been omitted. It is further clear that the substantial effect of an order under s. 476 is the filing of a complaint on behalf of the Court before a Magistrate. When an order is to be revised it would mean not only an order superseding the order of the lower Court but also an order directing the withdrawal of that complaint. Section 438 does not expressly empower the High Court to direct the withdrawal of a complaint which might have been filed by a subordinate Court. It is confined to the powers which are conferred on a Court of Appeal by ss. 423, 426, 427, 428 or 438. It, therefore, seems to me that the amendment of the Cr. P. C., has strengthened the view of the Full Bench rather than weakened it. I am accordingly of opinion that I have no power of interference on the criminal side.

The learned Counsel for the applicant has urged before me that I should exercise the power of superintendence conferred on the High Court under s. 107 of the Government of India Act. I doubt very much whether the word "superintendence" could have been intended to mean the same thing as revision. I, however, consider it unnecessary to decide whether the word "superintendence" is used in an administrative sense or not. I do not think that this is a case in which an extraordinary power of the High Court, even if it were vested in it, should be exercised.

The application is accordingly dismissed.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 476 -
Offence committed in course of judicial proceeding -*

Complaint by Court after termination of proceedings, legality of—Delay, effect of—Complaint, when to be made.

The power conferred upon a Court under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. to make a complaint to a Magistrate when any of the offences referred to in s. 195, cls. (b) and (c), appears to have been committed in or in relation to a judicial proceeding before it, is exercisable even after the termination of the proceeding in which the offence complained of is said to have been committed. [p. 458, col. 2.]

No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time a complaint may be made under s. 476. If a Court after the lapse of a considerable time makes a complaint under s. 476 such complaint is open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay. Each case would depend upon its own circumstances. [Ibid.]

The effect of the changes made in the Cr. P. C. by the introduction of ss. 476-A and 476-B is no longer to make it necessary that a proceeding under s. 476 should be a part of, or so soon after the termination of the judicial proceeding as to make it a part of, the judicial proceeding. [p. 458, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Kurnool, in O. P. No. 49 of 1924, dated the 5th February 1925.

Messrs. A. Venkatarayaliah and L. Venkatanarasimha, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. A. C. Sampath Aiyangar and P. C. Parthasarathy Aiyangar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal under s. 476-B against the complaint of the District Judge of Kurnool made under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. Appellants Nos. 1 and 2 propounded a Will of one Sami Reddi in answer to a suit brought by the plaintiff for the recovery of the properties of Sami Reddi who died on 15th January 1922. The 3rd appellant is the writer and appellants Nos. 4 and 8 are the attestors of the Will. The Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion, after a full consideration of the evidence, that the Will was a forgery. On appeal the District Judge agreed with the Subordinate Judge in his conclusion that the Will was a forgery. The plaintiff's widow applied to the District Judge to take action under s. 476 of the Cr. P. C. The learned Judge has laid a complaint before the Sub-Divisional First Class Magistrate of Kurnool against the appellants for offences under ss. 467, 193 and 196 of the Indian Penal Code.

The first point raised by Mr. Venkatarayaliah is that the District Judge acted without jurisdiction in laying a complaint about 4 months after he disposed of the appeal. He relies upon the Full Bench decisions in Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (1) and Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (2) and contends that the order of the District Judge should form part of the judicial proceeding in which the offence or offences are said to have been committed. The District Judge disposed of the appeal on 30th September 1924. The plaintiff's widow moved the District Court on 8th November 1924 for action under s. 476. The District Judge passed the order appealed against, on 5th February 1925. The decisions in Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (1) and Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (2) and the decisions following them have no application to a complaint under s. 476 of the present Cr. P. C. Those decisions were passed under the old Cr. P. C. of 1898. The present s. 476 empowers a Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court, if it considers expedient in the interests of justice that an enquiry should be made into any offence referred to in s. 195 cls. (b) and (c) which appears to have been committed in or in relation to a proceeding in that Court, to hold such preliminary enquiry, if any, as it thinks necessary, record a finding to that effect and make a complaint thereof in writing. Section 476, therefore, contemplates only a complaint and not an order for proceedings against any person who, it thinks, has committed an offence. The wording of s. 476 of the old Code was different from the wording of the present s. 476. Section 476 of the old Code was as follows:—

"When any Civil, Criminal or Revenue Court is of opinion that there is ground for inquiring into any offence referred to in s. 195, and committed before it or brought under its notice in the course of a judicial proceeding, such Court, after making any preliminary enquiry that may be necessary, may send the case for inquiry or trial to the nearest Magistrate of the First Class." Under the present Cr. P. C., it is not only the Court in which the offence was committed, but also the Court which hears an appeal from that Court, is entitled to proceed under s. 476 and the present section contemplates a party moving the Court by an application to take action under s. 476. In Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (1) the

"I think there is considerable force in the observation of the Chief Justice that if months after the trial the Court may act under s. 476 it is difficult to appreciate the necessity of s. 195. As regards the general policy of the law, I agree with the view expressed by Geidt, J. 'I do not think'—the learned Judge observes :—'that it was ever intended that when the proceedings had terminated and passed beyond the ken of the Court, the attention of the Court should be subsequently redrawn by some private person to the fact that in those proceedings there had been committed some offence in contempt of the Court's authority or against public justice which deserved punishment. The commission of the offence and the desirability of a prosecution should be so patent as to move the Court at the time to take action without the stimulus of an application by some interested person.'"

The two reasons given by the learned Chief Justice are absent now. Under s. 195 of the old Code, sanction was granted to a party for prosecution, but the present s. 195 has done away with the sanction. The second reason that the Court should act suo motu without the stimulus of an application cannot apply to the present section, for it does contemplate an application being made by a party for initiation of proceedings. The words, "Whether on application made to it in this behalf or otherwise" have been introduced into the present section. In Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (2) Sankaran Nair, J., holds that a proceeding under s. 476 does specifically authorise a Court proceeding under that section to make a complaint in writing signed by the Presiding Officer of the Court to a Magistrate of the First Class. Another reason assigned by Sankaran Nair, J., is that there is no appeal against an order under s. 476. The present s. 476-B does provide an appeal both against a complaint made under s. 476 as well as against an order refusing to lay a complaint before a Magistrate. It is clear from the wording of the present s. 476 that all the arguments which weighed with the learned Judges who decided Rahimadulla Sahib v. Emperor (1) and Aiyakannu Pillai v. Emperor (2) for coming to the conclusion that the proceeding under s. 476 should be a part of the judicial proceeding before it or at least so soon after the termination of the judgment proceeding as to make the order under s. 476 a part of the judicial proceeding, are met by the changes made in the said section and by the enactment of two new sections 476-A and 476-B. It is unnecessary to consider the other cases on the point, as we hold that the changes made in the Code have met the arguments advanced by the learned Judges for coming to the conclusion that the Court acted without jurisdiction, if it passed an order under s. 476 some time after the termination of the proceedings in which the offence complained of was said to have been committed. The case in Maung Shwe Phwe v. Ma Me Hmoke (3) does not help the appellant. No doubt, if the Court after the lapse of considerable time makes a complaint under s. 476, such complaint is open to the objection that it was made after an undue delay. Each case would depend upon its circumstances. No hard and fast rule can be laid down as to within what time, a complaint should be made under s. 476. If a Court disposes of a case on the last working day of a term and initiates proceedings under s. 476 on the first day of the re-opening of the Court after the long vacation, can it be said that the Court acts with undue delay. In this case the application was made within 40 days of the delivery of the judgment in the appeal. A similar application was made to the Subordinate Judge of Kurnool and as the appeal was then pending, he dismissed the application with the remark "that the petitioner, if advised, may renew his application after the litigation ends". The application was renewed before the District Judge after the disposal of the appeal and the District Judge gave notice to the counter petitioner and laid a complaint on 5th February, 1925. It cannot be said that, in the circumstances, there has been undue delay in instituting proceedings under s. 476.

The next contention of Mr. Venkataramiah is that there should be a finding that the appellants are guilty of an offence. The District Judge in his order dated 5th February 1925, has recorded a finding that the Will is a forgery and it is unnecessary that all the reasons given in the judgment should be repeated in an order in which he comes to the conclusion that a complaint should be laid before a First Class Magistrate.

(3) 85 Ind. Cas. 244, 3 R. 48; 3 Bur. L. J. 344; (1925) A. I. R. (R.) 195; 26 Cr. L. J. 509.

It is next argued that there should be a reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction and reliance is placed upon Munuswamy Mudaliar v. Rajaratnam Pillai (4) and the cases referred to therein. In the case of a sanction under the old s. 195 it was the duty of the Court to see that there was a reasonable probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction and to discourage frivolous and vexatious applications for sanction. In order to prevent a person who gets the sanction from misusing it, the Court had to take care to see that sanction was granted to proper persons. Such considerations do not apply to a complaint made by the Court, but the Court acting under s. 476 should not act capriciously or without proper grounds. Section 476-B by which an appeal is provided is a sufficient safeguard against frivolous complaints being made. Here, in this case, the District Court has preferred a complaint after due consideration of the evidence and after recording a finding that the Will propounded by appellants Nos. 1 and 2 was a forgery. When two Courts have given a concurrent finding that a Will is a forgery, it cannot be said that the Court has not acted with due care and caution and without considering whether there is a probability of the prosecution ending in a conviction. As the appellants are to be tried, for the offences with which they are charged, any strong expression of opinion by this Court on the merits of the case might prejudice them in their own trial. The concurrent finding of two Courts that the Will is a forgery is sufficient guarantee for the view that this is a fit case to be enquired into by a Magistrate.

The appeal is dismissed.

Where members of two rival factions armed with deadly weapons take part in a pre-arranged fight, and deaths are caused on either side, no question of the exercise of the right of private defence arises, and all those who take part in the fight are guilty of the offence of murder. [p. 460, col. 1.]

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Attock at Campbellpore, dated 24th July 1925.

Sir Mohammad Shafi, Kt., and Mr. Abdul Aziz, for the Appellants.

Mr. Dalip Singh, Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Shadi Lal, C. J.—On the afternoon of the 21st April 1925, a fight took place outside the village of Dhok Baz Gul in the Attock District between the members of two rival factions known respectively as Ashraf's party and Madat's party. The learned Sessions Judge finds, and his finding has not been seriously contested before us, that three men on each side participated in the fight. Taj Muhammad and Nur Muhammad, sons of Ashraf, and Nur Khan, his brother-in-law, were the members of Ashraf's faction who participated in this affair while on the opposite side the combatants were Madat and his two brothers, Faqir and Ghazan.

It is beyond dispute that all the six persons mentioned above were wounded, and that two of them, namely, Ghazan and Nur Muhammad succumbed to their injuries. Taj Muhammad and Nur Khan have been found guilty of the murder of Ghazan, and their adversaries Madat and Faqir have been convicted of the murder of Nur Muhammad, and the convicts have all been sentenced to suffer the penalty of death.

Now, the medical evidence makes it perfectly clear that two men on each side received bullet wounds, and that the combatants belonging to each of the rival parties received also wounds inflicted with spears and knives. There can, therefore, be little doubt that the members of each party were armed with a pistol, a spear and a knife; and I cannot accept the contention that neither Madat nor his companions attacked their adversaries with a pistol. It must be remembered that not only the deceased Nur Muhammad, but also his brother Taj Muhammad, received bullet wounds, and it is most unlikely that these wounds were the result of misjudged firing by their own relative Nur Khan.

Two rival versions have been put forward before the Court, and each party have tried to minimize their own part in the transaction. These versions are set out in the judgment of the learned Sessions Judge, and after examining the arguments advanced by the learned Counsel, on both sides I have no hesitation in endorsing the conclusion of the learned Judge that the evidence produced in support of the rival stories is wholly unreliable and that both parties have suppressed important facts concerning the transaction.

It is common ground that a bitter enmity extending over nearly 12 years existed between the two families, and there is evidence to the effect that only a day or two before the incident in question shots were fired by one or more members of each party at their adversaries. Now, the witness Inayat deposes that on the morning of the 21st April he went to Ashraf to seek the latter's assistance in reaping his harvest, but that Ashraf expressed his inability to accede to the request because he had made an appointment to fight Madat. That the fight was a pre-arranged affair receives support, not only from the circumstances that the number of the combatants on each side was exactly the same, but also from the fact that they were armed with exactly similar weapons, namely, a pistol, a spear and a knife on each side. In view of this important circumstantial evidence corroborating the testimony of Inayat it is futile to contend that the learned Sessions Judge has invented a theory which is not supported by any evidence on the record. Indeed, the story of a pre-arranged fight between the two factions is the only rational version which is compatible with all the known circumstances of the case and satisfactorily accounts for the injuries sustained by the combatants.

No question of self-defence arises in a case of this character, and the prisoners, upon whom the onus rested, have failed to show that they were entitled to exercise the right of private defence. The convicts are clearly guilty of an offence under s. 302, Indian Penal Code, and there is no adequate ground which would justify interference with the discretion of the Trial Judge in the matter of the punishment imposed by him. Confirming, therefore, the sentences of death I dismiss both the appeals.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 173—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 160—Notice to attend enquiry, refusal to accept—Intentionally preventing service—Offence.

Refusal to accept a notice issued by a Police Officer under s. 160, Cr. P. C., requiring attendance at an enquiry does not amount to an offence under s. 173 of the Penal Code.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Meerut, dated the 12th October 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—This is an application against the order of a Magistrate convicting the applicant Bahadura of an offence under s. 173 of the Indian Penal Code, and sentencing him to pay a fine of Rs. 5 or in default to undergo one week's simple imprisonment. The learned Magistrate has held that the applicant refused to receive a safina or to sign it in token of service. There is no dispute as to the fact. It is urged on behalf of the applicant that refusal to receive a safina does not constitute an offence under s. 173 of the Indian Penal Code. This is borne out by the commentaries and the Government Pleader has nothing to urge against the application. In these circumstances I hold that the conviction of the applicant was illegal. The record will be submitted to the Hon'ble High Court for orders.

JUDGMENT.—A notice was issued by a Police Officer under s. 160 of the Cr. P. C. requiring the petitioner, Bahadura, to attend the enquiry. He is said to have refused to take the notice. He has been tried and convicted of an offence under s. 173 of the Indian Penal Code. This does not, however, amount to an offence of intentionally preventing service Sahdeo Rai v. Emperor (1).

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s. 133—Approver, statement of, value of—Confession brought about by pressure of relatives.

It is not safe to place any reliance upon the testimony of an approver who was prevailed upon by his relatives, who were members of a faction hostile to the accused, to make a confession and turn King's evidence.

Appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, dated the 9th April 1925.

Mr. M. L. Puri, for the Appellant.

Diwan Ram Lal, Assistant Legal Remembrancer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Teja Singh, a young man of 25 years, has been convicted by the Sessions Judge, Lyallpur, of an attempt to cause grievous hurt by means of a bomb, inasmuch as he, in company with another youth, namely, Sewa Singh who turned King's evidence, exploded a bomb at midnight in the door of the baithak wherein the complainant lay asleep. The so-called bomb, it was found, contained no explosives but country gunpowder of an inferior quality. The evidence on which the conviction is based appears to be highly improbable and unworthy of credit. Kishen Singh according to the finding of the learned Sessions Judge is a scoundrel of the first water. He had admittedly a liaison with the mother of the appellant ever since the latter was a minor but now that he was major he naturally resented his illicit connection with her. Therefore, Kishen Singh's propensity to devise a plan to put Teja Singh out of his way should not have been lost sight of.

Now, his story was that on the night between the 15th and 16th October 1924 he was roused from sleep by the bursting of a bomb in the door of his baithak which was open. It is, however, unlikely in the first place that he should have gone to bed leaving the door open. Secondly, even if the whole thing was not a concoction, it is not likely that the perpetrators of the outrage were still within sight and could be identified when he came out from his baithak. However this may be, the Police Officer who made the investigation came to the conclusion that Kishen Singh was guilty of fabrication and took him into custody. He had been in the lock-up for 10 or 12 days when his friend Jagat Singh a retired Risaldar intervened on his behalf with the Superintendent of Police and the latter deputed another Police Officer, namely, Anup Singh Inspector, to investigate the case. The tables were turned as soon as the latter arrived at the spot. Jagat Singh according to his own showing was not a disinterested person. He admits that there are two factions in the village and that Kishen Singh is a partisan of his. He had once before, too, intervened with the Superintendent of Police on his behalf when he was under arrest for theft and later on he appeared as a witness in his defence. Teja Singh appellant belongs to the opposite faction. There is admittedly strong party feeling between the two factions so much so that Jagat Singh and his few adherents are boycotted by the rest of the villagers who constitute the other faction. Kartar Singh, father of Sewa Singh approver, is also a partisan of Jagat Singh but he was not in the village at the time of the occurrence and during his absence Sewa Singh had begun to associate with Teja Singh appellant. Kartar Singh came back probably on hearing of the case and was present when Anup Singh Inspector arrived. It appears that Jagat Singh and Kartar Singh put their heads together and prevailed upon Sewa Singh to make a confession and turn King's evidence. On the very day on which the Inspector arrived Sewa Singh appeared before him and confessed. As there was no other evidence available the Police Inspector fell in with the scheme of Jagat Singh.

Having regard to the circumstances under which Sewa Singh turned approver it is not safe to place any reliance on his testimony. Similarly Jagat Singh has shown himself to be quite unworthy of credit.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence and direct that the appellant be released forthwith.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s 120B—Conspiracy, ingredients of—Overt act, value of.

The ingredients of the offence of conspiracy are:—

- (1) That there should be an agreement between the persons who are alleged to conspire; and
- (2) that the agreement should be:—
  - (i) for doing of an illegal act, or
  - (ii) for doing by illegal means an act which may not itself be illegal [p. 462, col. 1.]

Conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. Although an overt act may be specified in the charge yet this is not (except when the end of the conspiracy is not to commit an offence) necessary. The overt act or acts is or are introduced not as partially constituting an offence but as giving information and example as to what the conspiracy was. The offence is conspiracy. Nor is there any limit to the number of overt acts which can be given in the charge. [p. 462, cols. 1 & 2.]

It is not necessary that each conspirator should be aware of all the acts done by each of the conspirators in the course of the conspiracy. [p. 462, col. 2.]

It is, however, necessary that there should be one conspiracy and not a series of conspiracies and criminal acts unconnected by unity of intention. [ibid.]

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Larkana, dated 21st August 1925.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor for Sind, for the Crown.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—We think there has been some confusion in the Courts below as to the law of conspiracy:—

The ingredients of the offence of conspiracy are:—

- (1) That there should be an agreement between the persons who are alleged to conspire; and
- (2) that the agreement should be:—
  - (i) for doing of an illegal act, or
  - (ii) for doing by illegal means an act which may not itself be illegal.

It must be remembered that conspiracy is a substantive offence and has nothing to do with abetment. It is to be remembered also that though an overt act may be specified in the charge yet this is not (except when the end of the conspiracy is not to commit an offence) necessary. In any case the overt act or acts is or are introduced ed not as partially constituting the offence but as giving information and example as to what the conspiracy was. Nor is there any limit to the number of overt acts which can be given in the charge. The accused is not charged with committing them but with committing the offence of conspiracy in the course of which these events took place. It is thus clear that it may be specified in a charge that a certain act has been committed which could not possibly be committed by one of the alleged conspirators nevertheless such conspirator may be guilty of that conspiracy in the course of which such act was committed. Thus Lady Rochford might well have been charged with conspiracy to commit high treason in connection with the seduction of Anne Boleyn.

Again it is not by any means necessary that each conspirator should be aware of all the acts done by each of the conspirators in the course of the conspiracy. This necessarily follows from what has been said above. His offence is the conspiracy. The acts done by any of the conspirators in furtherance of the purpose of the conspiracy are merely indication of what the object of the conspiracy was.

What is necessary, however, is that there should be one conspiracy and not a series of conspiracies and criminal acts unconnected by unity of intention. It is quite possible that the same gang may commit conspiracy after conspiracy, all of the same nature yet actually unrelated. Again it is quite possible that there may be a band of conspirators working for a common criminal end and that for the purpose of that conspiracy they may find it necessary to procure the doing of unlawful acts by persons who are not members of the conspiracy. In that case, if the persons so seduced into unlawful acts are not aware of the conspiracy, the fact that they do unlawful acts does not make them members. Thus let it be supposed that a gang of men conspire to murder some one and to that end borrow a gun from a license-holder, who thus commits the offence of parting with his gun contrary to his license, but who imagines that the conspirators have borrowed the gun for shikar, that will not make the license-holder a conspirator.

In the present case it is necessary to find whether there was a conspiracy to defraud the Railway Company by a continual series of frauds all forming one fraud and not being isolated acts. If that be the case it can be judged whether the accused were guilty of that conspiracy or whether they or any of them were so committing isolated crimes not knowing that such crimes formed part of the greater design. In the first case, it would not matter in the slightest whether some of the persons were to commit offences, e.g., criminal breach of trust which others could not by the nature of things commit. It might quite well be the case. Lokumal was to go on making false applications for concession tickets and Chandiram to go on making false entries and taking the Company's money and yet they might both be members of a permanent conspiracy for defrauding the Railway.

In that case it does not matter whether there is evidence tending to show that certain offences were committed by other persons unknown to some one or other of the conspirators. That evidence would be perfectly relevant against all as tending to show the nature of the conspiracy and the method adopted for carrying out the objects of the conspiracy.

If, however, it proved that there was no conspiracy, but merely an unrelated series of crimes, unrelated, that is, by any common end, then none of the alleged conspirators would be guilty of the offence charged. In that case either the isolated offences would be such that if proved they could form the basis of a conviction in accordance with s. 237, Cr. P. C., in which case the guilty persons could be so convicted. Or on the other hand, the isolated offences might be of a kind which could not be so dealt with in which case an acquittal of the offence of conspiracy would be no bar to further proceedings on the true charge.

It would seem then that in the present case the accused are entitled to a decision. If they are conspirators they can be convicted, if they are not conspirators they can be acquitted of that charge. If not conspirators but liable to conviction under s. 237 for the individual offences specified, they can be convicted. If not, they can be acquitted. In either case, there seems no necessity on the part of the Sessions Judge to remand the case. He should decide it himself in the light of the above remarks. We, therefore, set aside his order of remand.

Unlawful assembly—Injuries inflicted by members—Rioting—Hurt—Convictions for separate offences, legality of*

Section 149 of the Penal Code creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But s 147 of the Code creates a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly s. 323 of the Code creates a distinct offence in itself. Where, therefore, more injuries than one are caused by the members of an unlawful assembly they can be convicted of offences both under s 147 and under s 323, read with s 149 of the Penal Code. In such a case, as soon as the first injury is caused to any person, force is used and the offence of rioting is complete. Subsequent injuries though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object would be distinct injuries justifying a conviction under s. 323 [p. 461, col. 2]

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Muttra, dated the 22nd July 1925.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Applicants.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a criminal revision from convictions of the applicants under s. 147 and s. 323 read with s. 149 of the Indian Penal Code and sentences or imprisonment and fines. The learned Sessions Judge on appeal has reduced the sentence so as to make the sentences or imprisonment under the two sections concurrent.

It appears that the complainant Sri Ram who had obtained a decree against Tarsia and his son Loka applied for attachment of the property of his judgment-debtors, and in the company of a Commissioner, appointed by the Court went to the village to get the attachment effected. Naubat, one of the applicants, first tried to prevent the attachment on the ground that the cattle sought to be attached did not belong to the judgment-debtors but were his own property. The Commissioner, however, warned him that if he interfered he might come to grief. After some consultation Naubat did not prevent the Commissioner from attaching the cattle. But as soon as the attachment had been made and before the Commissioner left the place the accused Naubat along with the other accused persons came out armed with lathis and raided the complainant Sri Ram. The complainant ran to the Commissioner who was only at a distance of some 10 yards from the house of the accused and requested him to protect him. The Commissioner, seeing the attitude of the accused, felt himself helpless to intervene at that stage. The assailants pursued the complainant Sri Ram for some distance, overtook him, attacked him and his brother Behari, and felled them down on the ground. Sri Ram received simple hurts with lathis. Both the Courts have accepted this story of the prosecution and have rejected the defence story, that the injuries were caused in self-defence. According to the medical evidence a large number of injuries were caused to the complainant and his brother though all of them were simple in their nature.

The main contention on behalf of the applicants is that their convictions under two separate sections of the Penal Code are illegal. The contention is that inasmuch as the act of rioting and of causing injuries to Sri Ram and his party was a part and parcel of one and the same event there should not be separate and distinct convictions and sentences. The learned Vakil for the applicants relied on the cases of the Lahore, the Calcutta and the Madras High Courts in support of his contention, but later on had to concede that some cases of this Court are against him. It is unnecessary for me to refer to the various cases of the other High Courts and point out the differences of opinion. But I may note that a Full Bench of the Bombay High Court has taken a different view and held that separate convictions under ss. 147 and 323 are not illegal, [vide the case of Queen-Empress v. Bana Punja (1).]

It is true that in the case of Empress v. Ram Partab (2) Straight, J., expressed the view that a member of an unlawful assembly, some members of which have caused grievous hurt, cannot lawfully be punished for the offence of rioting as well as for the offence of causing grievous hurt. This case was distinguished in the Full Bench case of Queen-Empress v. Ram Sarup (3). The latter case, however, is not directly in point because it was found there as a fact that the accused persons had besides taking part in the unlawful assembly committed individual acts of violence with their own hands. But the question was considered by a Divisional Bench of this Court in the case of Queen-Empress v. Bisheshar (4) and Edge, C. J., came to the conclusion that separate convictions under ss. 147 and 323 read with s. 149 were not illegal and that all that was necessary was to make sure that the provisions of s. 71 of the Indian Penal Code were not contravened. A similar view has been expressed recently by a single Judge of this Court in the case of Dharamdeo Singh v. Emperor (5).

There can be no doubt that s. 149 creates no substantive offence in itself. It is merely declaratory of the law and makes a person who has been a member of an unlawful assembly liable for the offences committed by any other member of it. But s. 147 is a substantive offence in itself and makes a person guilty of the offence of rioting as distinct from actually causing any injury or hurt. Similarly s. 323 is a distinct offence in itself. It would, therefore, seem obvious that there is nothing illegal in convicting a person of offences under both these sections. Some of the High Courts which have taken a contrary view have proceeded on the ground that so long as the hurt is not actually caused the offence of rioting does not come into existence. That argument may have some force in cases where only one hurt has been inflicted; but where several injuries have been caused and particularly on several individuals the rule is obviously inapplicable. As soon as the first injury was caused to any person, force was used and the offence of rioting was complete. Subsequent injuries though inflicted in pursuance of the same common object would be distinct injuries justifying a conviction under s. 323.

In the present case, had I been of opinion that the sentences passed were severe, I might have remitted the fine in at least one case, but the facts stated above show that the accused adopted an aggressive attitude and were wholly in the wrong, and they pursued and attacked the complainant decree-holder in the presence of the Commissioner and inflicted several injuries on him and his party. I, therefore, decline to interfere with the sentence. The application is accordingly dismissed.

This second appeal came on for hearing on the 1st and 2nd August 1923, and the case having stood over for consideration till the 9th of August 1923, the Court (Odgers and Hughes, JJ.) delivered the following

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—This was a representative suit brought by the plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and the other Hindu inhabitants of the village of Perungulam, Ramnad Taluk, against the defendants who are Muhammadans and settlers in that village. The plaintiffs are Maravars and they allege a right to throw seedlings into the tank adjoining the Ayyankoil at the Mulaikottu festival held every year. These seedlings are raised in the houses of the Maravars. Eight days after sowing they are thrown into the tank. The seedlings are watered with the water of the tank and are grown in mud pots and manured with dung. One of the plaintiffs' witnesses (P. W. No. 3) says that all kinds of animal excreta are used as manure. The plaintiffs put their right on two grounds: (1) Prescriptive title or easement by prescription as found by the lower Courts and (2) Custom. They ask for a declaration that the tank belongs to the Hindu community and for an injunction restraining the Muhammadans from obstructing the performance of the Mulaikottu ceremony. The defence traverses the plaint allegations and alleges that the right claimed cannot be acquired as the throwing of seedlings into the water pollutes it and renders it unfit for drinking purposes. The District Munsif finds against plaintiffs on the question of ownership but declared that the Hindus were entitled to throw the seedlings "after washing them so as to remove the dung manure sticking to it" and restrained the Muhammadans from interfering. The District Munsif decided that the Hindus had acquired an easement by prescription and that if the seedlings were thrown into the tank without removing the dung the water would be polluted. He discusses the varying standards of cleanliness in the matter of washing the seedlings and considers that the Maravars are not likely to be over-scrupulous in the matter. If it is regarded as a custom, it may be unreasonable. There is no doubt that the Hindus have been throwing seedlings without washing into the tank for a long time—how long there is no evidence to say. There is also no doubt that the tank is not theirs and that it is the main, if not the only, drinking water supply for the village. The washing of the seedlings seems to have been introduced into the judgment and decree from certain proceedings in 1915, before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, under s. 144, Cr. P. O. This was an order rescinding an order of the Sub-Magistrate, Ramnad, restraining the throwing of these seedlings. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate found it was obviously improper to throw manure and earth into the tank and ordered the Sub-Inspector of Police to see that the seedlings were well-washed elsewhere and when cleaned should be thrown. Nothing is said in the plaint or the issues about throwing in washed seedlings. Plaintiff witness No. 3's evidence given in 1919 is that the seedlings are not washed to remove the manure though P. W. No. 4 says the manure is thrown on the bank. He does not say the seedlings are washed. Defendant witness No. 1 says the fact of throwing seedlings in to the water will render it unfit for drinking purposes. The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is obviously one ad hoc and related to a single celebration of the festival. I can see no ground for thinking the condition of washing was one which could properly be incorporated in the decree when the right claimed is absolute and the question to be decided was one as to the existence of the right either as an easement or as a custom. The defendants appealed and in ground No. 4 of their grounds of appeal stated: "The lower Court should have held that no custom has been proved and the custom set up is unreasonable and opposed to public health and safety of the inhabitants of the village." The Subordinate Judge found (1) that the Hindus had no exclusive title to the tank, (2) the Hindus have performed the Mulai-kottu ceremony in the tank for a very long time, (3) there is no evidence to show that the throwing of the seedlings (which the Subordinate Judge assumes are by order of the Magistrate "well washed") will pollute the water and the District Munsif was not justified in inferring this, (4) assuming the water would be polluted, have the Hindus established a customary right or right by way of easement? As it is nobody's case that the tank is public property he holds that the Hindus have acquired an easement by prescription and confirmed the District Munsif's decree. I think the Subordinate Judge is wrong in saying there is no evidence that the throwing of the seedlings pollutes the water for drinking purposes. See P. W. No. 3 and D. W. No. 1. The question is, are the lower Courts right in the view of the law they have taken as establishing an easement by prescription? They have neither of them come to a conclusion on the question of custom. The Subordinate Judge rightly says that if the tank be public and the throwing of the seedlings is a public nuisance no right could be acquired by long user [see Municipal Commissioners of the Suburbs of Calcutta v. Mahomed Ali (1)]. The acquisition of an easement by prescription is governed by s. 15, Easements Act:—"Where a right of way or any other easement has been peaceably and openly enjoyed by any person claiming title thereto, as an easement, and as of right without interruption, and for 20 years the right. . . shall be absolute." To begin with has this right been enjoyed as an easement? An easement is defined in s. 4 of the Act as "a right which the owner or occupier of certain land possesses, as such, for the beneficial enjoyment of that land, to do and continue to do something, or to prevent and continue to prevent something being done, in or upon, or in respect of, certain other land not his own." The tank has clearly been held not to be the property of the Hindus. The defendants in their written statement seem to intend to plead (para. 31) that the tank is public. They apparently do not say it belongs exclusively to themselves. To create an easement there must be a dominant and a servient heritage—and the right acquired must be for the beneficial enjoyment of the dominant heritage. If the right claimed under s. 15 be against Government the period of user to be proved must be 60 years. The right is claimed primarily on the ground of ownership of the tank by the Hindus, but user under a claim of ownership of the tank, in and over which such user is had, and which is negatived, cannot operate to found a right of easement over the tank (vide Chunilal Fulchand v. Mangaldas Govardhandas (2)). In the absence of a finding that the tank is either private property or the property of the Government, I am of opinion that a right of easement by prescription cannot be established. Another objection is taken for the appellants, viz., that the acquisition by prescripior must be by a definite person or persons either natural or juristic, and that a fluctuating and uncertain body like the Maravar inhabitants of this village cannot acquire. In Lutchmeeput Singh v.

(2) 16 B. 592; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 874.

Sadaulla Nushyo (3) it was held no defined or ascertained person had been in the continuous possession of a fishing right which had been exercised by the tenants of certain Pargannahs. In Lord Rivers v. Adams (4) a right to profits a prendre was claimed by the inhabitants of a parish. Kelly, C.B., said after holding that there could not be a custom in such a case, "And for the same reasons, and for other reasons, there cannot be a prescription, and there could not be a valid grant unto so fluctuating a body and a body so incapable of succession in any reasonable sense of the word so as to confer a right on each succeeding inhabitant." The learned Chief Baron also quotes Willes, J., in Constable v. Nicholson (5): "The prescriptive right is not claimed for a corporation or persons taking by succession (it was claimed there by the inhabitants of a township), but only for a fluctuating body of inhabitants. The prescription pleaded is a grant to that body, but not so as to have the effect of incorporating them. It is clear that such a right cannot exist." In Secretary of State for India v. Mathurabhai (6) the right of free pasturage was distinguished from these cases on the ground that such a right has always been recognized by Government as a right belonging to certain villages and must have been acquired by custom or prescription. This is a very different case and has, in my view, no bearing on the point. For these reasons I am of opinion that the finding of the lower Court that the right of throwing seedlings into the tank has been acquired by the Hindus as an easement by prescription is not in accordance with law and must be set aside. The question remains: Has the right been acquired by custom? The remarks of the District Munsif and Subordinate Judge on this point have already been set out. Neither of them records a finding on the point. If such a custom is established, various points will have to be considered as to its certainty and reasonableness (inter alia). If the tank is a public tank there will have to be considered whether the throwing of these seedlings is a nuisance.

The case must go back to the Subordinate Judge for a finding in the light of the above judgment whether the right of throwing seedlings into the plaint tank at the Mulaikottu festival has been acquired by the plaintiffs (Hindus) by reason of a valid custom. Fresh evidence. Finding six weeks and objections seven days. Question of costs reserved.

I may add that I have no objection to the last paragraph in the judgment about to be delivered by my learned brother and the question may be reserved for argument if and when it arises, though I take leave to doubt at this stage if, a custom for doing a definite thing being established, it is open to a Court to decree a modification of it or something else.

Hughes, J.—I agree that no case of acquisition of right of easement by prescription has been made out and that the case must go back to the Subordinate Judge for a finding on the question whether the right of throwing seedlings into the plaint tank at the Mulaikottu festival has been acquired by the plaintiffs by reason of a valid custom and I agree that fresh evidence may be taken.

I would, however, reserve for decision, after receipt of the finding, any question that may arise as to whether the custom, if established, may be restricted in any of its incidents by incorporating a condition in the decree.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura submitted the following

FINDINGS:—In obedience to the order of the High Court made in S. A. No. 266 of 1921 on 9th August 1923, I beg to submit the following finding on the point:—

"Whether the right of throwing seedlings into the plaint tank at the Mulaikottu festival has been acquired by the plaintiffs (Hindus) by reason of a valid custom?"

* * * * *

On the evidence I find that the plaintiffs Maravars have been throwing seedlings into the plaint urani indifferently with and without manure for a considerable period of time. It may safely be asserted that the practice has been in vogue for even over sixty years. There is no doubt that the throwing of the seedlings into the tank would certainly render the water unfit for drinking purposes and much more so if they are thrown with manure.

The result is that I find that the custom has been well-established but that the custom is unreasonable in so far as it putrefies the urani water which is used by the public for drinking purposes.

This second appeal coming on for final hearing, after the return of the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—We accept the Subordinate Judge's finding that the custom is unreasonable and in allowance of the second appeal dismiss plaintiffs' suit with costs throughout.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 391 OF 1923.

November 10, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Lindsay and Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal.

MAQSUD ALI AND OTHERS—

PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

versus

ABDULLAH AND OTHERS—

DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Custom—Pre-emption—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, construction of—Preferential right of pre-emption.

A wajib-ul-arz classified the different categories of pre-emptors as follows:—

- (1) Own brothers;
- (2) Co-sharers in the same patti;
- (3) Co-sharers in other pattis

A later wajib-ul-arz gave only one classification of pre-emptors, namely:—“Own brothers and co-sharers of the village”; and it was provided that if none of these people wished to pre-empt, a sale may be made to strangers.

Held, (1) that the two wajib-ul-araz must be read together inasmuch as the right of pre-emption recorded therein was in fact the same, the later record having been prepared in a less careful manner than the one which preceded it; [p. 469, col. 1]

(2) that under the terms of the wajib-ul-arz an own brother of the vendor had a better right of pre-emption than a co-sharer in the village. [ibid.]

Second appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Meerut.

Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukherji, for the Appellants.

Messrs. G. W. Dillon and Sheo Dihal Sinha, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case we are concerned with the interpretation of two wajib-ul-arzes. The question to be decided is whether the plaintiff, who was Nasir Ullah Khan now represented by the present appellants, Maqsud Ali and others, was entitled to a preference in the matter of exercising a right of pre-emption.

The vendor of the property in dispute was own brother of Nasir Ullah, and the purchaser Kabul Khan who is now represented by two defendants, Ahsan Ali and Abdullah, was a co-sharer in the village and also a relation, but a distant relation, of the vendor.

The Court of first instance gave the plaintiff a decree for pre-emption on a finding that on the language of the record of custom as contained in the two wajib-ul-arzes the plaintiff as own brother of the vendor had better right than the vendee who was a co-sharer only and in any case a more distant relation.

The lower Appellate Court has reversed the finding of the Court of first instance on this point being of opinion that the plaintiff as own brother of the vendor had no better right.

Another question was raised in the Court of first instance. It was pleaded by the vendee, that the plaintiff had full knowledge of the sale sought to be pre-empted and that he had acquiesced therein so as to be no longer entitled to assert a claim for pre-emption. The Court of first instance held that the transaction now in dispute was carried out without the knowledge of the plaintiff and that there was no reason to debar him from maintaining the suit.

On this question of the consent or acquiescence of the plaintiff the judgment of the lower Appellate Court is silent.

We have decided to deal with this question of fact ourselves as it is not worth while sending the case back to the lower Appellate Court for finding. In all probability the case would come before some other Judge than the one who heard the appeal.

Dealing with the first question, namely, the preferential right of the plaintiff that has to be considered in connection with the two documents which are filed, Ex. 3 and Ex. C. Exhibit C is a copy of the document known as the wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mohar Singh.

In this document there is a classification of pre-emptors which reads as follows:—

- (1) Own brothers;
- (2) Co-sharers in the same patti;

(3) Co-sharers in other pattis.

The second document, namely, the copy of the wajib-ul-arz prepared at the time of Munshi Nasir Ali Khan, gives only one classification of pre-emptors, namely: "Own brothers and co-sharers of the village." It is provided that if none of these people wish to pre-empt a sale may be made to strangers.

The learned Subordinate Judge laid great stress on the wajib-ul-arz of Nasir Ali Khan that being later in date, although as we understand, the difference between the dates of the preparation of these two wajib-ul-arzes cannot have been more than six or seven years. The Judge was of opinion that on the language of the later wajib-ul-arz own brothers and co-sharers in the village were all lumped together in one category in such a way that a brother could have had no preferential right over any other person who happened to be a co-sharer in the village.

On the other hand, it is equally clear that in the Wajib-ul-arz prepared by Mohar Singh the own brothers of the vendor stood in a category by themselves and had preferential right over other persons who were co-sharers in the patti or in the village.

We are not disposed to take the view taken by the Court below, and it seems to us that the two wajib-ul-arzes ought to be read together. We can hardly think that, having regard to the fact that the earlier record was made in favour of own brothers, the later record can have been correctly prepared if it is meant to indicate that the own brothers of the vendor were put on exactly the same footing as any other co-sharer in the village. It seems to us the more reasonable construction to adopt that the right of pre-emption recorded in these two documents was in fact the same, and all that appears is that when the later record was prepared it was prepared in a less careful manner than the one which preceded it. On the whole, we think that a distinct case is made out for holding that under the custom of pre-emption, which apparently is not denied, an own brother of the vendor has a better right to take the property than a co-sharer in the village. That being so, the late plaintiff Nasir Ullah was entitled to pre-empt.

There remains the other question which is a question of fact.

Nasir Ullah denied that he in any way acquiesced in the sale which he was seeking to pre-empt. The sale-deed in dispute was executed on the 9th February, 1921, and was registered on the same date. It is proved that on the same date, that is to say, 9th February, 1921, the plaintiff Nasir Ullah and his brother Muhammad Khan and one Daulat executed another sale-deed relating to property in another village and this deed was executed in favour of the same purchaser Kabul Khan.

It was sought by means of this later document and also by means of oral evidence, to show that the plaintiff was fully cognizant of the sale which he is now claiming to pre-empt, and that, therefore, his suit is not maintainable.

The document relating to the sale in suit was attested by two witnesses who were examined in Court. They deposed that the plaintiff was present on the 9th February, 1921, when both documents were being drawn up by the same scribe. They do not, however, say that the plaintiff was given any opportunity of taking the property or that such an offer having been made was refused by him. All that the evidence of witnesses amounts to is that he was present on the spot. Another witness was called who went further than this. He deposed definitely that the plaintiff was present when the sale-deed in dispute was executed and that he had been asked to take the property and had refused on the ground that he had not the money.

It is the fact that this second document relating to the other village, a document which was registered on the 2nd of March, 1921, bears the signature of Nasir Ullah. He was asked in the witness-box to explain this and he deposed that he put his signature to it, not on the 9th February, 1921, but on the date on which the document was presented for registration, and this statement the Court of first instance believed. It would be difficult for us to differ on this matter with the finding of the first Court. There is something suspicious about this other document of 9th February, 1921, which is marked Ex. D. We have already mentioned that there were three vendors under this deed, Muhammad Khan, Nasir Ullah Khan and Daulat. The document as it stands bears the signature of Muhammad Khan and the thumb-impression of Daulat. Between these two signatures we find a second signature made by the vendor Muhammad Khan and underneath this is written the name of Nasir Ullah Khan. It looks to us, therefore, as if the signature of Nasir Ullah had been appended to this document at a later date and it is a suspicious circumstance which has not been explained that the signature of one of the vendors should appear twice on the document. On the whole, we think that the Court of first instance was justified in coming to the conclusion that there was no reliable evidence to show that the plaintiff had acquiesced in the sale in dispute and that he was thereby debarred from asserting his claim for pre-emption. Our finding of fact is accordingly in agreement with that of the Court of first instance. It follows from this that the appeal is allowed. We set aside the decree of the Court below and restore the decree of the Court of first instance. The plaintiffs-appellants will be entitled to their costs here and in the lower Appellate Court and the costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

We understand that after the first decree the pre-emption money was deposited in Court. Whether it is there yet or not we do not know, but if it is not, we think that the plaintiff ought to be given an opportunity to re-deposit the money. We give them two months' time from the date of this decree. In default of deposit so made the suit will stand dismissed with costs in all Courts including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 256 OF 1923.

August 3, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jackson.

NEELAM VENKATARATANAMMA—

PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

VINJAMOORI VARAHA NARASIMHACHARU—DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 49—Unregistered deed of gift, admissibility of—Possession, nature of—Intention to make gift, proof of.

An unregistered deed of gift affecting an interest in immoveable property cannot, by virtue of the provisions of s. 49 of the Registration Act, be received in evidence either to prove the fact of the gift or to prove that the possession of the donee over the property purported to be gifted was that of an owner and could be referred to the gift. The deed can, at the most, be referred to as evidence of an intention to make a gift [p. 470, col. 2, p. 471, col. 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cocanada, in A. S. No. 84 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Cocanada, in O. S. No. 32 of 1920.

Mr. B. Satyanarayana, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Govindachari, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal from the decree in A. S. No. 84 of 1921 on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in O. S. No. 32 of 1920 on the file of the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Cocanada.

Plaintiff sues for certain portions of a house-site. Both Courts dismissed his suit and plaintiff appeals.

Issue No. II. Whether plaintiff was in possession within 12 years prior to suit, is a question of fact on which both Courts find against plaintiff; and he only seeks to traverse that finding in this second appeal by urging that the learned Subordinate Judge erred in accepting as evidence the unregistered gift deed Ex. V. There is no doubt that Ex. V is a transaction affecting an interest in immoveable property and as such cannot be received in evidence unless it is registered. The Subordinate Judge, however, relying upon Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (1) has admitted the document for the purpose of proving that possession was adverse. In the reported case it was sought to prove a gift, for which there was no registered deed, by its recital in a petition which also had been registered. The Judicial Committee decided that the petition could not serve as proof of the gift, but turning to another question, what was the nature of Doraisami's possession, the petition could be admitted in evidence. Thus the petition was not evidence of a gift, but evidence that some one had petitioned on the footing of a gift. Care must be taken not to extend this principle too far. For instance, in the present case, the Court cannot receive Ex. V in evidence to prove a gift and then infer that the defendant's possession was adverse; and justify its acceptance of Ex. V on the ground that it confines itself to the inference and is not concerned with the fact of the gift; because the inference is only based upon the fact; and if the fact cannot be proved by the unregistered instrument, nothing can be proved on which to found an inference.

But the document can go in, not to prove any definite gift, but to prove, for what it is worth, that there was talk of making some assignment at that date. That, at least, is how I interpret the ruling in Varada Pillai v. Jeevarathnammal (1). In Veerappan v. Mylai Udayan (2) I had occasion to examine this very question with the aid of the ruling in Saraswatamma v. Paddayya (3) and I observed: "In my opinion if the document is filed on the strict understanding that it must not evidence any transaction affecting immoveable property, its scope in the majority of cases will be very small. At most I think it will evidence, as observed by Venkatasubba Rao, J., an intention." In the present case, I doubt if Ex. V could evidence more than that the house site was too small to admit of a backyard, and the vendor was corresponding about it. But even on that assumption, and supposing that he read the whole document, I do not consider that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is vitiated. There is direct oral evidence of defendant's adverse possession and the District Munsif found in his favour even after rejecting Ex. V as inadmissible. There is no dispute about the exact areas occupied and Ex. V is really only useful in corroborating the oral evidence by showing that at the date when it was written, there was trouble about the insufficiency of the site. When it comes to considering the actual measurements in Ex. V they are of more help to the appellant than to the defendant because there are certain discrepancies between the original area in the document and that now occupied, vide para. 6 of the lower Appellate Court's judgment.

So it cannot be argued that the appellant was prejudiced by their consideration; and all that really operated upon the mind of the learned Subordinate Judge, in my opinion, was the part of Ex. V which can legitimately be regarded as evidence.

Accordingly I see no reason to remand the suit for fresh proceedings.

No other ground of appeal was raised or appears to be valid.

The appeal is dismissed with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 45 of 1925

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 43, application of—Transfer by reversioner—Knowledge of transferee.

A mortgagee from a person who has, on the date of mortgage, only a reversionary interest in the property mortgaged, does not, if he is aware of mortgagor's true interest in the property, acquire any right in the property on the death of the life-estate-holder.

Panduri Bangaram v. Karumooru Subbaraju, 8 Ind. Cas. 388, 34 M. 159, 8 M. L. T. 285 and Jagannath v. Dibbo, 1 Ind. Cas. 818, 6 A. L. J. 49 at p. 51; 31 A. 53, followed.

It is only when a transferee is led into the belief of absolute title on the part of the transferor and acts on the representation of the transferor, that he is entitled under s. 43, Transfer of Property Act, to take advantage of the fact that the transferor later on becomes the owner of the property. If that were not so ss. 6 and 43 of the Act would conflict.

Second appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 22nd September 1924.

Messrs. L. M. Banerji and N. P. Asthana, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—The facts involved in this appeal are as follows:—The appellant who was the plaintiff in the Court below obtained a mortgage from the respondent No. 1 Inder Singh in respect of several properties out of which only one is in dispute in this appeal. In this property Inder Singh had only a reversionary interest on the death of a certain lady at the date of the mortgage. After the mortgage the lady died and the contesting respondent, viz., Babu Girdhari Lal, obtained at an auction-purchase this property. When the appellant put his mortgage into suit Babu Girdhari Lal raised the plea that the mortgage of the property in question by Inder Singh was invalid and did not convey any right to sell it. The appellant relied on s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act and the question arose whether the plaintiff was or was not aware at the date of the mortgage of the fact that Inder Singh's interest in the property in question was only that of a reversionary and not that of an absolute proprietor. The lower Appellate Court has found in the clearest terms possible that the plaintiff was aware of the true interest of Inder Singh in the property.

Now the question is whether in the circumstances s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act would apply and would entitle the plaintiff to sell the property. If the answer be in the affirmative a further question would arise whether Babu Girdhari Lal would be bound to give up the property in the circumstances of the present case.

We are, however, of opinion that s. 43 of the Transfer of Property Act does not apply in favour of the appellant. Section 43 is based on equitable principles. It is only when a transferee is led into the belief of absolute title on the part of the transferor and acts on the representation of the transferor, that he is entitled to take advantage of the fact that the transferor later on becomes the owner of the property. If that were not so ss. 6 and 43 of the Transfer of Property Act would conflict. Section 43 of the Transfer of Property Act opens with these words "where a person erroneously represents". The word "represents" clearly shows that the person in whose favour the equity is allowed to operate must have acted on the representation. The point has really been settled by numerous authorities and it would be enough to quote two cases only to support our decision, vide Pandiri Bangaram v. Karumooray Subbaraju (1) and Jagannath v. Dibbo (2).

In view of these decisions the other points raised in the grounds of appeal do not arise.

The appeal is dismissed under O. XLI, r. 11 of the C. P. C.

Where a service inam is enfranchised in the name of a Hindu widow and a number of other persons as an "estate in free-hold", and as "absolute property", the widow takes the property absolutely and not merely with the limited powers of a Hindu widow. [ibid]

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Anantapur, in A. S. No. 97 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Anantapur, in O. S. No. 20 of 1920, (O. S. No. 17 of 1919, Penukonda, District Munsif's Court).

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. S. Narasimhachari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Anantapur in A. S. No. 97 of 1921 on appeal from that of the District Munsif of Anantapur in O. S. No. 20 of 1920. The plaintiff sued for a declaration that he and defendants Nos 1, 2 and 3 are the nearest reversioners to inherit the property of the late Ramappa and to recover possession of a quarter of the immoveable property described in the schedule attached to the plaint. Both the lower Courts dismissed his suit.

The first point for consideration is that taken by the learned Judge in his fourth paragraph whether the property shown in the title-deed Ex. G-1 is the absolute property of Savitramma or whether she only enjoyed a Hindu widow's estate in that property. The title-deed Ex. G-1 is perfectly clear. "The inam is now confirmed to you in free-hold," in other words "the inam will be your own absolute property." "You" and "your" referring to the six persons in the register, Ex. D-2 and the first of these six persons is Savitramma. It can only be held that "absolute property" in this document means with reference to Savitramma a widow's estate on two assumptions: (1) that the property dealt with is as a matter of fact, the property of the joint Hindu family and (2) that when Government makes a grant to persons comprising a widow and her relations, Government must always be taken to imply that a widow's estate is intended. The first assumption as the learned District Judge points out has been rendered impossible by the Privy Council case in Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1). The ruling is to be found on page 655*: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the Full Bench was in error, i. e., Pingala Lakshmipathi v. Bammireddipalli Chalamayya (2), that the case of a karnam stands on its own footing, and that the principles applicable thereto were properly decided in Venkata v. Rama (3), by the Full Court". Briefly the effect of Venkata v. Rama (3) is that a service inam does not enure to the benefit of the joint family of the holder but only of the holder himself; see page 271† "I think it may be taken that such lands were enfranchised in favour not of the family generally, but of the office-holder for the time being". And again at page 259†: "When the emoluments consisted of land, the land did not become the family property of the person appointed to the office whether in virtue of a hereditary claim to the office or otherwise. It was an appanage of the office inalienable by the office-holder and designed to be the emoluments of the officer into whose hands soever the office might pass."

And so in Venkata Jagannadha v. Veerabhadrayya (1) the Judicial Committee has laid down that when an inam title-deed is granted confirming lands to the holder of the office, his representatives and assigns, the lands are his separate property and are not subject to any claim to partition by other members of the family. This clearly excludes all conception of the joint family in such transactions. In granting an absolute property in the enfranchised inam, Government might have made out the title deed to one person or, as in the present case, to six persons, but there is no reason to suppose that they contemplated the joint family which, as shown above, had no interest in the property.

For the second assumption, the appellant relies strongly upon a remark in Andukuri

Venkataramadas v. Pachigolla Gavarraju (4):

"In that case the title-deed was made out jointly in favour of the widow and the next reversioner which might be taken as an indication that the reversioner should take the estate on the widow's death and not the widow's heirs." Their Lordships do not go so far as to say it must be taken as an indication and it is difficult to see why any such assumption should be made unless it is to be held that Government think in the terms of Hindu Law when Government state unequivocally this property shall be your absolute free-hold.

The meaning is unmistakable and the fact that the document happens to have been issued in India does not import the provisions or the ideas of Hindu Law. I, therefore, see no reason to traverse the decision of the learned District Judge on this point.

The only other question raised is whether the District Judge erred in law in his 5th paragraph in finding that the Diglott register only raised some presumption that Savitramma's portion in the property was family property inherited from her husband and in refusing to find it conclusively proved in the absence of further evidence. I consider the learned Judge's appreciation of this evidence perfectly correct and he was under no necessity in law to accept it as conclusive.

No other point was raised. The appeal accordingly fails on all grounds and is dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901), ss. 4 (5), 167, Sch. IV, item 29—Suit to eject lessee of grove—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts.

A suit to eject the lessee of a grove who has been paying a portion of the produce of the grove as rent, is a suit to eject a tenant and is cognizable by a Revenue and not by a Civil Court.

Civil revision from an order of the Munsif, East Allahabad, dated the 8th of September 1924.

Mr. Brij Behari Lal, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. Mahmudullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—There is nothing in this case.

The plaintiffs in the Court of first instance are the applicants here. They alleged in the plaint that they were the proprietors of certain lands, that one Tika had planted a grove over the lands, that Tika died without heir and the grove went by escheat to the plaintiffs, that the plaintiffs from time to time let out the grove to different persons and lastly they let it out to the defendant-respondent, that they did not any longer want that the defendant should hold the grove and that, therefore, they asked for his ejectment. As for the rent, it was alleged in the plaint that the defendant handed over a portion of the produce of the grove as the rent.

The defendant pleaded, inter alia, that he was a grove-holder and not a mere tenant and that the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court.

Both the Courts below have held that on the plaintiffs' own allegations the suit was not cognizable by the Civil Court.

I have no doubt that the Courts below were right. The suit was one for ejectment of a tenant. A tenant is defined as a person by whom rent is payable. Rent includes whatever is paid or rendered on account of, among other matters, groves. On the plaintiffs' own allegations, therefore, the defendant is a tenant of the plaintiffs and the suit for his ejectment must be brought in the Revenue Court and not in the Civil Court.

The application fails and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

11.—Bihar and Orissa Government Notification No. 2576—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 47, 144—Restitution, order relating to—Appeal—Court-fee payable.

An order under s. 144 of the C. P. C. comes within the purview of cl. (1) of s. 47 of the Code and a memorandum of appeal against such an order must, therefore, in accordance with the direction contained in the Notification No. 2576-L-A-25 of the Bihar and Orissa Government dated the 5th December 1921, be charged with the fee provided for in Art. 11 of Sch. II to the Court Fees Act. [p 476, col 1]

Messrs. Rai Gur Saran Prasad, Raghunandan Prasad and Anand Prasad, for the Appellants.

The Government Pleader, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the Taxing Officer about the Court-fee to be paid upon the memorandum of appeal. The facts appear to be as follows:—

The appellants obtained a mortgage-decree against Gopi Nath Singh, Bodh Narayan, the Mahanth of Bodh Gaya and others. Bodh Narayan was a prior mortgagee, and the Mahanth was made a defendant as a subsequent purchaser. In execution of that decree some of the mortgaged properties were sold for Rs. 71,198 on 21st October 1918. Bodh Narayan also obtained a decree on his prior bonds making Harbans Narayan a defendant. He claimed Rs. 36,907-7-7 out of the sum realised by the auction-sale in the decree of Harbans Narayan. This was disallowed by the Subordinate Judge. Bodh Narayan then came up to this Court in appeal. That appeal was treated as one under s. 47 of the C. P. C. The order of the Subordinate Judge was set aside by this Court and Bodh Narayan was declared entitled to receive Rs. 36,907-7-7 out of the sale proceeds. Against the order of this Court there is an appeal pending before the Privy Council. During the pendency of the appeal in this Court the decree-holder Harbans Narayan had withdrawn the entire sale-proceeds of Rs. 71,198 on furnishing security. Bodh Narayan is dead, and his representative Har Ballabh Narayan Singh assigned the decree to Jagdeo Singh and he applied to the Subordinate Judge for an order that Sital Prasad, representative-in-interest of Harbans Narayan, who is dead, should deposit Rs. 36,907-7-7 in Court as ordered by the High Court. Sital Prasad opposed this petition and the matter came to this Court again. Upon the final order passed by this Court Sital Prasad deposited Rs. 36,907-7-7 in the Court on the 6th February 1922. Jagdeo Singh applicant claimed, besides the aforesaid amount deposited by the decree-holder, interest and damages from 4th April 1919 the date on which the sum had been taken out of the Court by Harbans Narayan and others. His claim has been allowed by the Court below and the respondent has been asked to deposit Rs. 11,736 as interest. Against the order of the Subordinate Judge, Sital Prasad and others have preferred an appeal to this Court, with a Court-fee of Rs. 4 only. The Stamp Reporter reported that ad valorem Court-fee should have been paid upon the aforesaid amount of Rs. 11,736. This view has been accepted by the Taxing Officer. The appellant claims that he is liable to pay only the Court-fee already affixed by him on the memorandum of appeal. On account of this difference the matter has come to me as a Taxing Judge.

The point appears to be somewhat difficult, and the views of the High Courts have been divergent thereupon. The relevant sections in the C. P. C. upon this point are ss. 47 and 144. Section 144 corresponds with s. 583 of the C. P. C. of 1882. That section ran as follows:—

“When a party entitled to any benefit (by way of restitution or otherwise) under a decree passed in an appeal under this Chapter desires to obtain execution of the same, he shall apply to the Court which passed the decree against which the appeal was preferred; and such Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed in appeal, according to the rules hereinbefore prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits.”

Section 244 of the old Code ran as follows:—“The following questions shall be determined by order of the Court executing a decree and not by separate suit (namely):—

(a) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed enquiry;

(b) questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits or interest which the decree has made payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit, between the date of its institution and the execution of decree, or the expiration of three years from the date of the decree;

(c) any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree or to the stay of execution thereof.”

Section 583 which under the old Code occurred in Ch. XLI relating to appeals has now been re-placed by s. 144 of the C. P. C. under Part XI, headed ‘Miscellaneous.’ That section runs as follows:

“(1) Where and in so far as a decree is varied or reversed, the Court of first instance shall, on the application of any party entitled to any benefit by way of restitution or otherwise, cause such restitution to be made as will, so far as may be, place the parties in the position which they would have occupied but for such decree or such part thereof as has been varied or reversed; and for this purpose, the Court may make any orders, including orders for the refund of costs and for the payment of interest, damages, compensation and mesne profits, which are properly consequential on such variation or reversal.”

Section 47, cl. (1) which corresponds to s. 244, cl. (c) of the old C. P. C. runs as follows:—

“(1) All questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, or their representatives, and relating to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree, shall be determined by the Court executing the decree and not by a separate suit.

(2) The Court may, subject to any objection as to limitation or jurisdiction, treat a proceeding under this section as a suit or a suit as a proceeding and may, if necessary, order payment of any additional Court-fees.

(3) Where a question arises as to whether any person is or is not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court.”

Clauses (a) and (b) of s. 244 do not now find place in s. 47.

Section 35 of the Court Fees Act empowers the Government to reduce or remit the fees mentioned in the First and Second Schedules of the Act. Under this section the Governor-General in Council issued Notification No 4650 dated the 10th September 1889. Clause (6) of that Notification directed that the fees chargeable on appeals from orders under s. 244 of the C. P. C. (Act XIV of 1882), shall be limited to the amounts chargeable under Art. 2 of the Second Schedule,

By Notification No. 4344 S. R., dated the 6th October 1893, this was amended by direction that the fee chargeable on appeals from orders under cl. (c) of s. 244 shall be the amounts chargeable under Art. 2 of the Second Schedule to the Court Fees Act, 1870.

The present s. 35 of the Court Fees Act empowers the Local Government to reduce or remit the fees mentioned in the First and Second Schedules of the Court Fees Act. Under this power the Local Government issued Notification No. 2576-L-A-25, dated the 5th December 1921, directing that the fee chargeable on appeals from orders under s. 47 of the C. P. C. (Act V of 1908), shall be limited to the amounts chargeable under Art. 11 of the Second Schedule. Article 11 of the Second Schedule provides that on a memorandum of appeal, when the appeal is not from a decree or an order having the force of a decree and is presented to a High Court, the Court-fee chargeable is Rs. 4.

Section 2 of the C. P. C. (Act XIV of 1882), defined "decree" to include an order determining any question mentioned or referred to in s. 244 of that Code. Similarly, s. 2 of the present C. P. C. (Act V of 1908), defines "decree" as including orders determining any question within s. 47 of the Code. Prior to the present C. P. C., the relief by way of restitution was to be given by execution of the appellate decree under s. 583 of the old Code. Now under the present Code the relief by way of restitution is to be given by an application in the Court of first instance under s. 144 of the Code. Orders under s. 583 relating to restitution under the old Code of 1882 used to be appealable as if they were orders passed under s. 244 of the C. P. C. Therefore there was no necessity of making orders under s. 583 as being included in the definition of "decree". The present arrangement of the Code has taken out s. 583 of the old Code from the Chapter relating to appeals and has made a distinct provision in s. 144 under the heading "Miscellaneous". In order to remove any doubt as to whether orders under s. 144 would be appealable or not, such orders have been included in the definition of "decree" along with s. 47 of the Code.

Lachman Singh (1), Brett and Sharfuddin, JJ., held that an application for mesne profits made not by the plaintiffs but by the defendants against whom the suit had been dismissed, by way of restitution under s. 583, C. P. C., comes under s. 244 (c) of the Code, and that such application would be chargeable with Court-fees under Art. 11, Sch. II of the Act and not ad valorem.

In the unreported case of Babu Shyam-nandan Kishore Singh v. Rai Radha Krishna (2), (Sharfuddin and Chapman, JJ.) this view was upheld and it was held that an order passed under s. 144 of the C. P. C. came under the Notification, inasmuch as such order under s. 144 of the present Code amounts to an order under s. 244 (c) of the old Code. They further held that the reference in the Notification to s. 244 (c) of the old Code must relate to s. 144 by virtue of s. 8 of the General Clauses Act. This was the view taken under the present C. P. C.

The matter was fully dealt with by Chatterjea, J., in the case of Madan Mohan Dey v. Nogendra Nath Dey (3). The learned Judge referring to the Notification referred to above puts the question to himself as to whether an order under s. 144 is an order which decides a question falling under s. 47 (1) of the present Code, and he replies that under s. 583 of the old Code an application for restitution was treated as an application for execution of the appellate decree, and it was expressly provided that the Court shall proceed to execute the decree passed on appeal according to the rules for execution of decrees in suits. It was accordingly held that an order under s. 583 fell within the provisions of s. 244 (c), and, therefore, cl. (6) of the Notification applied. Continuing the learned Judge observes:

"It is true s. 144 of the present Code omits the provision that the Court is to proceed according to the rules prescribed for the execution of decrees in suits, but it expressly lays down that no suit shall be instituted for the purpose of claiming any restitution which can be obtained by application under the section. The Court in making restitution has to execute the decree of reversal (which necessarily carries with it the right to restitution even though the decree may be silent as to such restitution) in order to give effect to the reversal of the decree. That being so, an order under s. 144 comes under s. 47 (1) and cl. 6 of the Notification applies to such an order."

On the 26th March 1917 the matter was agitated in this Court upon the report of the Stamp Reporter and ultimately came up for the decision of the Taxing Judge (Roe, J.). The learned Judge expressed the view taken in the case of Madan Mohan Dey v. Nogendra Nath Dey (3) and directed that the Court-fee of Rs. 2 as was payable under the old Court Fees Act was sufficient (vide the unreported case of Sheikh Kamaruddin Mandal v. Raja Thakur Barham (4)).

The Allahabad High Court has taken a contrary view: vide Jagdip Narain Singh v. Mahant Keshogir (5). That was an authority under the old Code.

Under the present Code and under the Notification of the Government of the United Provinces, Daniels, J., took the same view in the case of Baijnath Das v. Balmukand (6) and the reason given by him is as follows:—

"An application under s. 144 is no doubt one which carries out the intention of the Appellate Court's decree, but it does not directly execute that decree. What it does is to undo an execution wrongly granted by the Court below. In this case the High Court's decree was declaratory and could only have been executed in respect of costs. The appellant must, therefore, stamp his appeal ad valorem."

The learned Judge felt the inequity of levying ad valorem fee upon a miscellaneous application of this kind, and he observed as follows:—

"It is unlikely that the omission of orders under s. 144 from the Notification referred to above was due to deliberate intention. The exemption of appeals under s. 47 from an ad valorem fee dates back to a time when the Code of 1882 was in force. Under that Code, s. 583, an application by way of restitution was treated as a proceeding in execution and there was no need for a separate notification under the section corresponding to the present s. 144. It is probable that if the matter is brought to the notice of Government, Government will not consider it desirable to impose an ad valorem fee on a party who is merely asking the Court to right a wrong unintentionally done by the Court itself. I direct that a copy of this judgment be forwarded to Government with the suggestion that the provisions of para. (4) of the Notification should be extended to appeals from orders under s. 144."

The Notification of the Government of the United Provinces referred to by Daniels, J., exactly corresponds with the Notification of the Government of Bihar and Orissa already referred to, which makes the fee payable on appeals from orders under s. 47 of the present C. P. C. of 1908, one under Art. 11 of Sch. II. I am inclined to think that the Notification did not consider it necessary to include orders under s. 144. Whereas s. 583 of the old Code of 1882 has been removed from the category of the Chapter headed "Appeals" which gave relief by way of restitution to a party when the decree under which injury has been done to him has been set aside by the Appellate Court by executing the decree of the Appellate Court, the present s. 144 gives the same relief and prescribes the same forum, namely, the Court which passes the decree from which the relief is sought. Determination of a question arising under s. 144 will naturally relate to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of the decree either of the first Court or of the Appellate Court. If the first Court's decree has been discharged by the Appellate Court, the question arising under s. 144 will naturally be a question as to the discharge of the decree coming under s. 47 of the C. P. C. This view has been accepted by the Calcutta High Court under the present Code and the view is in consonance with reason, equity and justice so much so that even the learned Judge of the Allahabad High Court, Daniels, J. felt that if the interpretation was correct it requires to be set right by the Legislature. This province used to be governed formerly by the rules and practice obtaining in the Calcutta High Court, and the practice has been followed by this Court ever since in the matter with which we are at present concerned. The Taxing Judge (Roe, J.) in 1917 gave effect to the Calcutta view and held that the fee chargeable was one under Art. 11 of Sch. II of the Court-Fees Act. I as a Taxing Judge, am not prepared to go against the view of my predecessor-in-office. Whatever trouble there might have arisen in the interpretation due to s. 144 not being expressly included in the Government Notification, it is, I think, amply obviated by the reason given by me above.

In a matter of this kind the decision of a Taxing Judge such as that of Roe, J., should be the rule of the Court and it should not be disturbed by his successor-in-office.

I, therefore, hold that the Court-fee paid is sufficient.

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Sale—Delivery of possession—Property already in possession of vendee.

In the case of an unregistered sale of property of rupees less than one hundred in value it is sufficient delivery of possession under s. 54, Transfer of Property Act, that the property is already in the possession of the vendee.

Muthukaruppan Samban v. Muthu Samban, 25 Ind. Cas. 772, 38 M. 1158; 1 L. W. 754; 16 M. L. T. 344; (1914) M. W. N. 768; 27 M. L. J. 497, relied on.

Second appeal against a decree of the Second Subordinate Judge, Cawnpore, dated the 26th April 1924.

Mr. Hazari Lal Kapoor, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for possession of groves standing on certain plots. The suit has been decreed as to possession by the Court below but remanded on the question of damages. The defendants have come up in second appeal.

Two pleas have been urged:—

(1) that the sale-deed of 1888 which forms the basis of the plaintiff's title to plots Nos. 2876, 2877 and 2883 was invalid for want of registration;

(2) that the findings of the lower Appellate Court do not warrant its awarding to the plaintiff the trees of Nos. 2903 and 981.

As regards the first point, the sale-deed in question was for a sum of Rs. 32 only. The transfer could, therefore, be made either by a registered sale-deed or by delivery of the property. The Court below holds that the registration was unnecessary as the plaintiff was already in possession of the property under a mortgage. This view is supported by the ruling of the Madras High Court in Muthukaruppan Samban v. Muthu Samban (1). In that case the learned Judges held that if there was oral sale of the properties (and the same would apply to an unregistered sale), the fact that the vendee was already in possession would not render the sale invalid if the vendor by appropriate acts or declarations converted the possession of the vendee as mortgagee into one as purchaser.

The second plea is not borne out by an examination of the record. Both the plots in question are found to have been in possession of the plaintiff from a long time. No. 981 has been recorded in his name in the papers, 2903 corresponds, according to the judgment of the Court below, to the old numbers 2315 and 2316-1. 2316 was entered in the name of the plaintiff's grandfather as far back as the khasra of 1871. Nothing is said as to 2315, but as the dispute in this case relates not to the entire plots but to trees standing on certain parts of them there is nothing to show that the Court below was wrong in holding that the trees fall on the land which has been in possession of the plaintiff and his ancestors in 1871. It is for the appellant, especially in second appeal, to show that the judgment of the Court below is wrong.

For these reasons I dismiss the appeal with costs.

The cross-objections put forward by the respondents which attack findings of fact have no force and are accordingly dismissed.

No objection has been taken by the plaintiff to the form of the decree passed by the Court below, but I should like to point out to B. Triloki Nath for his future guidance that in such a case as this the proper course is to remand an issue as to the amount of damages under O. XLI, r. 25 instead of remanding the whole case under O. XLI, r. 23 as he has done.

promise entered into by father, whether binding on son.*

When the High Court maintains the decree of a lower Court it affirms the decision of the lower Court within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. C., even though the two Courts differ in their findings on certain issues. Leave to appeal to the Privy Council in such a case can be granted only if there is a substantial question of law involved in the case.

A substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. C. means a question of law in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion.

The general principle that a Hindu son is bound by a bona fide compromise entered into by his father for the benefit of the family is well-settled and is not a substantial question of law within the meaning of s. 110 of the C. P. C.

Petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from the judgment and decree of Mr. Justice Martineau and Mr. Justice Zafar Ali, passed in Civil Appeal No. 199 of 1920, on the 25th June 1924.

Dr. G. C. Naurang, for the Petitioners.Bakhshi Tek Chand, Mehta Amin Chand, Lala Tirath Ram and Lala Madan Gopal, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This is an application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council from a decree of this Court dismissing an appeal from a decree of a Subordinate Judge. The value of the subject-matter in dispute exceeds Rs. 10,000.

It is contended for the applicants that, although this Court dismissed the appeal, yet as it decided the first issue in regard to the bar of s. 47, C. P. C. against all the three plaintiffs, whereas the Subordinate Judge had decided it in favour of two of the plaintiffs and against only one, this Court's decree should be held to have reversed the decision of the lower Court so far as two of the plaintiffs are concerned. We do not agree with this contention. When this Court maintains the decree of the lower Court it affirms the decision of the lower Court, even though the two Courts differ in their findings on certain issues. This matter was settled by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Tassaduq Rasul Khan v. Kashi Ram (1).

The only question is whether the appeal involves a substantial question of law. This Court's finding that plaintiffs Nos. 2 and 3 were really parties to the proceedings taken in execution of Ghulam Ali's decree is a finding of fact. The question whether s. 47, C. P. C., is a bar to the suit is, in our opinion, so clear from the section itself as not to admit of any doubt, and is, therefore, not a substantial question of law, which means a question of law in respect of which there may be a difference of opinion: Gokai Chand v. Sanwal Das (2).

Furthermore we held that the suit must fail, not only on account of the bar created by s. 47, C. P. C., but also because the plaintiffs are bound by the compromise entered into by Shiv Nath, the father of the first plaintiff, in good faith in the interest of the family, whereby he recognised the validity of the mortgage which the plaintiffs now seek to challenge. In regard to that matter also we think that no substantial question of law arises, as the general principle that a person is bound by a bona fide compromise entered into by his father is well-settled.

As the decision of the lower Court was affirmed by this Court and the appeal from this Court's decree does not, in our opinion, involve a substantial question of law we dismiss the present application with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The facts out of which the present suit has arisen are as follows:—

One Mitha on the 30th of August 1921 executed a document which has been held by the lower Appellate Court to be a deed of gift, transferring to Fateh Mahomed, his infant son, an undivided share in a certain landed estate. Two days later on the 1st of September 1921 Mitha executed a sale-deed transferring by sale the same share to one Abdul Khaliq, a defendant in the suit, the price being Rs. 1,250. On the next day, the 2nd of September, this sale-deed was registered and on the 14th of September the mutation in favour of Abdul Khaliq the vendee was entered up by the patwari. The minor donee's paternal uncle, on the 5th of September presented the deed of gift of the 30th of August for registration, but on the 12th of October Mitha objected to its registration and the Sub-Registrar refused to register it. It was eventually registered on the 14th of November by order of the Registrar.

This suit is by Fateh Mahomed the minor donee for possession of the land. The Trial Court dismissed the suit on the ground that under Muhammadan Law the gift of an undivided share in property capable of division, is invalid. Appeal was made to the District Judge who did not sustain the finding of the Trial Court and held that this particular gift did not fall within the definition of Musha, the basic principle of which, he observed, is the exclusion of strangers and a valid gift of an undivided share of property could be made in favour of the son of the donor. In second appeal this pronouncement has not been challenged by the respondent Abdul Khaliq.

Before the learned District Judge, however, Abdul Khaliq supported the Trial Court's order on two different grounds. One was that the deed of gift having been registered against the consent of the executant was not properly registered and hence was not admissible in evidence. This objection was repelled by the learned District Judge and again his finding is not contested before me. The second ground was that the gift was not complete and had been revoked. Here the learned District Judge upheld the respondent and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff has come here on second appeal.

The learned District Judge held that the deed of gift by s. 47 of the Registration Act took priority over the sale-deed, even though it was registered later than the latter, and that its registration was perfectly regular. He observed, however, that the real question was whether the gift was complete and he laid it down that in order to make the gift complete it was necessary for Mitha to do every thing to transfer the possession of the land to the son. No actual change of possession was necessary since the gift was by a father to his minor son; but it was very necessary for Mitha to have the deed of gift registered. Instead of doing so he proceeded to make a sale in favour of another person two days later. Thus the gift was not completed and Mitha had every right to revoke it.

In coming to this conclusion the learned District Judge relied upon Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (1) where it was held that a deed of gift being a voluntary transfer remains a nudum pactum until the donor has done all that is necessary to make it legally complete; that to do so, it is necessary inter alia, that it should be registered, but that he can be no more compelled to register the deed than to execute it in the first instance. The registration contrary to the supposed donor's wishes of the deed under consideration was void and in such circumstances there was no gift.

This dictum was disapproved in Parbati v. Baij Nath Pathak (2) and the decision in

(1) 19 M. 433; 6 M. L. J. 207; 6 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 1007.

(2) 16 Ind. Cas. 406; 35 A. 3; 10 A. L. J. 300.

Ramamirtha Ayyan v. Gopala Ayyan (1) was expressly overruled by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court in Venkat Rama Reddi v. Pillati Rama Reddi (3). It was there laid down that once an instrument of gift is duly executed, the Registration Act allows it to be registered even though the donor may not agree to its registration, and upon registration the gift takes effect from the date of execution. So far as the donor is concerned by executing the deed he does all that he need do, for registration can be effected even without his co-operation.

The above rulings, of course, were delivered in respect of cases where under the Transfer of Property Act a valid gift could only be made by a registered deed. There is no such law in this Province. The question for decision in this case is whether a complete gift was made on the 30th of August 1921 to the plaintiff, and really resolves itself into this. Did Mitha at the time when he executed that deed not intend to transfer the subject-matter to his son? The learned District Judge has not come to any finding about this intention but has held erroneously on the strength of a decision, which he was not aware had been overruled, that between execution of the deed and registration the donor was entitled to change his mind if he wished to do so, and that he "revoked" the gift. A gift, however, once made cannot be revoked and the question is whether or not this gift was actually made. No help towards the solution is to be gained from the ordinary rule that a gift to be valid must be accompanied by transfer of possession. The learned District Judge is correct in saying that that rule does not apply to a gift by a father to his infant son. This exception is laid down in para. 303 of Wilson's Muhammadan Law and is admitted by the learned Counsel for the respondent to prevail. Counsel does not dispute the ruling of the Full Bench of the Madras High Court referred to above that so far as conveyance by written instrument is concerned a donor does all that is necessary when he executes the deed of gift. He argues, however, that the facts of the sale two days later and of the subsequent refusal to assent to registration are proof that on the 30th of August Mitha had no intention to gift the land and drew up the deed merely for some ulterior motive.

In my judgment this contention has no force. It is an every day feature of ordinary life for a man to make up his mind to something on one day, and to change his mind the next day. This is what Mitha, who was examined as a defendant, practically admitted to have occurred in the present case, and Mitha was supporting not the plaintiff but Abdul Khaliq the vendee. In default of direct evidence to the contrary of which there is none, it must be presumed from the facts that Mitha paid Rs. 3 for a stamp paper, engaged a scribe, put his signature to the deed of the 30th of August, and had it attested formally by witnesses that at that time he intended what he caused to be set out in the deed.

The result of this finding coupled with those others of the learned District Judge which, as already stated, have not been challenged before me is that the appeal must be accepted and the plaintiff's suit must be decreed, I accept the appeal accordingly and give the plaintiff a decree for the land claimed together with costs throughout.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 465 of 1921, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Ponnani, in O. S. No. 673 of 1919 (O. S. No. 906 of 1918 on the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Chowghat).

Mr. K. P. Ramakrishna Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. P. M. Menon, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit on a promissory note executed by the defendants, who are uralars of a devaswom. In the promissory-note, it is recited that the two defendants promise “in our capacity as uralars of the devaswom to pay” and again we have the recital “the amount that has been taken in cash is due to you from the devaswom.” Notwithstanding this specific recital of the liability of the devaswom for the suit debt, the lower Appellate Court has held relying on Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), that the plaintiff is entitled only to a personal decree against the uralars. Since the District Judge delivered his judgment, another case of this Court has been reported, namely, Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (2) in which the facts are identical with the present case, namely, there was a distinct undertaking in the promise made by the uralars that the money was to be re-paid out of devaswom funds, that is to say, not only did they pledge their personal credit, but they entered into a contract with the plaintiff that the devaswom funds should be liable for the re-payment of the debt. These facts distinguish the present case from that reported in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1) and also that in Ammalu Ammal v. Nqmagiri Ammal (3). In this latter case the learned Judges refused to consider the question of liability of trustees of religious institutions and based their judgment on the liability of secular trustees and adopting the same argument as that adopted in the earlier case held that there was only a personal liability. This conclusion is based on the principles of English Law relating to trustees, but it is doubtful whether they are applicable in their entirety to persons like heads of mutts or managers of religious institutions who are not in the strict sense of the word trustees.

It is suggested for the respondents that because the earliest decision in Srimath Daivasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (4) is doubted in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), whereas it is to a limited extent approved in Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (2) that there is a divergence of opinion between the two Benches. But Krishnan, J., in Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (2) merely says that he is inclined to follow Srimath Daivasikamani Pandarasannidhi v. Noor Mahomed Routhan (4), “where the debt is not incurred purely on the personal liability of the debtors.” This limitation of liabilities is the cardinal distinction between the present case and that in Swaminatha Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (1), where the authority of the prior decision was questioned. I am bound by the decision in Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (2) which is exactly in point and I may add that I see no reason to doubt its correctness.

I may here observe that in dealing with the facts of this case, I have taken one fact as assumed by both the lower Courts, namely, that there was necessity to borrow on behalf of the devaswom. That point has not been decided by either Court. It will, therefore, be necessary to remit the case to the District Munsif for decision of this issue and for final disposal in the light of the above remarks. The stamp on the appeal memo. will be refunded and the costs of this appeal will abide the result.

minor should be allowed to spend on the marriage of the minor is primarily a matter for the discretion of the District Judge. An order fixing such sum is made under s. 31 (3) (d) of the Guardians and Wards Act and is not open to appeal. The High Court will not, in such a case, interfere in revision under s. 48 of the Act.

Civil revision from an order of the District Judge, Agra, dated the 30th May 1925.

Mr. Shabd Saran, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision against an order made by the District Judge of Agra on the 30th of May last with regard to the disposition of the funds of certain minors by their guardian. The two children are aged respectively 13 and 14. The girl is 13, and the learned Judge, by the order complained of, has allowed Rs. 100 for the marriage of the girl, and Rs. 50 for the education of the boy. The grounds for this application are that the sum of Rs. 100 is not adequate, and that having regard to the status of the ward and the customary expenditure upon marriage ceremonies in a Hindu family, at least Rs. 500 should have been awarded. It seems to us that prima facie there is something to be said for this contention. Rs. 100 is certainly small. On the other hand it sometimes happens that people, when left to their own devices, spend proportionately a larger sum than is prudent upon marriage ceremonies and we appreciate the fact that in all probability the Judge was desirous of preventing extravagance, and of protecting the interests of the minors during the remaining part of their tutelage, having regard to the total funds available for their benefit. These are matters strictly within the discretion of the District Judge, the Act having rightly vested jurisdiction in the District Judge, who is the principal Civil Court in the locality to decide what is best in such matters, having regard to the interests of the minors in the future as well as in the present. The learned Judge, in any event, is in a better position than the High Court to know what proportion of the funds available ought to be allowed to be expended upon an important event like a marriage. We have said all this in order to indicate that, while we feel that there is something to be said for the applicant, on the other hand we are bound to recognise that we are not really in a position to review an order of the Judge of this kind, and that the law has left it entirely in his discretion. It is admitted that the order, being one apparently under s. 31, sub-s. 3, cl. (d) is not an appealable order. We are asked to interfere under s. 48 which is equivalent to s. 115, C. P. C. We are of opinion that revision does not lie in a matter which is purely a question of amount, and a question of discretion in the Court below, and we do not think that the case cited from the Lahore Court, in which a Single Judge expressed an opinion, which was only a dictum, that a revision might lie, is an adequate authority to justify interference in revision. On the other hand we appreciate the motives which have led to this application, and we think that it is possible that the learned Judge after considering our observations might come to the conclusion on re-consideration that the amount might well be increased without injury to the future prospects of the minors.

We, therefore, direct that a copy of this order be sent to the learned Judge with an intimation that we think that the better course would be for him to give notice to the parties and re-open the matter with a view to considering whether the sum of Rs. 100 for the marriage expenses is insufficient. In form this application is rejected.

Mr. M. S. Venkatarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff sued defendant for Rs. 95 for fire-works supplied to defendant as trustee of a temple. The District Munsif found the claim to be true, but unsuited the plaintiff on the ground that defendant was no longer trustee and the temple was liable. Plaintiff seeks to have the decree reversed. Defendant may have his remedy against the trust but it cannot be said that he is absolved from all liability to plaintiff by the mere fact that he has ceased to be trustee. Such a trustee has got his personal credit to pledge and the presumption should be that when he incurred a debt without charging the trust properties, the creditor lent the money on such personal credit. The principle would apply to an ordinary trustee who is not a Sanyasi. Lakshmindrathirtha Swamiar v. Raghavendra Rao (1). In Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandarasannadhi (2) it is shown that the proper decree in cases of this sort is a decree for payment by the defendant personally and out of the temple funds.

The defendant does not appear to oppose this petition.

I reverse the decree of the lower Court and order that a decree issue as prayed for against the defendant with costs.

Miscellaneous appeal from an order of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 22nd May 1924, remanding that of the Fourth Class, Sub-Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 8th January 1924.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Appellant.

Lala Kanshi Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Certain land was owned jointly by two brothers, Roshan Beg and Khandal Beg. The latter died leaving a widow, and the Revenue Records showed the land was owned jointly by Roshan Beg and Musammat Bago, the widow. Steps were then taken by Government to acquire this land under the Land Acquisition Act. On the 11th of November 1922, Roshan Beg presented an application in writing to the Land Acquisition Collector stating that Musammat Bago held a half share in the land as a life-tenant in lieu of maintenance and that she was not entitled to any part of the price to be paid by Government for it. He asked that the whole price should be paid to him or else half the money deposited in some Bank and the interest given to Musammat Bago for so long as she lived.

On the 14th of November 1922 the Collector delivered his formal award under s. 11 of the Act in which he made no mention of the dispute between Roshan Beg and Musammat Bago. In the award statement of the same date the Collector entered the price of this land, namely, Rs. 1,451-13-6, as apportioned equally between Roshan Beg and Musammat Bago, viz., Rs. 725-7-9 to each. Other statements attached to the award show that Rs. 725-9-9 was paid to Roshan Beg on the 15th of November and that Musammat Bago's money was entered as undisbursed owing to non-attendance.

On the 15th of November, but not before, the Collector proceeded to enquire into Roshan Beg's petition of the 11th of November and on that day he recorded Musammatt Bago's statement claiming that half of the compensation should be paid to her because she and Roshan Beg were in separate possession of definite halves of the land. The order passed by the Collector on the same day, the 15th of November was that the amount due to Musammatt Bago was to be kept in deposit and that the record of a criminal case in which Roshan Beg's son had been sentenced to death should be sent for.

Thereafter there were various adjournments, and it was not until the 23rd of February 1923, that the application came before the Collector for final decision. By that time the six weeks within which Roshan Beg could have applied for a reference to the Court under s. 18 had expired. Counsel appeared before the Collector for both Musammatt Bago and Roshan Beg, and apparently arguments centered round the question whether the application of the 11th of November could be taken as one for a reference to the Court under s. 18. The Collector decided that it could not, because it did not expressly ask that the matter should be referred to the Court. He might also very well have added a second reason that the application had been presented before the award had been made. The Collector wound up his order by saying "I see no reason to go beyond the entries in the revenue papers and direct that the award (sic) may be divided in accordance with those entries."

On the 10th of March 1923, Roshan Beg instituted the suit of which this second appeal is the result, to recover from Musammatt Bago Rs. 725-9-9. The Trial Court held that such a suit did not lie in view of the terms of the Land Acquisition Act and certain rulings which will be discussed presently. This decision was reversed on appeal by the learned District Judge who took the view that since the Collector's award did not adjudicate upon the claim of Roshan Beg against Musammatt Bago he was entitled to maintain a suit for recovery of the money in a Civil Court. The appeal accordingly was accepted and the suit was remanded for decision on the merits. Musammatt Bago has come to this Court on second appeal and her claim that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit is supported by a decision of the Calcutta High Court printed as Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (1).

The relevant provisions of the Land Acquisition Act are as follows:—Under s. 9 the Collector is obliged to serve notice of the intended acquisition on all persons known to be interested and to call upon them to appear and state amongst other matters the nature of their respective interests in the land. Presumably in response to such notice Roshan Beg put in his written application of the 11th of November. Under s. 11 on the day fixed for enquiry the Collector is directed to proceed to enquire into various matters including the respective interests of the persons claiming the compensation and to make an award under his hand of the true area of the land, the compensation which in his opinion should be allowed for the land, and the apportionment of the said compensation among all the persons known or believed to be interested in the land, of whom, or of whose claims, he has information, whether or not they have respectively appeared before him. Section 12 then lays down that that award shall be filed in the Collector's office and shall be final and conclusive evidence, as between the Collector and the persons interested, whether they have respectively appeared before the Collector or not, of the true area and value of the land, and the apportionment of the compensation among the persons interested. Section 18 of the Act provides that any person interested who has not accepted the award may, by written application to the Collector require that the matter be referred by the Collector for the determination of the Court, and this is to be done within six weeks of the date of the award if the person was present or represented before the Collector when the award was made. Under s. 30, when the amount of compensation has been settled under s. 11, if any dispute arises as to the apportionment, the Collector may refer such dispute to the decision of the Court. Section 31 requires the Collector to tender payment of the compensation awarded by him to the persons interested, and in the second sub-section it is provided that if they do not consent to receive the payment or if there be a dispute the Collector must deposit the amount of the compensation in the Court to which a reference under s. 18 would be submitted. There are three provisos to this sub-section, and the third is that nothing herein contained shall affect the liability of any person, who may receive the whole or any part of any compensation awarded under this Act, to pay the same to the person lawfully entitled thereto.

It will be observed that in the present case the Collector made his award under s. 11 before enquiring into the respective interests of Roshan Beg and Musammam Bago, a question which was raised before him four days previously by Roshan Beg. It appears then from the law above quoted that his adjudication after enquiry dated the 23rd of February 1923 was made without jurisdiction. Neither learned Counsel before me claims that this order can be read as part of the award. It cannot be an order on an application for review or modification of the award since it was on an application presented before the award was made. Apparently, therefore, the Collector, if he was not able to pass orders upon Roshan Beg's application of the 11th of November before he made his award, should have referred the question to the Court under s. 30.

So far as the true award of the 14th of November is concerned it contained an apportionment of the compensation between Musammam Bago and Roshan Beg, but this apportionment was made without any enquiry into their respective interests, such as s. 11 directs the Collector to make.

Most, if not all, of the rulings on the question whether disputes about the apportionment between private persons of compensation awarded under the Land Acquisition Act can be the subject of ordinary civil suits refer to the earliest case on the subject, Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) which is a decision by their Lordships of the Privy Council. In those days the Act in force was X of 1870 which did not empower the Collector to decide any questions of apportionment of compensation, but obliged him in s. 38, if any dispute arose as to apportionment when the amount of compensation had been settled, to refer such dispute to the decision of the Court. Section 40 of the Act contained a proviso in practically the same words as the proviso to the present s. 31 (2) quoted above. In the case before their Lordships there had been a dispute between two parties about the apportionment of the compensation. The Collector had referred it to the Court and the Court had made an adjudication. One of the parties then brought another suit to set aside that adjudication. It was held that the proviso referred to above applied only to persons whose rights had not been adjudicated upon in pursuance of ss. 38 and 39, namely, the sections requiring the Collector to refer disputes about apportionment to the Court and the Court to decide them. The judgment wound up: "Their Lordships are of opinion that the provisions in this Act for the settling of compensation are intended to be final; and that the amount and distribution of the compensation having been settled in this case by a competent Court, and the decision not having been appealed against, the settlement is final, and the present suit cannot be maintained." Earlier in the judgment when explaining the necessity for the proviso in the Act their Lordships observed: "But it may happen, and frequently does happen, that the real owners, possibly being infants or persons under disability, do not appear, and are not dealt with in the first instance; and, therefore, a provision of this sort is necessary for the purpose of enabling the parties who have a real title to obtain the compensation money."

This ruling has been considered and interpreted in three decisions of the Calcutta High Court (i) Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (3), (ii) Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Rai (4) and (iii) Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (1) and by the Punjab Chief Court in Sher Khan v. Shamsher Khan (5) which was followed in Amolak Shah v. Charan Das (6).

Rajah Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) is a case almost exactly parallel to the present case. There the plaintiff sued to recover compensation awarded under the Land Acquisition Act against the person who actually received the money. It was ruled that she (the plaintiff was a female) was not precluded from maintaining the suit merely by reason of her having appeared before the Collector in the acquisition proceedings, that the award of the Collector, who under s. 11 is, no doubt, authorised to deal with the question of apportionment, is declared by s. 12 of the Act to be final only as between the Collector on the one hand and the body of claimants on the other and not as between the claimants inter se, that a claimant is not precluded from advancing his or her claim against another claimant by suit in the Civil Court as provided by the last proviso to s. 31 (2) of the Act, and that to hold that he or she is so precluded would be to extend the doctrine of constructive res judicata a great deal too far. The learned Judges considered that this view was in accordance with that taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) and interpreted that decision in its allusions to ss. 38 and 39 of the old Act as referring strictly to an adjudication of a Civil Court upon a reference by the Collector.

The same view was adopted and expressed more elaborately by Mr. Justice Mookerji in Bhandi Singh v. Ramadhin Rai (4). With reference to s. 18 he observed that there was a difference between an objection relating to the measurement of the land or the amount of the compensation and one relating to the apportionment of the compensation among persons interested and that a question of the latter character could be determined either by a reference as contemplated by s. 18 or else by a suit at the instance of a person who might lawfully be entitled as against another. This he appointed out was a question with which the Collector would have no concern whatsoever and he held that by reason of the 3rd proviso to s. 31 (2) the Land Acquisition Judge and the ordinary Court have practically concurrent jurisdiction to decide disputes about the apportionment of compensation. What he apprehended to be the rule deducible from Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) was that if a litigant had made his choice and availed himself of a reference to the Court under s. 18, he could not again ask for an opportunity to litigate the same matter in the ordinary Court.

Both these decisions were dissented from in Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bejoy Chand. Mohatap (1). So far as Bhandi Singh v.

Ramadhin Rai (4) was concerned the learned Judges pointed out with truth that in the particular case before him it was unnecessary for Mr. Justice Mookerji to consider whether the Special Court under the Land Acquisition Act and the ordinary Civil Courts have or have not concurrent jurisdiction. With every deference, however, I do not think that their dissent from what was held in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (3) is very convincing. The learned Judges seem to have proceeded very largely upon what they considered it would be reasonable to hold was the intention of the Legislature when providing a special remedy in the Land Acquisition Court, whereas with all respect I venture to think that they should have looked rather to the actual term of the Act than to the probable intention of the Legislature. They emphasized the second passage quoted above from Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) commencing, "But it may happen and frequently does happen" and they held that the application of the proviso to s. 31 (2) must be limited to cases where the person is under disability or is not served with notice of the proceedings before the Collector. They further expressed the opinion that the reason why their Lordships of the Judicial Committee referred to the adjudication under ss. 38 and 39 of the old Act was that the Collector was then bound to refer any question of apportionment to the Court and that question had to be decided by the Civil Court. The case before them was whether a party served with notice under s. 9 who did not appear at all in the land acquisition proceedings and did not apply for any reference under s. 18 of the Act could afterwards maintain a suit in the ordinary Civil Court to recover compensation paid to another person. They decided that he could not do so because the proviso to s. 31 (2) has a strictly limited application and because it would not be reasonable to hold that the Legislature, having provided a special remedy in the Land Acquisition Court, intended to make it optional with a party to apply for a reference or to institute a suit in the ordinary Civil Court.

Sher Khan v. Shamsher Khan (5) is a Division Bench ruling and the facts of the case are not stated explicitly in the judgment. It was one of contention between two claimants for the apportionment of compensation, and it was held that, since the plaintiffs' claim had been adjudicated on by the Collector and they did not within the prescribed time avail themselves of their right to demand reference to the Court under s. 18, they had exhausted their remedy and their separate suit in Civil Court had been rightly dismissed. Raja Nilmoni Singh v. Ram Bandhu Rai (2) was cited as authority for the view that the proviso to s. 31 (2) does not permit a person, whose claim had been adjudicated upon in the manner pointed out by the Act, to have that claim re-opened and again heard in another suit.

This case and Amolak Shah v. Charan Das (6) are distinguishable from the present case since in my view there has been no lawful adjudication by the Collector between Roshan Beg and Musammam Bago. If no definite point for decision had been put before him in the shape of Roshan Beg's application his apportionment might have been regular; but under s. 11 he was bound to make an enquiry into any question which arose regarding the interest of the several persons entitled to compensation and he did not do so in respect of the question raised by Roshan Beg until after he had made his award.

It remains to notice a Division Bench ruling of the High Court [Chandu Lal v. Ladli Begam (7)] in which it was held that where a Collector in his award had not adjudicated upon the claim of the plaintiff the latter's suit in a Civil Court for her proportionate share in the amount of compensation allowed was competent notwithstanding that she did not apply for a reference to the Court under s. 18 of the Act. The plaintiff in that case had not appeared before the Collector at all and it is not stated whether notice had issued to her. She herself asserted that she had had no knowledge of the acquisition proceedings. The learned Judge ruled that the proviso to s. 31 (2) clearly applied to such a case, they distinguished Sher Khan v. Shamsher Khan (5) and Amolak Shah v. Charan Das (6) and they cited with approval Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (3).

This last decision is not quite so directly in point as the learned District Judge took it to be, since in the present case Roshan Beg did receive notice and appear before the Collector and he is recorded as having accepted payment of a less amount than he now claims without protest other than what is contained in his previous application of 11th November. But the judgment fortifies me in my preference for what was laid down in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (3) as against Saibesh Chandra Sarkar v. Bejoy Chand Mohatap (1). With some diffidence I suggest that the learned Judge, who decided the latter case, in considering the intention of the Legislature might have reflected upon the possibility of the Legislature, when framing the proviso to s. 31 (2), having intended that the comparatively important Court of the District Judge need not in every instance be saddled with the task of deciding every question arising between private individuals about the apportionment of petty sums, and that such individuals should be permitted to take their dispute to an inferior and possibly cheaper Court. After all the words in s. 18 are "may require" and not "shall require," and the expression "any person" in the third proviso to s. 31 (2) does not, in my humble judgment, carry the restricted meaning put upon it by the learned Judge, since the rest of the sub-section which the third proviso qualifies relates definitely to persons who have actually appeared before the Collector. In the present instance let it be taken that Roshan Beg accepted without any protest payment of the amount apportioned and tendered to him by the Collector. By the second proviso to s. 31 (2) he thereby disentitled himself from making an application for a reference under s. 18; but under the third proviso nothing contained in the second proviso can affect the liability of Musammam Bago, another person interested, to pay to Roshan Beg any part of the compensation to which he is lawfully entitled. And by what other means than by a suit in a Civil Court could Roshan Beg, who is shut out from a remedy under s. 18, enforce that liability? The words "nothing herein contained" in the third proviso must, it seems to me, cover everything that has gone before, including the second proviso.

If Roshan Beg accepted payment under protest, then the Collector prevented him from seeking any remedy under s. 18 by retaining the petition of the 11th November for his own subsequent decision and by failing to pass orders upon it until after the time limit for an application for a reference had expired. It is to be noted too that the disputed amount which was withheld from Ma Tok was deposited in the Treasury and not in the Court under s. 31 (2). All the equities, then, are in favour of Roshan Beg being permitted to sue in an ordinary Court to establish his claim.

There is of course a conflict between the view taken in Srimati Punnabati Dai v. Rajah Pudmanund Singh Bahadur (3) and that taken in the two Punjab rulings Sher Khan v. Shamsheer Khan (5) and Amolak Shah v. Charan Das (6). The former is that the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts is ousted only when the claim of the aggrieved party has already been before the District Court on a reference under s. 18 or s. 30 of the Land Acquisition Act. The latter refuses such party any relief in a Civil Court if his claim has been adjudicated upon by the Collector and there has been no reference to the District Court. This divergence requires no examination in the present case, because for the reason above stated I do not consider that the Collector's award of the 14th November was an adjudication of Roshan Beg's claim.

I hold that the decision of the learned District Judge was correct and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

SPECIAL SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 115
OF 1924.

January 12, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Pratt.

MA TOK AND OTHERS—APPELLANTS
versus

MA YIN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 11—Res judicata between co-defendants, conditions of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 123—Suit by heir to recover share of estate of deceased from co-heirs—Limitation applicable.

In order that a decision should operate as res judicata between co-defendants there must have been a conflict of interest between the co-defendants, and it should have been necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give the plaintiff relief appropriate to his suit and the judgment must contain a decision of the question raised as between the co-defendants defining the rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. [p. 490, col. 1.]

There is no reason why a different aspect should be given to a claim for a distributive share of the estate of a deceased person against an administrator, who should have distributed the estate and given a share to the plaintiff but failed to do so, from the aspect of a similar claim against one or more heirs of a deceased person who should have amicably agreed to a partition of the estate and given a share to the plaintiff but have failed to do so. Such a suit is governed by Art. 123 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [p. 490, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiffs as surviving descendants of Ma Min Sin and Ma Kin, daughters of Po Kyu, deceased, sued Ma Tok and other representatives of Ko Hmu, a son of Po Kyu, the son of Ma Kin and others, for possession of half the estate of Po Kyu on payment of Rs. 750 being half the charges incurred by Ma Tok on litigation for recovery of the estate.

Plaintiffs' case was that Ma Tok held the lands on behalf of the co-heirs subject to discharge of the lien, which she possesses by reason of the expenses incurred by her on litigation in connection with the estate.

In a previous suit Po Ka sued Ma Tok and other representatives of Ko Hmu for one-fourth share of the estate of Po Kyu and obtained a decree. The suit went up to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, who held that Ma Tok had admitted Po Ka's interest in the suit lands, and that Po Ka had proved that the lands belonged to the estate of Po Kyu, which remained undivided in the hands of Ko Hmu and his widow Ma Tok, and that consequently Po Ka was entitled to one-fourth of the estate on payment of one-fourth of the charges incurred by Ma Tok in connection therewith.

In the previous suit the present plaintiffs were co-defendants with Ma Tok. The Trial Court has found that the lands in suit were not part of the estate of Po Kyu; but on appeal the District Court has held that the finding of the Judicial Commissioner that the lands were ancestral property is binding in the present suit and that the subject-matter of it is, therefore, res judicata.

No doubt a finding in a previous suit may under certain circumstances be binding as between the defendants, but it is only with very strict reservations.

In Nga Thet Tha v. Mi Kye Gyi (1), it was laid down that where an adjudication between the defendants is necessary to give an appropriate relief to plaintiffs, there must be such an adjudication, and in such a case adjudication will be res judicata between the defendants as well as between the plaintiff and the defendants; but for this effect to arise there must be a conflict of interest between the defendants inter se. I have studied the judgment of the learned Judicial Commissioner in Civil Appeal No. 404 of 1915 and it is quite clear to my mind that there was no adjudication as between Ma Tok and the plaintiffs in the present case.

The learned Judge distinctly used the expression that as against Ma Tok and her children, Po Ka was entitled to one-fourth. He nowhere came to an express finding that the present plaintiffs were entitled to a share as against Ma Tok.

The limits within which an adjudication can be res judicata as between co-defendants were clearly laid down by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Jadav Chandra Sarkar v. Kailash Chandra Singh (2). Three necessary conditions were there prescribed: (1) that there should be a conflict of interest between the co-defendants; (2) that it should be necessary to decide on that conflict in order to give the plaintiff relief appropriate to his suit; and (3) that the judgment should contain a decision of the question raised as between the co-defendants.

In the earlier Bombay case of Ramchandra Narayan v. Narayan Mahadev (3), it was held inter alia that there must be a judgment defining the rights and obligations of the defendants inter se. This ruling was followed by a Bench of the High Court at Lahore in Mehra v. Devi Ditta Mal (4), and it was pointed out that without necessity a judgment will not be res judicata as between defendants.

A similar view was taken by a Bench of the Bombay High Court in Gajirani Balkrishn v. Vasudeo Dattatrya (5)

"I have no doubt that the law on the subject is correctly laid down in the judgments cited and that the conditions necessary to make the subject-matter of the present suit res judicata have not been fulfilled.

It may be a legitimate inference from the judgment of the Judicial Commissioner in the suit between Po Ka, the plaintiffs in the suit now under appeal and the defendant Ma Tok, that the property in suit is ancestral property and that the present plaintiffs have a right to a half share as against Ma Tok, but as I have already pointed out, there has been no express adjudication to this effect as between the co-defendants in that suit.

I am unable, therefore, to accept the view of the learned District Judge that the subject-matter of the present suit is res judicata.

Ma Tok obtained possession of the disputed property as the result of litigation about 1892.

How long before that Po Kyu died is not clear. It is to my mind incontestable that suit by co-heirs for a share against her has been long barred under Art. 123 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act.

I entirely agree with the observation of Lentaigne, J., in Maung Po Kin v. Maung Shew Bya (6) (at page 415*), that there is no reason why a different aspect should be given to a claim for a distributive share against an administrator, who should have distributed the estate and given a share but failed to do so, from the aspect of a similar claim against one or more heirs who should have amicably agreed to partition of the estate and given a share but failed to do so.

The appropriate Article for suits against co-heirs for a share in the corpus of an inheritance is 123. I have little doubt that, had the applicability of Art. 123 been urged before the Judicial Commissioner, the result of Po Ka's suit would have been different.

Assuming that when Ma Tok obtained the estate by litigation, she was willing to give the heirs their legal shares on receipt from them of a proportionate share of the expenses incurred by her, and that she was legally bound to do so, yet there must be a limit to her willingness and to her obligation.

She cannot be expected to hold the estate for ever at the will and pleasure of the other heirs or their representatives.

The right to pay off a portion of her lien and obtain a share must be exercised within a reasonable time.

I am not prepared to hold that there was joint possession or that Ma Tok was merely a trustee for the plaintiffs. The learned Judicial Commissioner attached more importance to the admission of Ma Tok before the Settlement Officer in 1912 that Mi

Yin, first plaintiff, is interested in the estate than I am prepared to give. It cannot be treated as an unqualified admission that plaintiffs had a subsisting right to a share in the estate. Ma Tok may have said that Ma Yin had an interest, but she did not know the law of limitation, and her statement cannot be construed as an admission that Ma Yin still had a legal title enforceable in Court.

It seems to me it would be iniquitous after Ma Tok had peaceable possession of the estate for thirty years, having recovered it by litigation at her own expense, to allow other heirs to step in now and obtain a share, when they have slept on their rights for so long.

If their rights were conceded, no holder of ancestral estate which he had recovered or redeemed, would be safe so long as co-heirs, or their legal representatives survived, nor would his successors apparently until there has been an overt act rendering the possession adverse to the co-heirs.

The doctrine that an heir, who redeems or recovers ancestral estate with the consent, express or implied of the co-heirs holds on their behalf can be pressed too far.

In the present suit, however, plaintiffs have been held by both the Courts below to have failed to prove their claim on the merits. As I have held that the subject-matter of the suit is not res judicata the appeal must, therefore, succeed apart from the question of limitation.

I set aside the finding and decree of the District Court and restore the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—These are appeals in suits filed on judgments obtained in the Colombo Court against a partnership whose members were the defendants or their predecessors-in-interest. The lower Court has found that the partnership did not submit to the jurisdiction of the Colombo Court, but as against some of the defendants there was jurisdiction because they individually submitted to that jurisdiction. It has been held in Ramanathan Chettyar v. Kalimuthu Pillay (1) and also in Jannothassain v. Mahamad Ohuthu (2), that the execution of the power-of-attorney authorising an agent to conduct litigation in a Foreign Court is a submission to jurisdiction. In the present case, it is clear from the deed of partnership and from the power of attorney by one of the managing partners Exs. H and J that the holder of the power was authorised to file suits, to defend suits and to carry on all manner of proceedings in the Courts in Ceylon. It is suggested for the respondents that these documents were not in force at the time these suits were filed, because the partnership has been dissolved. The only evidence we have on this point is the statement of the plaintiff that he thinks that the partnership was dissolved at about the time of the riots and the statement of the 2nd defendant that the business of the firm ended in 1914, but the 2nd defendant adds, "I did not authorise my partners there to contest the suits in Ceylon", thus implying that there was a partnership existing. On this evidence it is quite impossible to come to the conclusion that the partnership had been dissolved at the date on which the suits were filed. The mere fact that the partners ran away to India on account of the riots in Ceylon does not, as the Subordinate Judge remarks, terminate the partnership and in the absence of any other evidence that the partnership was terminated, we must hold that this deed of partnership and the power-of-attorney were in full force on the date of the suits. There is also an additional circumstance which would possibly give the Ceylon Court jurisdiction and that is the fact that the defendants firm actually filed suit in the Ceylon Court and having come in as plaintiffs can hardly be allowed as defendants to deny the jurisdiction which they themselves invoked and in this connection I would refer to a judgment in Second Appeal No. 1492 of 1920 (not reported). The question whether the plaintiff obtained an assignment of the decrees benami for the defendants firm was raised and contested in the Ceylon Court and consequently that finding is now conclusive under s. 13 of the C. P. C.

The respondents raised a further point that in a case in which there was no appearance, the decision cannot be said to have been upon the merits but this question has been fully discussed in Janoothassan v. Mahamad Ohuthu (2), to which one of us was a party and we are prepared to follow that decision again.

In the result the appeals must be allowed and there will be a decree in each case for the plaintiff as sued for with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 20 (c)—Suit to recover loan—Place of suing.

In the absence of a contract to the contrary it is the duty of the borrower to seek out the lender for payment. In such a case the money is payable at the place where the lender resides or carries on business and a suit for the recovery of the money may, therefore, be brought at such place. [p. 493, col. 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge Small Cause Court, Moradabad, dated the 8th May 1925.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—These two applications in revision may be disposed of by the same judgment as the facts are very similar.

The applicants who are plaintiffs in two different suits are money-lenders by profession and their practice of money-lending is something like this. They send munims or trusted servants of theirs with money to villages in different districts with instructions to lend money to people who might stand in need of borrowing. It is alleged that the defendants in these two cases borrowed money from the plaintiffs' agents, in one case in the District of Bareilly and in the other in the District of Shahjahanpur. The plaintiffs are residents of the District of Moradabad. The debtors did not pay and thereupon they brought the two suits for recovery of the money at Moradabad.

The defendants did not appear. The plaintiffs' agents who had lent the money in each case went into the witness-box and swore that there was an express agreement by the debtors that they would re-pay the loans at Moradabad. The agents further produced memoranda made in the account books of the plaintiffs to the effect that the borrowers had agreed to re-pay the money at Moradabad.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court disbelieved the evidence given to the effect that there was an express agreement to re-pay the money at Moradabad. The evidence was trustworthy and should have been accepted. He was of opinion that it was not likely to have been the case that the borrowers would come to Moradabad to make payment. Evidently the learned Judge thought that the borrowers had agreed to pay at their own homes where the loans were advanced.

Assuming that the evidence that the defendants had agreed to pay at Moradabad was untrustworthy, we have to rely on presumptions of law alone. For there is no evidence to show that the borrowers and the lenders had agreed that re-payment would be made only at the borrowers' place. The presumption of law was pointed out in the cases quoted by the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court himself, and it is this that in the absence of a contract to the contrary the borrower ought to seek out the lender for payment. The learned Judge was, therefore, not justified in ignoring the rulings of this Court. They were really not quite distinguishable specially the case reported as Bangali Mal v. Firm Ganga Ram-Ashrafi Mal (1).

I allow the applications in revision, set aside the decrees of the Court below and decree the plaintiffs' claim in each case against the defendants with costs and interests at 6 per cent. per annum from the date of the institution of the suit till recovery.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 7—Proceedings, ex parte, against defendant—Application to appear in suit, whether necessary—Procedure.

Under the provisions of O. IX, C. P. C., if a defendant does not appear and so long as he is absent, the proceedings must necessarily be ex parte and under r. 6 of that Order, the Court is empowered to proceed notwithstanding that the defendant may be absent. Should, however, the defendant appear in the middle of the proceedings, by the very fact that he is present, the proceedings cease thenceforth to be ex parte and an application by him is necessary for being permitted to appear, but if on a late appearance he wishes to be placed in the same position as if he had appeared at the proper time, he should under r. 7 of the Order apply for permission to that effect. Mr. Khanchand Gopaldas, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Dhanjishah C. Agha, for Defendant No. 3.

ORDER.—By an application dated 24th June 1925 the third defendant prays that this Court should "vacate the ex parte order passed against him and allow him to appear and defend the suit under O. IX, r. 7 and s. 151 of the C. P. C."

It was explained to me that the order that is sought to be set aside is an order of 11th May 1925, which I shall set out below, and which was passed in circumstances of which the record contains the following note made by the second Registrar on the 6th of May 1925:

"Service deemed good against defendant No. 3. Defendant called absent, call up for ex parte orders against defendant No. 3 on 11th May 1925."

The matter was accordingly brought up in Court on the 11th of May 1925 and what occurred is recorded in the following terms:

"Defendant No. 3 called absent ex parte."

I was inclined to consider this last note as a mere statement of fact, that the defendant, being called, did not appear, and that, therefore, the proceedings at that time and during his absence, were ex parte; the only proceedings that I understand took place on the 11th of May being that the defendant was called, and that on his not appearing this uncontroverted fact was recorded. It was argued, however, that an order was made on the 11th of May whereby it was intended to inflict a sort of diminutio capitis or stigma on the third defendant who was thenceforth to be considered "ex parte." (The expression is not mine. I am unable to understand how a party can be ex parte. Proceedings of course may be ex parte if only one side appears). However, it be, it was argued that, owing to this order, the third defendant was under a disability from appearing in the suit instituted against him and that, if he did appear, the Court would be unable to consider him as otherwise than absent unless the order of the 11th of May was vacated on some such application as the present. The Court, it was said, was empowered to make such an order having such effect under O. IX, r. 7; and that the deleterious effects of the order affected not only the third defendant who was primarily subjected to it, but it affected the Court who could not hear what the third defendant may have to say unless it first held that he showed some sufficient cause for not having appeared on the previous occasion, presumably on the 11th of May.

The relevant provisions of the law are contained in the C. P. C., O. IX. The order begins by providing under r. 1 for the attendance of the parties on the day fixed in the summons for the defendant to appear and answer; and lays down (after containing some other rules not now relevant), that "where the plaintiff appears and the defendant does not appear when the case is called on for hearing, then, if it is proved that the summons was duly served, the Court may proceed ex parte." I will pause here to point out that it is under this rule that the Court is empowered in the first instance to proceed at all in the absence of one side, and on the appearance of the other side alone. Though the desirability, I might say, the necessity, of the Court having such powers to proceed ex parte is obvious, yet unless some such power were expressly given, it may well be argued that the Court would not have inherent powers to proceed ex parte, and that the existence of r. 6 of O. IX supports this contention.

The argument, however, before me is that the Court is not only empowered to proceed when the defendant is actually not in Court but to order that the proceedings shall thenceforth be ex parte. This contention is opposed to a fundamental principle on which our Courts purport to proceed that no man is to be judged without an opportunity being given to him of being heard. Thus even where bodies like castes and clubs have autonomous constitutions as regards their internal affairs and the Courts do not ordinarily interfere with their decisions in such matters yet if it is found, e. g., that a member of a caste or a club is expelled without being given an opportunity of answering the allegations against him the Courts interfere on the ground that the proceedings are opposed to natural justice.

But notwithstanding this fundamental principle the contention was supported before me by elaborate and I may say at once, very able arguments with which I shall proceed to deal. As a preliminary I may remark that (though the argument was not so expressed before me), I have a shrewd suspicion that no small basis of the argument was that since the Legislature has used the foreign expression 'ex parte' instead of saying "while only one party is present" or "notwithstanding that one of the parties is absent," therefore, the expression must have peculiar, perhaps I may say, magical effect.

The argument proceeds to the following effect, that under r. 6 (1) the Court may once for all decide that the hearing will in future be ex parte and that having done so, it may safely adjourn the hearing to another day. Then (it is argued) the hearing continues to be ex parte, notwithstanding that the defendant may thereafter appear: and in support of this proposition r. 7 is cited. That rule is in the following terms:—

"Where the Court has adjourned the hearing of the suit ex parte, and the defendant, at or before such hearing, appears and assigns good cause for his previous non-appearance, he may, upon such terms as the Court directs as to costs or otherwise, be heard in answer to the suit as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance."

Under this provision, it is argued, that the defendant having failed to appear at one stage of the hearing, cannot be permitted to appear, or be heard, at another stage without assigning good cause for his previous non-appearance. But this argument entirely overlooks the gist of r. 7, which is indicated by the last line of the rule: the object of this rule is that if sufficient cause is shown for non-appearance the defendant may upon terms, be placed in the same position, retrospectively as if he had appeared at the earlier stage. This interpretation of r. 7 may not strike one immediately on a reading of it by itself but it seems to me that no doubt can be left as to this being its import when it is read in connection with the rest of the relevant rules, viz., rr. 6, 7, 11 and 13. It is obvious that if there are several defendants and one or more of whom appear and the others do not appear, r. 11 provides for the case: and then the Court shall proceed and make its order with respect to the defendants who have not appeared only at the time of judgment. The magical power of "making the defendant ex parte" (the expression I have put in inverted seems actually to be current in some quarters) these magical powers are evidently denied to the Court where there being more defendants than one any one of them appears. Numbers apparently prevail even against magic.

But further under r. 13 where the whole suit has been heard ex parte the defendant not having appeared at all the defendant may still appear and if the Court is satisfied that he was prevented by any sufficient cause from appearing when the suit was called on for hearing, the Court is directed to set aside the decree against him upon terms.

So that the argument in favour of the "ex parte order" theory must in the first instance admit its inefficacy where there are several defendants and any one appears and what is more important, must proceed to this length that under it a defendant who appears, say an hour after the so-called ex parte order has been made, must be placed in a worse position than a defendant who does not appear at all and who permits the Court to proceed with the whole suit and to pass an ex parte decree. For in the former case the defendant can in no way be placed in regard to the hour during which he was absent in such a position as if he had been present from the start, whereas a defendant who does not appear at all can come under r. 13 and have the whole hearing over again.

It was then suggested that O. VIII, r. 10 and O. XVI, r. 20 give power to the Court straight away to pronounce judgment against a party who fails to present a written statement, or to give evidence or produce a document in his possession: and that, therefore, a defendant who had failed to appear altogether may have the comparatively minor penalty inflicted on him of having the suit heard without being permitted to appear. But the rules referred to, have application only in the cases specified, which, it is obvious are cases of contumelious disregard of the Court's orders in matters within the defendant's power. They have no analogy to the present discussion.

These rules and provisions seem so simple that I feel as though I were merely labouring the obvious; and I cannot help being surprised at the ability and persistence (I mean to annex no offensive implication) with which a different view was pressed before me.

Reliance was placed on the rules of the Supreme Court of England, O. XII, r. 22; O. XIII, rr. 6 and 10; O. XXVII, rr. 5, 13 to show that the practice in England also allowed of proceedings being ordered to be ex parte. I am not sufficiently familiar with English procedure to make any use of this argument: but so far as I am able to judge the English practice is so different from that of India that no advantage is gained by comparing the two sets of rules.

Several authorities were cited to me and I shall deal with them shortly: Syed Mahomed Hoosein v. Shaikh Montogul Huq (1) was decided under the Code of 1859 in which the corresponding provision ended with the words that "the defendant may be heard in answer to the suit" whereas the addition of the final words of O. IX, r. 7 viz., "as if he had appeared on the day fixed for his appearance," which were added in the Code of 1882 and retained in 1908 is very significant. These words and the context make the meaning perfectly clear. Even under the Code of 1859 a different view was taken in Newton v. Kurneedhone (2).

On the other hand there are three clear decisions which favour the view that I have taken Satyendia Nath Sen v. Narendra Nath Gupta (3) a judgment of Sir Asutosh Mookerji's; Manu v. Tulshi (4) Bhagwat Prasad Tewari v. Muhammad Shibli (5) in both these decisions Sir Pramade Charan Bannerji participated. The decision in Bhagwat Pershad v. Mahomed Shilbi (5) seems to be directly in point.

As I have explained above, the provisions of O. IX contain none of the absurdities that the plaintiff desires me to introduce in them. They are quite plain and clear: if the defendant does not appear, and so long as he is absent, the proceedings must necessarily be ex parte; and r. 6 empowers the Court to proceed, notwithstanding that he may be absent. Should the defendant appear in the middle of the proceedings by the very fact that he is present, the proceedings cease thenceforth, to be ex parte; and the rules do not provide for any magic by which the defendant who has appeared should be made to disappear, but what r. 7 does provide is, that on a late appearance he may on terms be placed in the same position as if he had appeared at the proper time, e. g., in regard to right to cross-examine a witness who may have been examined in his absence. Finally, r. 13 provides for the case where the defendant has failed to appear throughout even in that case the defendant may be placed in the same position as if he had appeared, viz., the decree itself may be set aside and the whole proceeding commenced de novo.

For the reasons, that I have given, I am of opinion that there is no order against the third defendant which I can vacate. The application will, therefore, be dismissed.

The plaintiff asks that the application should be dismissed with costs. But it is evident to me that there has been some misunderstanding of the procedure, for which the applicant is not responsible. It was the plaintiff who supported the procedure which I hold to be misconceived. There will, therefore, be no order as to costs.

On an appeal from an order refusing to restore a suit dismissed in default, the Appellate Court cannot make an order which the original Court could not legally have made. If the Appellate Court agrees with the Trial Court it must dismiss the appeal. If it differs from the Trial Court it should order the case to be restored either on terms or unconditionally. It has no jurisdiction to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff. [p 496, col. 2.]

For the purpose of O. IX, r. 8, C. P. C., it is the net amount for which the defendant admits liability after deducting all payments alleged by him which has to be taken into account. [ibid.]

Civil revision against an order of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 29th August 1925.

Mr. M. A. Aziz, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff filed a suit against the defendant which was dismissed under O. IX, r. 8, as on the date of hearing the defendant was present but the plaintiff was absent. An application was made under O. IX, r. 9 to restore the case but was rejected. Against that order the plaintiff appealed to the District Judge. Both the original and the Appellate Court found that there was no sufficient cause for the plaintiff's absence on the date of hearing and that no case was made out for restoration. The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the appeal found, however, that the defendant in his pleadings had admitted the claim to the extent of Rs. 288. He, therefore, on the appeal before him passed a decree in favour of the plaintiff to the extent of Rs. 288.

The defendant in revision urges that the Appellate Court had no power to pass a decree in favour of the plaintiff on an appeal from an order refusing to restore the suit. This plea is correct and must prevail. The powers of a Court to which an application for restoration is made are stated in O. IX, r. 9. The Court may either dismiss the application if it finds that there was no sufficient cause for the plaintiff's non-appearance, or it may allow the application and restore the suit on such terms as it sees fit. On an appeal from an order refusing to restore the suit the Appellate Court cannot make an order which the original Court could not legally have made. If the Appellate Court agrees with the Trial Court it will dismiss the appeal. If it differs from the Trial Court it will order the case to be restored either on terms or unconditionally. The plaintiff's remedy if he considered that his suit had been wrongly dismissed to the extent of Rs. 288 was to file an appeal against the decree dismissing his suit and such an appeal is permitted by s. 96 of the Code. As a matter of fact the Court below is wrong even in saying that the defendant admitted the claim to the extent of Rs. 288. The defendant pleaded payment to the extent of Rs. 110 and admitted a balance of Rs. 178 only. For the purpose of O. IX, r. 8, it is the net amount for which the defendant admits liability after deducting all payments alleged by him which has to be taken into account.

The Court below has acted without jurisdiction in decreeing the plaintiff's claim to the extent of Rs. 250. I set aside its order and restore the order of the Munsif. The applicant will get his costs both in this Court and in the Court below.

Immoveable properties given by a judgment-debtor as security pursuant to an order made under O. XX, r. 11, cl. 2, C. P. C., can be realised by the decree-holder in execution, unless there is anything in the security bond or the order of Court which precludes the security from being enforced in execution. [p. 499, col. 2; p. 500, col. 1.]

Where the parties intended that the properties covered by the security bond should be realised in execution, the decree-holder is not bound to resort to a separate suit for the purpose [ibid.]

The provisions of O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. C., are inapplicable to such a case and do not operate as a bar to the enforcement of the security bond in execution. [p. 498, col. 1.]

It would make no difference in the above case if a Hindu father alone is the judgment-debtor but the security bond is executed by the father and his undivided sons, as the latter could question the debt only if it were tainted with illegality or immorality. [p. 501, col. 1.]

The words "claim arising under the mortgage" have been substituted in O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. The effect of the alteration is to confine the prohibition against bringing the mortgaged property for sale, except by bringing a suit, to cases where a mortgagee has obtained a personal decree against the mortgagor on the mortgage-debt. The mortgage or charge mentioned in O. XXXIV, r. 14 must be a mortgage or charge existing prior to the decree and not created by the decree or one created by the act of parties subsequent to the decree [p. 499, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao.—I shall briefly state the facts that have given rise to this appeal. Execution was taken out of a money-decree and the judgment-debtor agreed to pay the decree-holder interest at an enhanced rate and executed in his favour a security bond in respect of certain immoveable properties. As a result of this, an order was made postponing execution under O. XX, r. 11, C. P. C. The judgment-debtor was subsequently adjudicated an insolvent and on the decree-holder seeking to attach the properties secured and bring them to sale, the Official Receiver applied to the Insolvency Court for an order to stay the sale directed by the Executing Court. The application was refused by the District Judge of East Tanjore and this appeal has been filed questioning the correctness of his order.

Mr. Varadachariar, the learned Vakill for the decree-holder, objected that apart from the merits of the case the Insolvency Court would have no power to make an order binding upon the Court executing the decree. As on hearing full arguments on the other contentions raised we intimated that we were against the appellant, Mr. Varadachariar did not have to argue the point relating to the power of the Insolvency Court. I shall, therefore, proceed to deal with the case as if the objection to the property being sold had been raised before the Executing Court itself.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer the learned Vakill for the appellant advanced the main contentions:—

(1) A security of this kind cannot be enforced in execution, as to do so will contravene the terms of O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. C.

(2) That under s 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920) the Executing Court on being informed that the judgment-debtor has become an insolvent is bound to stay the sale and direct the property to be handed to the Receiver in Insolvency.

I shall deal with these contentions in the order in which I have stated them.

The first contention is based on the terms of O. XXXIV r. 14, C. P. C. It runs, thus:—

"Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage.....". Every essential is wanting in this case. The section contemplates a mortgage and a decree. Under the section there must be first a mortgage and then a decree in respect of a claim arising under the mortgage. The position here is reversed. Long previous to the mortgage there was a decree and it was impossible that the decree could be in respect of a claim arising under a mortgage which was non-existent. The section, therefore, does not in terms apply.

Where the charge is created by the decree itself, O. XXXIV, r. 14 can have no application. See Sawbajia Ammal v. Manika Mudali (1) and Indramani Dasi v. Surendra Nath Mondal (2).

Where the security comes into existence subsequent to the decree, the principle applies a fortiori and O. XXXIV, r. 14, cannot be a bar.

In this connection I may notice two sets of cases to which reference has been made at the bar:—

First, cases under s. 145, where in execution, security was sought to be enforced against a surety.

Second, cases under certain other sections of the Code where the judgment-debtor was the party against whom security was attempted to be enforced.

Let me first deal with cases under s. 145. In Mukta Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (3) the property of the surety was allowed to be sold in execution. The ground of the decision was that he rendered himself personally liable and his personal liability could be enforced by the very property given as security being attached and sold. In Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (4) it was held that although the surety had made himself personally liable, the charge against the property could be enforced only by means of a regular suit. I may point out that though Mukta Prasad v. Mahadeo Prasad (3) was in this case distinguished, the ground of the distinction is wrong as what was attempted to be sold was not merely the judgment-debtor's equity of redemption. In Chandrabati v. Babu Ram (5) the bond created a personal liability but it was held that the property given as security could not be sold in execution although the personal liability of the surety could be otherwise enforced. In Brojendra Lala Dass v. Lakshmi Narain Khanna (6) s. 145 was held inapplicable as the surety had not undertaken any personal liability and the properties were not allowed to be sold in execution. In Raj Raghobar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (7) their Lordships of the Judicial Committee observe that if the surety has not rendered himself personally liable, s. 145 has no application; but when there is a personal liability undertaken the question is left open.

An examination of most of these cases will show that what is mainly said to be in the way of the security being enforced, is the repealed s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act or the provision now corresponding to it, namely, O. XXXIV, r. 14, C. P. C.

These cases, in my opinion, may be easily disposed of as they deal with a specific section of the Code which gives express rights against a surety and what these rights are, must be determined with reference to that section alone. We are not now in this appeal concerned with s. 145.

I shall now deal with cases where a security bond was executed by a party to the suit itself. In Shyam Sunder Lal v. Bajpai Jainarayan (8) an application was made by the defendant judgment-debtor for stay of execution and it was granted upon his giving security in the sum of Rs. 10,000. By the security bond which was executed, certain properties were mortgaged as security for the due performance of the decree. The decree-holder applied for realisation of the decree amount by sale of the properties comprised in the bond. Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act was relied on by the judgment-debtor who opposed the application. It was held that that section was not a bar as the bond was not addressed to the decree-holder but was in favour of the Court and that, therefore, there was no mortgage created.

In Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (9) the judgment-debtors executed a bond to the Registrar of the Court as security for the costs of the respondents in appeal to the Privy Council. They sought to enforce the security by selling in execution of the decree for costs the property comprised in the bond. It was held that a valid mortgage was created and that under s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act, the security could not be enforced without the institution of a regular suit.

Although Shyam Sunder Lal v. Bajpai Jainarayan (8) was distinguished in Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (9) on the ground that in the former case the bond was given to the Court and in the latter it was executed to the Registrar, these decisions are in truth irreconcilable.

Section 99 of the Transfer of Property Act has been replaced by O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the C. P. C. The repealed section ran thus:—

“Where a mortgagee in execution of a decree for the satisfaction of any claim, whether arising under the mortgage or not, attaches the mortgaged property, he shall not be entitled to bring such property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit under s. 67 .....

Order XXXIV, r. 14, has been reproduced in an earlier part of this judgment.

The effect of the alteration is to confine the operation of the rule to cases where a mortgagee has obtained a personal decree against the mortgagor on the mortgage debt. In such a case, the mortgagee can have the property sold only by instituting a regular suit for sale. The Madras High Court in Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10), recognising the effect of this alteration has held that the provision now in force does not stand in the way of the property given as security being sold in execution. In that case immoveable property was given by a judgment-debtor as security for the due performance of a decree pursuant to an order made under O. XLI, r. 5 (3), C. P. C., and it was held that the property could be sold in execution. In that case immoveable property was given by a judgment-debtor as security for due performance of a decree, pursuant to an order made under O. XLI, r. 5 (3) C. P. C., and it was held that the property could be sold in execution without recourse being had to an independent suit. I may mention that in Baij Nath Goenka v. Sia Ram Das (11) the Calcutta High Court held that s. 99 did not operate as a bar. This was decided later than Shyam Sunder Lal v. Bajpai Jainarayan (8) and Tokhan Singh v. Girwar Singh (9) and previous to Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10). The referring Judges advert to the conflict of authority and indicate a clear preference in favour of the view that the property can be sold in execution.

In the most recent case, Jyoti Prakash Nandi v. Mukti Prakash Nandi (12), the view of the Madras High Court has been followed.

The weight of authority, therefore, supports the view that security given by a judgment-debtor can be enforced and the property covered by the bond be sold in execution.

In the cases mentioned above, security was not taken under O. XX, r. 11 and on this ground it may be contended that there is no direct authority on the question raised. But in principle is there any difference? Order XX, r. 11, contemplates a complete or qualified stay of execution and some of the sections, if any rate, considered in those cases provide similarly for stay of execution. If the view of the law taken in those cases is correct, the fact that in the present case, the security bond was taken under O. XXI, r. 11, makes no difference and we must hold that the decree-holder in execution of his decree and without being compelled to file a regular suit can bring the property to sale.

In regard to cases that arise under O. XX, r. 11, the principle may be thus stated. Unless it is shown that the security was taken in satisfaction of the decree, it was presumably intended that the order made should be capable of execution. If on a construction of the order, the Court comes to the conclusion that the decree is not satisfied and there is no bar created which precludes the decree from being executed, it is the duty of the Court to allow execution by enforcing sale. Whether it be regarded that what is sought to be executed is the original decree itself or an executable order made under the special provision of the law contained in O. XX, r. 11, it makes very little difference.

In Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10) the learned Judges took the view that it is not only the right of the decree-holder to bring the property to sale in execution but that under s. 47, C. P. C., the remedy by way of regular suit is not open to him. It is not necessary to rest my judgment on this ground.

General considerations were strongly pressed before us both in favour of and against the acceptance of this view.

In Tokan Singh v. Girwar Singh (9) at page 50,* and in Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (4) page 228† the view that it is impolitic to sell the property in execution is set forth. In the first case Mookerjee, J., says thus:—"It is quite conceivable for instance that after a property has been given in security by the judgment-debtor an interest may be acquired in it by other persons; if it is sold in execution of the decree...it would in such a case be necessarily sold behind the back of persons interested who would have no opportunity of redemption and their interest would not be prejudiced by the sale and they would be entitled to enforce their claim by independent suits".

Weighty reasons are given for the view I am disposed to take by the referring Judges in Baij Nath Goenka v. Sia Ram Das (11). The provision is embodied in the law for the protection of the decree-holder and it must be interpreted to operate to his advantage. By refusing to sell the property in execution, far from securing to the decree-holder the due execution of his decree the Court renders the decree itself incapable of execution against the property covered by the security. This is clearly unjust. This view is shared by the learned Judges who decided Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10), for to quote their very words "It would be a most mischievous state of law if such a thing (a mortgage suit) were necessary and it would fetter the discretion of the Court in accepting immoveable property as security"..... In my opinion if it is permissible to advert to such general considerations the balances of convenience is clearly in favour of the view taken by the Calcutta Judges and the learned Judges of this Court.

Mr. Varadachariar suggested that if there are subsequent encumbrancers their right will be to proceed against the surplus money, if any. On the other hand, Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer urged that such encumbrancers will be entitled to redeem the purchaser at the sale. I do not propose to express any opinion on this point as this has only a remote bearing on the question to be decided, in the appeal.

Then arises the question, is there any thing in the security bond or the order of the Court which precludes the security from being enforced in execution? In my opinion there is no obstacle created. On the contrary, the effect of the security bond seems to recognise this right of the decree-holder. The debtor renders himself personally liable, creates the charge and covenants that the security bond shall be in force till the decree is entirely satisfied. The order of the Court recites the fact that the security bond has been executed. On a construction of the bond and the order, I am of the opinion that the parties intended that the security should be capable of being realised in execution.

I have now disposed of the first contention raised by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer. I shall proceed to deal with the second contention, namely, that based upon s. 52 of the Insolvency Act. Under that section, where after execution has issued, the Executing Court receives notice of the insolvency of the judgment-debtor, it is bound to direct the property if in its possession to be delivered to the Receiver in insolvency. It is conceded by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer that this does not apply to mortgage-decree holders and this is obvious enough. But he says that the decree in question being a money-decree, the fact that the decree-holder is a secured creditor makes no difference and that s. 52 applies. I am unable to agree

Section 52 is somewhat generally worded, but it must receive construction not repugnant to the general scheme of the Act, namely, to save the rights of secured creditors. It is sufficient to refer in this connection to s. 28 (6), s. 47 and s. 51 (2). There is nothing in the wording of these sections to show that money decree-holders who have obtained security are excluded. Under s. 2 creditor is defined as including a decree-holder, debt as including a judgment debt and secured creditor is described as a person holding a mortgage charge or lien on the property of the debtor as security for a debt due from him. I am clearly of the opinion that s. 52 does not apply.

I have so far dealt with the two main contentions raised on behalf of the appellant. There is a subsidiary point which has been taken on his behalf and I shall now proceed to deal with it. It is said that the decree was passed against the father only but that the bond was executed by the father and the sons and that, therefore, the property cannot be sold in execution. There might be some force in the argument if the bond had been executed not by the sons of the judgment-debtor but by others. But in the present case the decree-holder's right is not enlarged nor is the liability of the executants affected by reason of the existence of the security bond. It was executed by the father as the guardian of his minor sons and whether they were parties to it or not, their right would still be the same, namely, to question the debt if it is tainted with illegality or immorality. The circumstance that sons are also parties to the bond, therefore, makes no difference.

The order appealed against must be upheld and the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—The facts of the case are fully set out in my learned brother's judgment. The first question arising for our decision is whether the immoveable properties given by the judgment-debtor as security pursuant to an order made under O. XX, r. 11, cl. 2, C. P. C., can be realised by the decree-holder in execution or can only be realised in a separate suit.

The material portion of the security bond runs as follows:— "..... Whereas on your petition attachment has been ordered of our lands in Tenkarai Isranu for the said decree amount, whereas you have consented to our request not to proceed with the attachment and sale, we have hereby given as security to you for the amount of Rs. 12,620-4-0 being the amount up to date under the said decree our properties as mentioned in the schedule ..... We shall pay you without trouble or compulsion the above said decree amount, etc., according to the terms of the kararnama petition (viz., petition under O. XX, r. 11, of the C. P. C.) ..... If we do not pay you accordingly, you shall execute the said decree according to the terms of the kararnama petition, and for the balance, if any, after what is so realised by you, we undertake to pay you up to the limit of Rs. 12,620-4-0 on the security of the said properties and on our personal responsibility". The circumstances relating to the execution of the security bond clearly show that the parties to the security bond intended that if the attachment and sale of the properties became necessary it should be done in execution. The security bond was executed after attachment was ordered; the judgment-debtor made himself personally liable; and the bond is to remain in force till the decree is fully satisfied. The security is intended to be operative if the judgment-debtor does not pay the decree amount and interest. Provision for the contingency of non-payment being made by the security bond, the parties could not have meant that when such contingency arose they should institute a separate suit to realise the properties covered by the bond. There can be no doubt that the parties intended that the properties should be realised if necessary in execution. But whatever be the intention of the parties, if there is any legal impediment in the way of realisation by execution, then the decree-holder will have to realise his security only by means of a separate suit. It has been strenuously argued by Mr. T. M. Krishnawami Iyer on behalf of the appellant that O. XXXIV, r. 14 of the C. P. C. operates as a bar to the enforcement of the security in execution.

(1) Rule 14 of O. XXXIV provides as follows:—

"Where a mortgagee has obtained a decree for the payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage, he shall not be entitled to bring the mortgaged property to sale otherwise than by instituting a suit for sale in enforcement of the mortgage, and he may institute such suit, notwithstanding anything contained in O. II, r. 2". The words "claim arising under the mortgage" have been substituted in this rule for the words "any claim whether arising under the mortgage or not" in the repealed s. 99 of the Transfer of Property Act. The effect of this alteration is to confine the prohibition against bringing the mortgaged property for sale except by bringing a suit, to cases where a mortgagee has obtained a personal decree against the mortgagor on the mortgage debt. Obviously the rule in terms does not apply to the present case. "The language of the rule makes it clear that the rule does not apply unless the decree obtained by the holder of the mortgage or charge falls within the description of a decree for payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage or charge. The mortgage or charge mentioned...must obviously be a mortgage or charge existing prior to the decree and not one created by the decree" [see Indramani Dasi v. Surendra Nath Mondal (2)] or one created by the act of parties subsequent to the decree.

Having regard to the important change introduced by O. XXXIV, r. 14, it has been held in Sowbagia Ammal v. Manika Mudali (1), Indramani Dasi v. Surendra (2) and Brajasunder Deb v. Sarat Kumari (13) that where a maintenance decree provided that the allowance in the decree should be charged on certain immoveable properties, such properties could be sold in execution of the decree and that there was no necessity to bring a separate suit for sale. The decision in Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10) is an instance of a case where the security was given by the judgment-debtor after a decree. In that case immoveable property was given by a judgment-debtor as security for the due performance of the decree in compliance with an order made under "O. XLI, r. 5(3)" and the question was raised whether such property can be realised by the decree-holder in execution or can only be realised by a separate suit. In view of the alteration of the language contained in O. XXXIV, r. 14, it was held that the provision contained in that rule did not operate as a bar and that the decree-holder can realise the property in execution. The learned Judges observe "There is no need in such a case that there should be anything in the nature of a mortgage suit for sale under s. 67 of the Transfer of Property Act with all the expense and delay which would be thereby involved. It would be a most mischievous state of law if such a thing were necessary and it would fetter the discretion of the Court in accepting immoveable property as security for the execution of the decree." In the Order of Reference to the Full Bench in Baij Nath Goenka v. Sia Ram Das (11) the learned Judges while discussing the principle underlying the provisions of s. 545, cl. (c) of the old C. P. C. point out that the provisions embodied in the law for the protection of the decree-holder must be interpreted to operate to his advantage and express their inclination to accept the view that the properties covered by the security bond executed pursuant to an order under that section could be realised in execution of the decree without instituting a separate suit. On this question, the view of the Madras High Court in Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad, (10) has been followed in the most recent case in Calcutta reported as Jyoti Prakash Nandi v. Mukti Prakash Nandi (12).

In my view the principle underlying the decision in Subramania Chettiar v. Raja of Ramnad (10) which relates to the realisation in execution of properties covered by security bond executed after a decree may well be applied to the decision of the present case, though the security bond here has been executed not under O. XLI, r. 5 but only under O. XX, r. 11, cl. (2). It has been argued that an order passed under O. XX, r. 11, cl. (2) is incapable of execution. Whether this is so, or not, is largely a question of the construction of the order and of the intention of the parties as may be gathered from the circumstances relating to the making of the order. I have already pointed out at the commencement of my judgment that there can be no doubt that the parties in this case intended that in the event of non-payment by the judgment-debtor the properties covered by the bond should be realised in execution. Execution being postponed by the order made under O. XXI, r. 11, cl. (2) which provided also for the taking of a security bond to meet the possible contingency of non-payment by the judgment-debtor, I fail to see when such contingency arises how the Court can refuse execution unless there be some legal impediment compelling the Court to disallow it.

All the cases discussed above show that if O. XXXIV, r. 14, does not operate as a bar, then the decree-holder can proceed against the secured properties by execution.

But it is argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer that even then, in this case, the properties charged cannot be sold in execution because the minor sons of the judgment-debtor who were not parties to the suit have joined in the execution of the security bond, their father representing them as guardian. There is no force in this contention. The new parties are not strangers but only the sons by the judgment-debtor. In view of the fact that the judgment-creditor is not seeking to sell under the security bond any interest which he could not otherwise have sold, I think this objection must be overruled.

Before I pass on to consider the second argument, I may state that it is unnecessary to discuss the decisions in Mukta Prasad v Mahadeo Prasad, (3) Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (4), Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahdur Singh (7) quoted by the appellant's learned Vakil in connection with his argument regarding the bar created by Order XXXIV, r. 14, as all these cases dealt with securities given by third parties under s. 145 of the C. P. C.

The second question for decision arises in connection with the argument based on s. 52 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. According to that section, where execution of a decree has issued against any property of a debtor which is saleable in execution and before it has been actually sold, notice is given to the Executing Court that an insolvency petition by or against the debtor has been admitted, then the Executing Court is bound, on application to that effect, to direct the property if in the possession of the Court to be delivered to the Receiver. It is argued by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer that the decree which is sought to be enforced in this case being a money decree, s. 52, of the Act applies and that, notwithstanding the fact that a security has been executed in favour of the decree-holder subsequent to the decree, his client is entitled to apply to the Executing Court to deliver over the property in question to him. Although a secured creditor is not expressly excluded from the operation of this section, it seems to me that this section does not affect him. The Provincial Insolvency Act takes special care to preserve the power of secured creditors to realise or otherwise deal with their securities, as may be seen from the ss. 28 (6) and 51 (2). The exemption from the operation of the section which must be understood to have been thus given to secured creditors must, in my opinion, be extended to money-decree-holders who have obtained securities in the course of execution, as in the present case. It is conceded that s. 52 does not apply to mortgage decree holders. In my opinion nothing in that section affects the rights of money decree-holders who have obtained securities in respect of the property covered by such securities. They must also be treated as secured creditors for purposes of the section [see also s. 2 (a) and (e) of the Act.] The argument based on s. 52 must, therefore, be overruled.

In the result, I agree with my learned brother that the order appealed against must be upheld and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

CIVIL REVISION No. 104 OF 1925.

OPPOSITE PARTY.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 28—Pro-note for withdrawal of non-compoundable case, suit on, whether maintainable—Public policy.

It is against public policy to receive money or a promise to receive money in consideration of an agreement to stifle a criminal prosecution for a non-compoundable offence. [p. 504, col. 1.]

Plaintiff was prosecuting one K for a non-compoundable offence, and in consideration of the defendant executing a pro-note in his favour for a certain sum of money withdrew the complaint with the permission of the Court. In a suit to recover the amount of the pro-note:

Held, that the suit was not maintainable inasmuch as the consideration for the pro-note being opposed to public policy was illegal. [ibid.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 22nd of April 1925.

Mr. S. K. Dar, for the Applicant.

Dr. M. Waliullah, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This revision arises out of a suit for recovery of money brought on a promissory-note dated the 10th of August 1923 admittedly executed by the respondent in favour of the plaintiff-applicant.

The Court below has found in effect that the plaintiff was prosecuting one Khairatullah for cheating, before cheating was made a compoundable offence. The plaintiff iff, on consideration of the respondent giving the promissory-note for the sum of Rs. 400, withdrew the complaint with the permission of the Court. On this finding the learned Judge held that the suit on the promissory-note was not maintainable as it was against public policy to receive money or a promise to receive money in consideration of an agreement to stifle a criminal prosecution.

In this Court it has been urged that there is not only the promissory-note but also the additional facts that on three occasions the respondent admitted his liability for the debt and on the third occasion also sent by money order a sum of Rs. 173 in part-payment. The point for consideration is whether the subsequent acknowledgments of the liability and the part-payment take the case out of the rule. Mr. Dar has argued that these acknowledgments and payment have materially affected the position of the applicant and that, therefore, he should succeed. He has, however, been unable to show that the applicant's civil remedy, if any, against Khairatullah has been lost owing to any conduct on the part of Wahiduddin the respondent. The promissory-note is dated the 10th of August 1923 and it is quite possible that the civil remedy against Khairatullah is still open. There is nothing to show that Wahiduddin prevented the plaintiff from prosecuting his civil remedy against Khairatullah. Further, it appears that parties should be taken to have known the legal consequence of the transaction and if the plaintiff contented himself with giving up his claim against Khairatullah he must be taken to have known the fact that his claim on the promissory-note against Wahiduddin was not enforceable in a Court of Law. In any view of the case the judgment of the Court below seems to have been right.

It appears that the suit involved two other items, small ones, and one of the pleas taken is that the Court below has not decided the plaintiff's claim as to those items. It has, however, been conceded before me to-day that no evidence was adduced as to those two items.

The application fails, and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tinnevely, dated the 13th of July 1922, in C. M. P. No. 566 of 1918, in I. P. No. 5 of 1917.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasa Gopalachari, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Madhavan Nair, J.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Tinnevely in C. M. P. No. 566 of 1918 on his file in which the Official Receiver of Tinnevely was the petitioner. The appellants, who were respondents

Nos. 1 to 3 in the lower Court had brought a suit, O. S. No. 206 of 1913, in the District Munsif's Court of Ambasamudram against seven defendants, all members of a joint Hindu family. Pending the suit they applied for and got an attachment before judgment of the joint family properties. The suit was compromised and a razi decree Ex. I, was passed on the 23rd of September 1914 which provided that the defendants therein should pay into Court Rs. 2,100 with interest within the 15th of April 1915 and that, in default, the attached properties might be sold and the amount realised. It also provided that the attachment before judgment which has already been made would continue until the amount fixed by the decree was paid. Defendants Nos. 1 and 7 in that suit died subsequent to the decree. After their deaths an execution application was filed in the District Munsif's Court by the decree-holders, the present appellants, and an order for sale of the attached properties was made. Defendants Nos. 2 to 6 in the suit were also ordered as the legal representatives of the deceased defendants Nos. 1 and 7. A petition for adjudicating defendants Nos. 2 to 6 as insolvents was presented to the District Court of Tinnevely on the 31st of January 1917 and they were adjudicated insolvents by order of that Court dated the 23rd of March 1917. The attached properties were sold in Court-auction on the 28th of June 1918 in pursuance of the orders of the District Munsif and were purchased by the 4th respondent in the lower Court. The Official Receiver who was not a party to the sale proceedings, filed the petition out of which this appeal arises, saying that as the insolvents' assets had vested in him on the order of adjudication, the subsequent sale is not valid and binding on him and that the sale should, therefore, be set aside. There was also an alternative prayer to the effect that, if for any reason the sale could not be set aside, the decree-holders should be compelled to refund to him the amount they realised in execution.

The District Judge on the first occasion held that he, sitting as a Judge exercising insolvency jurisdiction, had no power to examine the validity or otherwise of an execution sale held by another Court, and, therefore, dismissed the petition. On appeal, however, by the Official Receiver to this Court (C. M. A. No. 128 of 1919) this decision was set aside and the petition was remanded to the lower Court for fresh disposal. The District Judge has now held that the sale itself could not be set aside as the auction-purchaser, 4th respondent in the lower Court purchased the property bona fide and was, therefore, entitled to the protection given to bona fide purchasers by s. 34 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, III of 1907, but he has granted the alternative prayer referred to above, i. e., he directed the decree-holders, the present appellants, to refund to the Official Receiver, the respondent before us, for the benefit of the whole body of creditors the sum of Rs. 3,153-2-0 realised by them in execution. He also gave them leave to rank as unsecured creditors in the subsequent insolvency proceedings before the Official Receiver. Against this order of the District Judge the decree-holders have filed the present appeal; the Official Receiver has filed a memorandum of objections stating that the sale should also have been set aside as the auction-purchaser could not in the circumstances of this case be considered to be a bona fide purchaser.

Two points have been urged before us by Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, the learned Counsel for the appellants, viz., (1) that on a proper construction of Ex. I, the razi decree, a charge has been created on the attached properties in his clients' favour and that, therefore, the properties vest in the Official Receiver only subject to his clients' rights under the decree and (2) that even if there is no such charge, inasmuch as two out of seven judgment-debtors had died after the attachment before judgment and also after the decree such prior attachment followed by the decree prevents the shares of the two deceased co-parceners from surviving to the rest and that, therefore, those shares do not vest in the Official Receiver on the insolvency of the remaining co-parceners as they had never vested in the insolvents themselves. He urges, therefore, that the Official Receiver had not rights at least as regards two-sevenths of the properties sold and that his clients were entitled to retain at least two-sevenths of the purchase-money realised.

As regards point No. (1), Ex. I only states that the defendants should pay into Court within a prescribed time the decree amount with interest and that, in default of payment, the plaintiffs should recover the amount "from the defendants and also by the sale of the properties now under attachment before judgment by the Court without having any necessity for re-attachment and from the defendants' other properties, and that the attachment before judgment should continue in force until the whole amount is paid according to this compromise decree". These provisions do not, in our opinion, constitute a charge on the properties and do not confer on the decree-holders any higher rights than those of money-decree-holders who have effected an attachment of those properties for executing their decrees.

As regards point No. (2) the learned Counsel for the appellants has strongly relied upon a decision of the Privy Council reported as Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) in support of his argument that the attachment before judgment in this case followed as it was by the decree prevented the shares of the deceased co-parceners from surviving to the rest. As it appears to us that the answer to the question now raised depends really upon a correct understanding of the principle laid down by the Privy Council in the above case, it is necessary to consider the exact scope of that decision and to examine how the principle indicated therein has been understood and applied in subsequent decisions. In that case the father had executed a mortgage of properties belonging to the joint family consisting of himself and his two sons. The mortgagee brought a suit on his mortgage against the father and got a decree ordering the sale of the property. In execution of the decree the property was attached and an order to carry out the sale was made. Subsequent to this but before the date fixed for the sale, the father died and the execution proceedings were thereafter continued against the sons who objected to the sale putting forward their claims as co-parceners under the Mithakshara Law. The Executing Court referred them to a separate suit and the properties were sold. In the suit by the sons to set aside the sale it was found that the nature of the debt was such as not to be binding on them. The Privy Council set aside the sale as regards the sons' two-thirds share but sustained the sale to the extent of one-third which on a partition in his lifetime would have fallen to the share of the father. It may be stated that the reason for upholding the sale with regard to the one-third share was not that the mortgage executed by the father could be held to be binding on the estate to the extent of his own share because their Lordships expressly leave this point open. In their Lordships' own words the reason for the decision was that "at the time of Adit Sahai's (father's) death, the execution proceedings under which the mouza had been attached and ordered to be sold had gone so far as to constitute, in favour of the judgment-creditor, a valid charge upon the land, to the extent of Adit Sahai's undivided share and interest therein, which could not be defeated by his death before the actual sale." It is true that in the Privy Council case there were not only a decree and an attachment in execution of the decree but also an order for sale of the properties before the death of the judgment-debtor; but in the very next sentence their Lordships state that "they are aware that this opinion is opposed to that of the High Court of the North-Western Provinces, in the case of Goor Pershad v. Sheodeen (2)." In that case there was only a decree and an attachment in execution of the decree but no order for sale before the judgment-debtor's death and it was held that the judgment-debtor "had no property in the house in suit available after his death in execution of decree for the satisfaction of the judgment debt." The Privy Council in expressly dissenting from this decision must, we think, be considered to have in effect held that an attachment in execution of a decree before the judgment-debtor's death would prevent his share from surviving to his other co-parceners though no order for sale had been made prior to his death. That this is the true scope of the Privy Council decision has been recognised by more than one decision of this Court vide Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) and Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamiah (4). It may be mentioned that in Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3), also there was not only an attachment in execution of the decree but an order for sale before the judgment-debtor's death, but the learned Judges indicate that the decision of the Privy Council would cover even a case where there was no such order, for they state at page 307*, "in declaring that the ruling they were pronouncing was opposed to that of the High Court in the case cited, the Privy Council in effect pronounced that the interest of the judgment-debtor had, by the attachment, been brought under the control of the Court for the purpose of executing the decree so as to preclude the accrual of a title by survivorship in the event of the death of the judgment-debtor before an order for sale was made. In the case before the Court it appears the order for sale was made before the death of the judgment-debtor, but, whether this be so or not, we feel ourselves bound by the ruling of the Privy Council." In Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamiah (4) there was only an attachment in execution of the decree but no order for sale before the judgment-debtor's death. The lower Court in that case had dismissed the suit on the ground that, as the judgment-debtor who was an undivided co-parcener died before the order for sale was made, his interest survived to the defendant and was not available to the plaintiff for sale. The High Court in allowing the second appeal refers to Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1), Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) and Lakshmana Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (5) and states that the question was concluded by authority. Regarding the Privy Council case the learned Judges observe thus: "In the case before the Privy Council it is true that not only was there an attachment but also an order to carry out the sale before the death of the co-parcener. But in the course of their judgment, the Judicial Committee expressed their dissent from a judgment of the North-West Provinces High Court in which it was held that, while the co-parcener had died after his interest in the property was attached but before an order for sale was made, there remained no interest in the judgment-debtor which could be brought to sale." In Muthusami Chetty v. Chunammal (6) it is stated that "It has been repeatedly decided by this Court, that attachment alone without an order for sale precludes the accrual of the title by survivorship in the event of the death of the judgment-debtor after attachment and before the order for sale."

It has been brought to our notice that the learned Judges in Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati etc., Devasthanam (7) state at page 442* that the decisions in Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) and Lakshmana Aiyar v. Srinivasa Aiyar (5) cannot be relied upon in view of the decision of the Privy Council in Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (8) to the effect that an attachment merely prevented alienation and did not give title. They also state that the same view was taken in Sankaralinga Reddi v. Kandasami Thevan (9). These observations have been noticed and commented upon in two later cases of this Court reported as Murugaiya Mudaliar v. Ayyahorai Mudaliar (10) and Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamiah (4). These decisions, with which we respectfully agree, render it unnecessary for us to discuss the matter afresh. In Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kamiah (4), which has already been noticed above, the learned Judges state: "In Sankaralinga Reddi v. Kandasami Thevan (9) the decision in Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) was not dissented from, but it was expressly pointed out that under that decision the attachment has the effect of preventing the property passing by survivorship, and the fact that the attaching creditor does not, by attachment, create such a charge on the property as to acquire priority over other creditors coming in, is in no way opposed to this view. This also is what was decided in Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devasthanam (7) wherein it was held that no charge was created by the attachment in favour of the creditor as against a subsequent creditor. There is, no doubt, an observation in Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devasthanam (7) that the decision in Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) is opposed to this view. But whether that is so or not, no dissent was expressed from the decision to the effect that the attachment precludes the accrual of title by survivorship. The observation of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Moti Lal v. Karrabuldin (8) relied upon in Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati, etc., Devastanam (7) has no reference to this question. That such is the effect of this decision seems to be borne out by the judgment in Murugaiya Mudaliar v. Ayyithorai Mudaliar (10) in which the learned Judges say that the case of Zemindar of Karvetnagar v. Trustee of Tirumalai, Tirupati etc., Devastanam (7) had reference to the question whether in the circumstances of that case the judgment-creditors who had obtained orders of attachment were in a stronger position than those who had not obtained such orders." In the light of the above remarks, the observation in Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) that the proposition laid down in Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3) has no longer the support of the Madras High Court is not correct. In this connection we would only add that, having regard to the decision of the Privy Council in Motilal v. Karrabuldin (8) it must now be taken that the words "charge" used by their Lordships in Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) in the passage extracted by us must be understood only in a general and not in the strictly legal sense (see also Mayne's Hindu Law, para. 332 9th edition).

Thus it will be seen that the decision in Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) and the later decisions of this Court establish the position that an attachment in execution of the judgment-debtor's interest in joint family property will, in the event of his death subsequent to such attachment preclude the accrual of title by survivorship as against the attaching creditor.

In the present case, the attachment was before judgment. The judgment-debtor died after the decree but before any order for sale was made. The question is whether the fact that the attachment was before judgment makes any difference as regards the application of the above principle. There is a direct authority in Chetti v. Chinnammal (6) that it does not make any difference. In that decision it was held that an attachment before judgment has the effect of preventing the interest of the deceased judgment-debtor from passing by survivorship in a case where the judgment-debtor dies after the decree. The reason is thus stated by the learned Judges: "When a decree is passed subsequently it is unnecessary to attach the property again and the prior attachment renders the property available for sale in execution. An attachment followed by a decree, therefore, precludes the accrual of the title by survivorship for the same reasons as an attachment after decree"

It has, however, been argued by the learned Vakil for the respondent that the decisions in Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) and Sunder Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (12) take a contrary view and that they should be followed in preference to the Madras cases. Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) is, no doubt, a direct decision in his favour, but with all respect we feel unable to follow that decision. In that case the learned Judges begin their judgment by stating that the determination of the case before them depends on the correct construction of the Privy Council judgment in Suraj Bunsu Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1). They then distinguish that case by saying that there, there had been not a mere attachment before judgment but an attachment in execution and an order for sale. They also seem to think that their Lordships of the Privy Council use the word "charge" in the passage extracted by us in its strict legal significance vide page 107*. We have already stated that, in our opinion, their Lordships in effect held that an order for sale was not essential for defeating the survivorship and that it is not right to understand the word "charge" as having been used in the strict legal sense. The learned Judges seem to deduce from the Privy Council decision that some step should be taken in execution which will have the effect of defeating the survivorship but what that step exactly is, in a case where there has already been an attachment before judgment and a decree following it prior to the judgment-debtor's death, they do not state. If as we have shown above a mere attachment in execution is, according to the Privy Council, enough to defeat the survivorship, and if in a case where there has been an attachment before judgment and a decree following it there need not be any further attachment after the decree—vide O. XXXVIII, r. 2 of the C. P. C. we fail to see what further step such a decree-holder should take in order to bring matters to the stage where a mere attachment in execution has been made. The learned Judges then rely on a decision of this Court in Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (13) for the position that an attachment before judgment has not the effect of defeating the survivorship and observe that though in that case the defendant had died before the decree, it does not make any difference whether he dies before or after the decree. This observation does not seem to us to be sound. It is true that until a decree is passed an attachment before judgment could not operate to render the attached property available for sale in execution, but if a decree is also passed before the defendant's death, it is unnecessary to attach the property again and the prior attachment renders the property available for such sale. The decision in Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (13) has been referred to and distinguished in a later case in Muthusami Chetty v. Chunammal (6) which has not been noticed by the Bombay High Court. In Ramanayya v. Rangappayya (13) itself the learned Judges clearly indicate that an attachment before judgment would become operative as soon as a decree is passed and that, if the defendant had died subsequent to the decree, they would have held that such prior attachment would defeat the survivorship.

We might also notice that it has been held in Ganu Singh v. Jangi Lal (14) that the effect of an attachment of property under the C. P. C. whether made before or after decree is the same, provided that in the former case a decree is made for the plaintiff at whose instance the attachment takes place. see page 533*. In the same judgment it has been observed that "the main object of an attachment before judgment is to enable the plaintiff to realise the amount of the decree, supposing a decree is eventually made, from the defendant's property".

For the above reasons we must hold, dissenting from Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) and following Muthusami Chetty v. Chunammal (6), that an attachment before judgment followed by a decree prior to the judgment debtor's death has the effect of precluding the accrual of title by survivorship as against the attaching creditor in the same way as an attachment after decree. This, however, should not be interpreted to mean that the operation of survivorship is altogether stopped by reason of the attachment whether before or after decree for, if the attaching creditor does not execute his decree, or if the entire property is not needed to satisfy the decree, then the property or the surplus, as the case may be, will go to the other co-parceners. The decision discussed above should, in our view, be only taken to mean that the other co-parceners take the property subject to the claims of the attaching creditor.

With regard to the decision in Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) it might also be mentioned that, while discussing the Privy Council case, the learned Judges seem to make a point of the fact that in the case before them there was no actual sale of the property even after the judgment-debtor's death and seem to indicate that, if there was such a subsequent sale, the prior attachment might preclude the operation of survivorship vide page 109*. We do not think that the Privy Council decision justifies the drawing of such a distinction; but, in view of the fact that in the present case there has been an actual sale after the judgment-debtor's death, it is not necessary to discuss the matter any further.

The other case relied upon by the respondent is the one in Sunder Lal v. Raghunandan Prasad (12) which follows Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11.) In that case it was found as a fact that there was no attachment before judgment and also that the defendant died just after the hearing of the suit and before the judgment, see page 256†. The occasion, therefore, for considering the question as regards the effect of an attachment before judgment in a case like the present did not actually arise though the learned Judge states that an attachment before judgment does not rank in the same position as an attachment after judgment. They simply follow the decision in Subrao Mangesh v. Mahadevi Bhatta (11) and this case, therefore, does not carry us any further.

In the result, the lower Court's decree will be modified by a direction that the appellants are entitled to retain two sevenths of the purchase-money realised by the sale of the properties and are bound to refund only the balance to the Official Receiver for the amount that they have thus to refund and for any further claims that they may have, as regards interests and costs. they will rank as unsecured creditors in the insolvency proceedings before the Official Receiver. The parties will receive and pay proportionate costs throughout.

Wallace, J.—I am in general agreement with my learned brother as to the conclusion to be properly deduced from the case-law quoted before us, viz., that an attachment before judgment, when followed by a decree passed prior to the death of the judgment-debtor co-parcener prevents, as against the rights of the attaching creditor the accrual of the survivorship right to the surviving co-parceners. But I should like to say, though it is not necessary for the present disposal of this case, that I consider that the language used in cases, Bailur Krishna Rau v. Lakshmana Shanbhogue (3), Thadi Ramamurthi v. Moola Kanniah (4) and Muthusami Chetti v. Chunammal (6), on which we rely, is too broad if interpreted literally. I do not think that these cases intended to lay down more than that, so far as concerns the attaching decree-holder's right to hold the share of the deceased co-parcener liable for his debts, it is not defeated by the survivorship right, and not any general principle that whenever there is an attachment of co-parcenary property followed by, or preceded by a decree, the survivorship right of co-parceners to that property is barred. Obviously, for example, if the attaching decree-holder's debt, and the debts of other decree-holders who are entitled in law to take advantage for themselves of the attachment made by another decree-holder are satisfied and there remains a surplus out of the share of the deceased judgment-debtor co-parcener, that surplus will accrue by survivorship to the other co-parceners. The proposition that an attachment plus decree will in all cases and until the cessation of the attachment prevent the accrual of the survivorship right does not, I think, necessarily follow from the cases quoted and is a proposition which leads to many practical difficulties in partition and other proceedings. I think the correct way of stating the law is that the accrual of survivorship is not prevented but operates subject to the prior rights of the attaching decree holder and other decree-holders who are entitled to take advantage of their attachment to have their decree debts satisfied in execution proceedings against what was the share of the deceased judgment-debtor co-parcener. The control over that share which the Court has by virtue of the attachment will be used by it for that end and will not be related until the end is attained. It is this exercise of this control which, in my view, constitutes the "valid charge over the property of which the Privy Council speaks in the Suraj Bansi Koer v. Sheo Persad Singh (1) case which "charge" must spring out of the attachment which puts the property under control of the Court and not out of any subsequent step in execution; only the attachment, if before judgment must have been followed up by a decree passed before the death of the judgment-debtor co-parcener since it is the decree which declares the extent of the right which the attaching creditor has against the property.

I agree in the order proposed by my learned brother.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER NO. 14 OF 1925.

November 24, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman and
Mr. Justice Mukerji.

Babu RADHA KISHUN AND OTHERS—

Oaths Act (X of 1873), s. 9—Parties agreeing to abide by statement of referee—Examination of referee—Omission—Referee, whether can be re-examined.

There is nothing in the Oaths Act which declares that once a referee, by whose statement the parties have agreed to abide, has been put upon his oath and has been examined, he cannot be re-called and re-examined, if all the points which are necessary to be established for the decision of the case have not been put to him. [p. 511, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Ghazipur, dated the 5th December 1914.

Messrs. K. Verma and A. Pandey, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for closing of certain windows and other reliefs and has been directed against an order of remand.

It appears that when the case came before the Court for trial, the parties agreed that it should be decided according to the evidence of one Babu Anand Prasad. Babu Anand Prasad was accordingly examined as a referee with the consent of the parties and he made certain statements. The learned Munsif was of opinion that the evidence given by Babu Anand Prasad covered the whole controversy between the parties and would justify a disposal of all the issues raised. He accordingly partially decreed the suit and partially dismissed it. The parties appealed and both the appeals were disposed of by a single judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge. The learned Judge was of opinion that the statement of Babu Anand Prasad was not sufficient for the disposal of the case and he remanded the suit to the Court of first instance for disposal. He directed that the referee should be re-called and should be re-examined on all the matters that were left in darkness owing to the referee not being questioned. He further said that if there were any points on which the referee could not throw any light, those points must be decided on evidence adduced by the parties.

As there were two appeals before the Subordinate Judge, two appeals have been filed in this Court. But in this Court the appellants in both the cases are the plaintiffs. It has been argued before us that the statement of Babu Anand Prasad was enough for the disposal of the entire suit. It is not necessary for us to examine that statement in detail. It is sufficient to say that we agree with the Court below that further light was necessary on the controversy between the parties. That being so, the question is whether the referee could be called again and examined.

The parties are agreed that if there be any point which cannot be disposed of according to the statement of the referee, evidence may be led on those points by the parties. The main question for disposal in these cases is whether the referee can, as a matter of law, be re-called and re-questioned.

It appears to me that there is nothing in the Oaths Act which declares that a referee cannot be re-examined if all the points which would be necessary to be established are not put to him. It was argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that they had agreed to the examination of Babu Anand Prasad only at that particular moment when he was before the Court and their agreement to abide by his statement came to an end the moment the referee was examined. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on the case of Thoyi Ammal v. Subbaroya Mudali (1). As I read that case, I find therein no authority for the proposition which the learned Counsel for the plaintiffs would have established. In that case it was said that the statement of the referee was not sufficient for the disposal of the case and the Court simply said that the facts which remained unproved must be proved in the ordinary way by way of evidence. It is not clear from the judgment whether the referee was unable to throw further light on the case or whether he was not at all available or whether it was possible to re-examine him and to obtain more information from him, if he could give it. That being the case, it cannot be inferred from what was stated by the Judges, that the Court held that the referee could not be examined again. On the other hand, the dictum of the learned Judges of this Court who decided the case of Mahabir Prasad Misr v. Mahadeo Dat Misr (2) would go to show that this Court was of opinion that if the referee was still alive and available, he could be examined again, in the case of there arising a further necessity for elucidation of the matters in dispute.

There is nothing in the Oaths Act which says that the reference to the referee comes to an end as soon as the referee has been once examined. In the case of reference to arbitration we know that an award may be referred back to the arbitrator for his decision if he leaves anything undecided. The same rule ought to be followed. For, as already stated, there is nothing in the Oaths Act to prevent the application of this rule. In the circumstances I would dismiss both the appeals and uphold the order of remand.

Sulaiman, J.—I agree. The question whether a referee by whose statement the parties have agreed to abide can be re-examined if certain points were omitted in his statement, is apparently not covered by any direct authority. The appellants' learned Vakil relies on the case of Thoyi Ammal v. Subbaroya Mudali (1) where it was remarked: "If the matter stated affords sufficient material for the decision of the suit, a decree may be passed on the facts thus conclusively proved. If the facts so proved are not sufficient for the decision of the case, such further facts as are necessary must be proved, in the ordinary way, by evidence adduced on both sides. The facts proved by the special oath are, however, conclusively proved, and the further evidence must, in our opinion, be limited to matters not proved by the oath."

(1) 22 M. 234; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 167.

(2) 13 A. 386; A. W. N. (1891) 143; 7 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 216.

On the other hand the respondent's Vakil relies on a remark in the judgment in Mahabir Prasad Misr v. Mahadeo Dat Misr (2). "Although I should always be strongly disinclined to assist a party to an agreement under the Oaths Act in getting out of it, yet I am bound to see that the object of the parties when they entered into it has been satisfactorily accomplished by the deposition of the referee, and, if that object has not been accomplished, then that a further deposition should be obtained, or, if that is impossible, as is the case here, owing to the Raja's death, that the question should be tried in the ordinary way by the Court."

The examination of both these cases, however shows that both these remarks were obiter dicta and it was not necessary to decide the point. In the Madras case the referee was the plaintiff himself and he might have been expected to be in a position to fill up the gaps. The learned District Judge, however, had remanded the case for a trial de novo and the Madras High Court merely decided that the statement of the plaintiff as the referee must be regarded as conclusively proving the facts deposed to by her and that the further evidence should be confined to other matters. Neither party apparently asked for a re-examination of the referee and the point accordingly was not expressly decided.

In the Allahabad case the referee was dead, and no question of his re examination arose.

It has been contended before us that once the oath was taken by the referee the agreement was fully carried out and if either party is unwilling to accept as conclusive any further statement of the referee such further statement should not be forced on him. But if this contention were to be accepted the result would be that as soon as the referee has left the witness-box he cannot be re-called even by the Trial Court though some material statement has been accidentally omitted. It is impossible to accept this as the correct position under the Oaths Act. If the Trial Court has power to re-call a referee there seems to be no good ground on principle why the same power should not be exercised by the Appellate Court, if it comes to the conclusion that his statement is not complete and exhaustive.

Of course if a party were to show good ground why the referee should not be examined again the Court may under special circumstances refuse to re-call him in order to fill up gaps in his statement, as it is the duty of both parties to see that his statement completely covers all the points in dispute. In this case, however, I see no good ground why the referee should not be asked to clear up certain points left vague by him.

By the Court.—Both these appeals are dismissed and the order of remand is upheld with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

RANGOON HIGH COURT.

SPECIAL SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 188 OF 1924.

January 15, 1925

Present:—Mr. Justice Pratt.

MAUNG SET KHAING—APPELLANT

versus

MAUNG TUN NYEIN AND OTHERS—

RESPONDENTS.

Malicious prosecution—Damages, suit to recover—Reasonable and probable cause, absence of—Malice, proof of.

In order to succeed in a suit to recover damages for malicious prosecution the plaintiff must prove malice as well as absence of reasonable and probable cause. [p. 513, col. 2.]

Where a prosecution is obviously false and not instituted in good faith the Court will infer malice, but where a prosecution has been instituted under a bona fide belief that the accused has committed an offence even though that belief is mistaken, the plaintiff cannot obtain a decree unless the prosecution was malicious as well, even if enquiry had shown that no offence was committed. [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—The defendant in the Trial Court was working the Tongyi Fishery of which his son was lessee.

The defendant had himself purchased the lease of the fishery for two years previously. He found the plaintiffs fishing in a channel, which he believed to be the Pakka Yo forming a part of his fishery, but which, it was subsequently proved was not a part of his fishery and was not the Pakka Yo.

He made a report to the thugyi and, by his advice, to the Police, to the effect that the plaintiffs had been caught fishing in the Pakka Yo, which was part of his fishery.

The Police prosecuted for theft and the result of the trial was that the accused, plaintiffs, were acquitted.

The plaintiffs sued for damages for malicious prosecution in the Township Court.

The Trial Court held that as the defendant believed that the 'Yo' was the Pakka Yo and part of his fishery, there was reasonable cause for his complaint.

It also found that there was no malice on the part of the defendant and dismissed the suit.

On appeal the District Court held that the defendant, had he made any inquiries before reporting to the Police would have found that the water in which the plaintiffs were fishing was no part of his fishery.

The learned District Judge found accordingly that the prosecution was instituted without reasonable cause.

As, however, the mere institution of a prosecution without reasonable and probable cause is not sufficient to justify a decree, if the defendant honestly believed that the accused (plaintiffs) had committed a criminal offence, it was necessary to find that the prosecution was malicious and the first Appellate Court has come to a finding on this point.

I regret I am not quite able to follow the reasoning by which the learned District Judge has come to the conclusion that there was malice.

He observes that unless the sole object of the prosecution was to bring the offender to justice, there would be malice unless reasonable and probable cause were proved.

He proceeds to state that the object of the prosecution in the present case was solely to protect his own interests and that he was unable to hold that any sinister motive was proved.

Then follows a somewhat vague sentence:—

"An honest belief that the defendant was justified in informing the Police does not absolve him unless he could prove reasonable and probable cause, combined with a real desire to serve the ends of justice rather than his own private interests" and the conclusion drawn is "I am, therefore, bound to hold that in the present case malice was proved."

The conclusion does not seem to follow from the premises, and the absence of a real desire on the part of the defendant to serve the ends of justice rather than his own private interests does not necessarily involve malice.

On the District Judge's own showing the object of the prosecution was solely to protect the defendant's own interests, and there was no sinister motive.

This is practically a finding that there was no malice.

To protect one's own interests is not necessarily malicious and is not incompatible with a real desire to serve the ends of justice.

In reality the Judge's view seems to be that malice is a necessary corollary from the absence of reasonable and probable cause.

But this is not a correct view of the law. There must be malice as well as an absence of reasonable and probable cause.

No doubt where a prosecution is obviously false and not instituted in good faith, the Courts will infer malice, but where a prosecution has been instituted under a bona fide belief that the accused has committed an offence, even though that belief is mistaken, the plaintiffs cannot obtain a decree unless the prosecution is malicious as well, even if inquiry would have shown that no offence had been committed, vide Quinn v. Leathem (1).

Actual malice has not been proved and it cannot be inferred from the fact that the defendant made no inquiries before making a report; nor from the fact that he charged the plaintiffs with theft. From his point of view the plaintiffs were stealing his fish.

Both Courts were satisfied that the defendant believed, when he made the report that the plaintiffs were fishing in a part of the Tongyi Fishery, though, as a matter of fact, they were not.

The Police did not investigate this point or they would have found there was no ground for a criminal prosecution, and if the Magistrate had gone into this point at the beginning of the proceedings, he would have found that there was no ground for framing a charge.

It is the plaintiffs' misfortune that the Police prosecuted them without making any inquiry into the boundaries of the defendant's fishery.

It is to my mind impossible on the evidence to hold that the prosecution was malicious, and, unless malice is proved or can be inferred, the suit was bound to fail.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 35, 61(6)
—Annulment of adjudication—Payment of debts in full—Release of debt, whether payment—Interest subsequent to date of adjudication, whether must be paid.

Even an unconditional release of his debt by a creditor does not amount to a payment in full of the debt within the meaning of s. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. [p. 515, col. 1.]

Before the provisions of s. 35 of the Provincial Insolvency Act can be availed of, all the debts of the insolvent must be discharged in full. Interest subsequent to the date of the adjudication, though it cannot be taken into account at the time of the first distribution of the dividends, has to be paid out of the assets of the insolvent if they are sufficient for the purpose, and is, therefore, a part of the debt. Such interest must be paid before the benefit of s. 35 can be claimed. [p. 515, col. 2.]

First appeal from an order of the District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 19th of January 1925.

Messrs. Iqbal Ahmad and Ram Nama Prasad, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the Receiver from an order refusing to annul the appellant's adjudication. Muhammad Ibrahim was adjudged insolvent on the 24th of April 1919 and his property vested in the Official Receiver. On the 13th of February 1922 the Receiver entered into a contract for sale of a certain house with Ram Chandra for a sum of Rs. 3,000 and received Rs. 500 as earnest money. When he proceeded to sell this property, an objection was filed by the insolvent's wife claiming this house as her own property. Protracted proceedings followed and ultimately on the 29th of January 1924 the High Court decided against the wife, Rashida Khatun. A subsequent application for review also proved infructuous. On the 3rd of July 1924 the insolvent filed an application purporting to be under s. 38 of the Insolvency Act setting forth a composition scheme. In this he stated that he was able to procure money from his relations and would pay up all the debts that were entered in the schedule. It appears that his son made payments out of Court to various creditors and obtained receipts from them. Among these creditors was one Rura Mal. His receipt bears date the 4th of September 1924. Under this receipt Rura Mal no doubt admitted that he had received the amount due under his decree and promissory-note and that not a single shell remained due. On the 13th of September 1924 Rura Mal filed an application in the Court stating that he had received re-payment of his debts from the insolvent's son Abdul Hai and that he had no objection to the insolvent's application being granted. It appears that the debts of other creditors were also paid or discharged. On the 13th of September 1924 a statement was made by the insolvent's Vakil that his application under s. 38 should be treated as an application under s. 35 and that the annulment of the insolvent's adjudication should be ordered inasmuch as all the debts had been paid in full. Notice of this application was ordered to be issued. The report of the Receiver was in favour of the insolvent, but Rura Mal came forward and claimed interest on his debt and also certain expenses which he had incurred in connection with the appeal in the High Court. The Receiver, however, asked for Rs. 399 as his remuneration and expenses. On the 7th of December 1924, the learned District Judge came to the conclusion that all the debts had not been discharged inasmuch as interest due to Rura Mal had not been paid. He accordingly declined to order the annulment of the insolvent's adjudication. Subsequently the insolvent informed the Court that the house should not be sold for Rs. 3,000 as other persons were prepared to offer Rs. 5,000 and Rs. 6,000 and prayed that the sale be stayed. The District Judge forwarded the application to the Receiver to take steps but it reached him too late as the sale-deed in favour of Rura Mal had been registered half an hour earlier. On this the learned Judge refused to set aside the same.

The insolvent appeals from both the order dated the 9th of December 1924 and the last order dated the 19th of January 1925 and has obtained the leave of the High Court to appeal.

The first point to consider in First Appeal from Order No. 37 is as to whether he was entitled to an annulment. Section 35 of Act V of 1920 requires that where in the opinion of the Court, a debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent, or where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full, the Court shall, on the application of the debtor, or of any other person interested, by order in writing, annul the adjudication. This is not a case where it can be said that the debtor ought not to have been adjudged insolvent. The contention of the insolvent is that the debts of the insolvent have been paid in full, inasmuch as although some amount of interest might have been outstanding, Rura Mal had given a complete and full discharge of his debts. We agree that the receipt and the application purported to give a full discharge of the debt, but even an unconditional release by a creditor cannot amount to a payment in full of the debt within the meaning of s. 35. This was the view clearly expressed in the English case In re Keet (1) which has been followed by Indian High Courts, vide in re Subrati Jan Mahomed (2) and Brij Kessoor Laul v. Official Assignee of Madras (3). It is, therefore, clear that the mere release of the balance of the debt due to Rura Mal did not amount to a full payment so as to entitle the insolvent to an annulment. It has been argued on behalf of the appellant that Rura Mal would not have been entitled to any interest on his debt subsequent to adjudication and that such subsequent interest is not included within the expression "the debts of the insolvent" contained in s. 35. Under s. 48, sub-cl. 2 of the Act the right of a creditor to receive out of the debtor's estate any higher rate of interest to which he may be entitled is not prejudiced after all the debts proved have been paid in full. In s. 61, sub-cl. 6 it is provided that where there is any surplus after payment of the foregoing debts it shall be applied in payment of interest from the date on which the debtor is adjudged an insolvent at the rate of six percentum per annum on all debts entered in the schedule. It is noteworthy that s. 38 does not use the words "proved debts or debts entered in the schedule." It must, therefore, be taken that before s. 35 can be availed of, all the debts of the insolvent must be discharged in full. Subsequent interest, though it cannot be taken into account at the time of the first distribution of the dividends, has to be paid out of the assets if sufficient, and is, therefore, a part of the debt. It is clear, therefore, that there was a sum of money due to Rura Mal which might have been released but was certainly not paid, though the principal sum and interest up to the date of adjudication had been paid. First Appeal from Order No. 37 of 1925, therefore, fails and is accordingly dismissed but without costs as no one appears for the respondents.

The sale which is sought to be set aside took place in pursuance of a previous contract of sale dated the 13th of February 1922. While the insolvency proceedings were pending the property vested in the Receiver and he had full power to dispose of it. The execution of the sale was delayed owing to proceedings taken by the insolvent's relations. It may be that some two years afterwards the value of the property had risen higher and some persons came forward to make higher offers. This, however, did not justify the Receiver to go back upon his original contract for sale. No stay order was passed by the District Judge and the sale took place at a time when there was no prohibition against it. When the order of annulment has been upheld we are unable to hold that the sale should be set aside. This appeal also fails and is dismissed with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Salem, in A. S. No. 89 of 1916, preferred against a decree of the Court of the District Munsif, Dharmapuri, in O. S. No. 315 of 1915.

Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit for partition and delivery with mesne profits of one-third of the permanent lease-hold village of Pacharahalli. The suit was decreed by the District Munsif. On appeal to the learned District Judge of Salem it was held that the plaintiff was not entitled to one-third of the village but only to one-third of the income. On the hearing of the second appeal Mr. K. V. Krishnaswami Iyer appeared for the plaintiff-appellant, and Mr. Somayya for the respondents Nos. 1 to 4 intimated that his clients had no interest and took no part in the argument. I have accordingly heard the appeal as an ex parte decree matter. The plaint agreement of the 4th September 1845 has apparently disappeared and we are thrown back for its terms on a recital in the judgment in O. S. No. 569 of 1887 in the District Munsif's Court of Tirupattur. The District Munsif there says:—"Its contents are to the effect that in consideration of the advances made in kind and in money to the tenants of the villages by Sesha Iyengar, Krishna Iyengar agreed to divide the income in cash and waram of the said villages with Sesha Iyengar, in the proportion of two to one, to give the latter accounts as to produce, waram etc., of the two villages and in the result to conduct the affairs of the villages in consultation with Sesha Iyengar. The document closes with a final clause to the effect that the contracting parties should divide between them any loss relating to these villages in the proportion mentioned." Krishna Iyengar's interest is now vested in the defendants and Sesha Iyengar was the appellant's father. In Second Appeal No. 1307 of 1890, Ex A (2), Wilkinson and Handley, JJ., held that with regard to this agreement. "We see no reason to doubt that the grantor who was the uncle of the grantee intended to alienate and did alienate in perpetuity to his nephew a one-third share of the village which he held on permanent lease in consideration of services rendered and in all probability out of natural affection." In Ex. L, Varadachari, the son of Krishna Iyengar, the grantor, refers to the present plaintiff as our co-parceners Venkatchari and others. "That is a deed of collateral security dated 1896. In a plaint Ex. D in O. S. No. 663 of 1901 on the file of the District Munsif's Court of Tirupattur the present plaintiff and others brought a suit claiming one-third share in the villages and in Ex. D. (1) the written statement of the first defendant Varadachari in the same suit he pleaded. "In any case the plaintiffs are entitled only to one-third share in the said villages." In an affidavit Ex. F. (1) in O. S. No. 530 of 1907, E. P. No. 1038 of 1908, in the same District Munsif's Court Varadachari refers to the two-thirds share belonging to him in the said village and also in the same document states "after excluding the one-third share belonging to the plaintiffs in the permanent, ijara village of Pacharahalli, I sold etc. This seems to me to be sufficient to show that what was really granted was not only one-third share in the income but one-third of the village itself and that was what both parties in the past have thought was the meaning of the agreement. The learned District Judge refer to a certain suit O. S. No. 2 of 1913, Ex. I, and says that "the present plaintiff and the present defendants were arrayed as against each as rival purchasers in a Court-auction of that two-third share right which was admittedly the property of their mutual judgment-debtor, the vendor of the present defendants in this case" and held that the rights in the present village are not concluded by Ex. E. He did not consider the Exhibit I have referred to. The law that a gift of the income may under circumstances amount to a gift of the corpus may be seen, for example in Mayor, Aldermen and Burgesses Co. of Southmolton v. Attorney-General (1) where Lord St. Leonards said: "As regards the law, if the rents of the estate are given, they represent the estate. If the rents are given in certain proportions, so as to exhaust the whole of the present rents, and if no one is entitled to be benefited more than another beyond that which is specifically given, that is a representation of the estate itself in those proportions." And in Mannox v. Greener (2) Vice Chancellor Malins said. "Now it has been argued in this case that a gift of the income of real estate does not pass more than a life-estate, but I think it is thoroughly settled that before the Wills Act a devise of the rents and profits passed a real estate for life. That being the case, that which would give a life-estate before the Wills Act, by the 28th section of that Act, gives now a fee simple." These two English authorities have been referred to in a judgment of this Court reported in Waithinatha Aiyar v. Thayagaraja Aiyar (3) when it was held that a gift of the income of property without any limitation is a gift of the property itself.

A question has been raised as to the applicability of s. 54 of the C. P. C. The learned District Judge held that it was a right to income only that was to be partitioned; I fail to see why it should affect the question that the leases were not registered when the estate was so registered. In the District Judge's view s. 54 had no application. I think in this respect the learned District Judge was wrong in my view expressed above and that, therefore, s. 54 could apply.

The lower Appellate Court's decree must be reversed and that of the District Munsif restored (as modified below) with costs in this Court against 5th respondent. Respondents Nos. 1 to 4 who were the only appellants in the lower Appellate Court must pay the present appellant's costs in the lower Appellate Court. As to future mesne profits, respondents Nos. 1 to 4 will be liable to plaintiff up to date of sale by them to 5th respondent—from that date the latter will be liable to plaintiff.

Income tax is chargeable on the profits of a business and it is immaterial if there is any change in the person who carries on a business, so long as the business is continued. [p 519, col 1.]

Section 25 (3) of the Income Tax Act is applicable only to cases in which a business is discontinued entirely and not to cases in which it is transferred from one set of proprietors to another. The question to be decided under the section is whether the business is discontinued and not whether it is discontinued by a particular person. [p. 518, col 1.]

Where a Company carrying on a business sells the business, including the good will and the benefit of all running contracts, to another Company, the ownership and management of the business is changed, but the business is not discontinued, the purchaser Company succeeds to the business and continues it. Section 25 (3) of the Income Tax Act has, therefore, no application to such a case. [p 519, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—This is a case stated by the Commissioner of Income Tax under s. 66 (2) of the Income Tax Act XI of 1922 and referred to the High Court with the opinion thereon of the Commissioner, at the instance of the assessee, the liquidators of Messrs. M. H. Sanjana & Company, Limited (in voluntary liquidation), hereinafter called the Company. The Company was started in 1919 to carry on the business of merchants, commission agents, contractors, suppliers of stores, shipchandlers, etc., and did so until the end of the year 1922, when it was resolved to take it into voluntary liquidation.

On February 21, 1923, the liquidators entered into an agreement with Ahmedbhoy Currimbhoy and Albert Raymond on behalf of a new Company to sell to the new Company when incorporated the business including all the stock-in-trade, furniture, fittings, machinery, and plant, motor cars, buildings and lands, the lease of the office remises at Elphinstone Circle, the goodwill of the business including all trade marks and the benefit of all running contracts.

By an agreement dated July 20, 1923, between the Company and its liquidators of the first part, Ahmedbhoj Currimbhoj and Albert Raymond of the second part, and the new Company of the third part the above mentioned agreement was adopted. The business which uptill that time had been carried on by the assesseees began to be conducted by the new Company. For the year April 1, 1922, to March 31, 1923, the Company was assessed to income-tax and super-tax on the profits amounting to Rs. 3,79,408 for the calendar year 1921. At the time of the assessment for the year 1923-24 the assesseees submitted the accounts of the Company for the period January 1, 1922, to November 30, 1922, disclosing a profit of Rs. 1,99,208. The assesseees claimed under s. 25 (3) of the Act that they were not liable to pay any tax on their profit, and that on the other hand as regards the assessment for 1922-23 they were entitled to substitute the profits of Rs. 1,99,208, for the eleven months up to December 1, 1922, in place of the profits of Rs. 3,79,408 for the year 1921 and get a refund of the tax overpaid.

This claim for a refund was disallowed on the ground that s. 25 (3) of the Act was applicable only to cases in which a business was discontinued entirely and not to cases in which it was transferred from one set of proprietors to another, and that under s. 26 of the Act the new Company as successors to the business were liable to be taxed on the profits made by the Company in 1922 and they were taxed accordingly. The question on which the opinion of the Court is required is not very succinctly stated in the letter of reference.

I should prefer to express it as follows:—

On the facts of the case are the assesseees entitled to claim the refund they ask for under the provisions of s. 25 (3) of the Income Tax Act of 1922?

Section 25 (3) only refers to a business which was in existence at the commencement of the Act, namely, April 1, 1922.

If such a business is discontinued no tax shall be payable in respect of the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the date of such discontinuance. And the assessee may further claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year shall be deemed to have been the income, profits and gains of the said period.

In this case the term "previous year" meant the year ending December 31, 1921.

It would appear then that the assesseees could claim that the income, profits and gains of the previous year, namely, Rs. 3,79,408, should be deemed to be the income, profits and gains of the period between the end of the previous year and the discontinuance. Then an assessment should be made on the basis of the income profits and gains of the said period, and if an amount of tax had already been paid in respect of the income, profit and gains of the previous year, exceeding the amount payable on the basis of such assessment, a refund of the difference was payable.

I understand that on a proper construction of these words that the assesseees, though the Company had paid in 1922-23 income-tax on the profits for the year 1921 amounting to Rs. 3,79,408, if the Company discontinued its business during the year 1922-23, were entitled to substitute the profit of Rs. 1,99,208 for the eleven months up to December 1, 1922, in place of the profit of Rs. 3,79,408 and claim a refund. If that is the real meaning of the section, to my mind it has been expressed in the least intelligible way. I should have thought it would have been simpler to say that if a business in existence on April 1, 1922, is discontinued in any particular year, and has already paid tax on the profits of the previous year it becomes entitled to be assessed on the profits for the year in which it is discontinued, so that if those profits are less than the profits of the previous year, a refund is payable. However, the question before us is whether the assesseees are entitled to resort to s. 25 (3) and we are not concerned with the relief they may be entitled to if they are so entitled. The assesseees contend that because the Company stopped its business, they were entitled to relief, that as the Company went into liquidation its corporate powers ceased, and its assets became distributable amongst its creditors, and lastly that if they were not entitled to relief, the benefit of s. 25 (3) of the Act could not be given in any case.

All these arguments are based on a misapprehension of the scheme of the Act.

By s. 6 certain heads of income, profits and gains shall be chargeable to income-tax, of which 'business' is one. Business is defined by s. 2 (4), and by s. 2 (2) an assessee is defined as a person by whom income-tax is payable. By s. 10 (1) the tax shall be payable by an assessee under the head "business" in respect of the profits or gains of any business carried on by him.

In the case of a Company by s. 22 (1) the principal office shall present to the Income-Tax Officer a return of the total income of the Company for the previous year, and under s. 23 the Income-Tax Officer makes the assessment, and determines the sum payable by the assessee.

By s. 26 when any change occurs in the constitution of a firm or where any person has succeeded to any business, profession or vocation, the assessment shall be made on the firm as constituted or on the person engaged in the business, profession or vocation as the case may be, at the time of the making of the assessment.

As then the tax is chargeable on the profits of a business, it makes no difference if there is any change in the person who carries on the business so long as the business is continued. There is no necessity to go beyond the facts of this case, where it is admitted that the business was continued, the management only passing from the old Company and its liquidators to the new Company when the agreement of June 20, 1923, was completed. Exactly the same question was raised in Bartlett v. Inland Revenue Commissioners (1). The owner of a business sold it to a Company. Under the provisions of s. 24 sub s. 3 of the Finance Act, 1907, he claimed that he was only chargeable with tax on the actual amount made in the year of discontinuance and there was no power to go back on the three years average. Scrutton, J., said (page 693*): "The answer to that appears to me to be very simple. The trade was not discontinued in the year. The trade was sold to a Company and continued during the whole year; and in my view, therefore, s. 24 of the Act of 1907 has no application to this case." I would answer the question I have framed above in the negative.

The assessee must pay the costs of the reference.

Coyajee, J.—The statement of the case drawn up by the Commissioner of Income-tax and referred to this Court clearly sets out the material facts. In the year 1919 the Company, Messrs. M. H. Sanjana & Co. Ltd., commenced business in Bombay as merchants, commission agents, contractors, suppliers of stores, shipchangers, mechanical engineers, etc. About the end of the year 1922 it was resolved to take the Company into voluntary liquidation. Its business was then sold to another Company, the Consolidated Mills Stores Co., Ltd. The sale included buildings and lands, the lease of the office premises, all the stock-in-trade, machinery, plant, furniture and fittings, the goodwill of the business including all trademarks and the benefit of all contracts entered into between the vendor Company and various other Companies. The business was then continued by the Consolidated Mill Stores Co., Ltd.

For the year 1922-23 M. H. Sanjana & Co., Ltd., were assessed to income-tax and super-tax on profits amounting to Rs. 3,79,408 for the calendar year 1921. At the 1923-24 assessment the Company (in voluntary liquidation) submitted its accounts showing a profit of Rs. 1,99,208 from January 1, 1922, up to November 30, 1922. They now claim that as their business is discontinued, they are entitled to substitute the profit of Rs. 1,99,208 in place of the profit of Rs. 3,79,408 on which the tax has been levied, and ask for a refund of the difference. They rely upon the provisions of s. 25 (3) of the Indian Income-Tax Act, 1922, which says: "Where any business, profession or vocation which was in existence at the commencement of this Act, and on which tax was at any time charged under the provisions of the Indian Income Tax Act, 1918, is discontinued," etc. The section grants relief if the condition which it lays down is fulfilled. The question arising for consideration then is: whether this business which was in existence on April 1, 1922, has been "discontinued"? On the facts of this case it is clear that when the Company sold the business, including the goodwill and the benefit of all running contracts, to the Consolidated Mills Stores Co., Ltd., the ownership of the business was changed, but the business was not "discontinued." The purchaser Company succeeded to the business and continued it—a case which is provided for by s. 26. It was, however, contended on behalf of the assessee, that when they sold the business, it was "discontinued" at any rate so far as they were concerned, and they are, therefore, entitled to claim a refund of the over-paid tax. But the language of the section is clear; and the question arising under it is—whether the business was discontinued; and not—whether the business was discontinued by A. B. In this case the transfer of ownership left the continuance of the business wholly unaffected. In my opinion, therefore, the assesses are not entitled to claim the refund which they ask for.

(1) (1914) 3 K. B. 686; 24 L. J. K. B. 686.

Z. K.,

Answer accordingly.

A trustee of an institution is not a legal representative of his predecessor-in-office within the meaning of s. 2 (11), C. P. C. [p. 521, col. 1]

Where a trustee who is a party to a suit either retires or dies and is succeeded in office by another by election or otherwise, there is a devolution of interest pending suit under O. XXII, r. 10, C. A lessee for a term of 5 years deposited a sum of money equivalent to one year's rent with the lessor on the understanding that the amount would be applied in payment of the last year's rent. Soon after, by consent of both parties, Government promissory notes were purchased for the cash deposit. But by the time the lease terminated, the notes had considerably depreciated in value. On a question arising as to who was to bear the loss arising from the said depreciation in value:

Held, that the cash deposit belonged to the lessee and the conversion of cash into Government pro-notes had not, in the absence of any special agreement, the effect of transferring the property in them from the lessee to the lessor. The property in the notes being the lessee's, when they depreciated in value, he ought to bear the loss [p. 522, cols. 1 & 2.]

Petition praying that in the circumstances stated in the affidavit filed herewith, the High Court will be pleased to direct the amendment of the cause title in the said Second Appeal No. 1145 of 1922, by omitting from the records of the said Second Appeal No. 1145 of 1922, the names of (1) A. R. Chettiar and (2) Dewan Bahadur Chettiar and (3) O. Thanikachellam Chettiar and entering in the record of the said second appeal, the names of (1) P. V. Nataraja Mudaliar, (2) P. T. Kumaraswamy Chettiar and (3) Vavila Venkateswara Sastrulu either as appellants or respondents.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachari, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the trustees of the Pachayyapas Charities to recover rent from the respondents. The appeal was filed by all the nine trustees, but, since the appeal was filed, two of the appellant-trustees have died and one has retired. Of the two trustees who died, one died only on 21st March 1915, and, therefore, there is plenty of time to bring in his legal representative or the person on whom his interest has devolved, but objection is taken by the respondents that No. 6 Mr. Ethiraja Mudaliar, having died in 1923 and No. 5 Sir P. T. Thiagaraja Chettiar, having retired on 29th April 1924, the application to bring in the three trustees who have since been elected on the Board is out of time and that, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed in limine. The contention for the respondents is that the new trustees who have been appointed by election to fill the places of those who have died or retired are their legal representatives within the meaning of s. 2, cl. (11) of the O. P. C., but in that section we find that "legal representative" includes "where a party sues or is sued in a representative character, the person on whom the estate devolves on the death of the party so suing or sued." When Mr. Ethiraja Mudaliar died, his estate as trustee devolved on no one, unless it can be deemed to have devolved on the surviving trustees, who are parties to this appeal. Certainly it cannot be said that his estate devolved on his death on a person who was subsequently elected to fill his place. The act of the electors can certainly confer no retrospective power on the person elected so as to vest the estate of the deceased in him. So far as No. 5 is concerned his office became vacant by retirement and not by death. On the date of his retirement, the person subsequently elected to succeed him was certainly not his legal representative within the meaning of s. 2, cl. (11), C. P. C. Consequently these persons, now sought to be added as appellants, do not come within the meaning of "legal representative." For the appellants, it is contended that O. XXII, r. 10 is applicable and I see no reason why it should not be so. The estate of the deceased trustees has devolved on these persons by the act of the electors done in pursuance of the scheme framed by this Court and it appears to me that it is a case of devolution of interest during the pendency of a suit. A similar view was held by a Bench of this Court in Sundaresam Chettiar v. Viswanatha Pandara Sannadhi (1) and by another Judge in Ratnam Pillai v. Nataraja Desikar (2). I see no reason to differ from the view and hold that these persons can be added as parties under O. XXII, r. 10.

In these circumstances, it is unnecessary to discuss the further question whether the trustees who have all along been on record can be allowed to continue the appeal on behalf of the whole body of trustees without adding the trustees subsequently elected.

Coming to the merits of the appeal, two points are argued. The appellants claim firstly the loss which they have suffered owing to the depreciation of Government promissory-notes deposited by the defendants in respect of the lease which they obtained from the appellants. The second question relates to the amount of water-rates payable by the defendants. As regards the second point I may say that, on a construction of the lease, defendants are liable to pay water-rate for water taken to punja lands, for water taken for second crop on nanja lands; and for water taken to poramboke. The learned Judge has only considered one of the provisions of the lease which relates to poramboke, but does not appear to have considered the earlier clauses at all, and the learned Judge's judgment is not supported by the respondent's Vakil who admits that the construction put upon the document by him is incorrect. In this respect, the Munsif's decree must be restored.

The more important point is the question of depreciation of Government promissory-notes. When the respondents obtained the lease, they deposited a sum of Rs. 5,300 with the appellants. This amount was equivalent to one year's rent of the lands, the lease being for five years. Soon after the deposit was made, the appellants wrote to the 1st defendant and suggested that the money should be converted into Government promissory-notes. Defendant agreed to this course in his letter of 30th April 1913 saying "Accordingly I am willing to purchase and keep Government bonds bearing 3½ per cent. per annum." Subsequently, the actual lease deed was executed on 26th May 1914 and that deed contains the following recital, "As the understanding is that Government promissory-notes should be purchased and kept for the said cash deposit, etc." So far, the documents show clearly that the defendant agreed to the purchase of Government promissory notes on his behalf as the equivalent of the cash deposit made by him, and the method in which that deposit was to be applied is mentioned in the lease deed, Ex. B. The question really at issue is whether these promissory notes which have depreciated very considerably by the end of the lease when the deposit had to be applied in payment of the last year's rent, belonged to the appellants or respondents. It is not disputed that the cash deposit belonged to the respondent and it is on record that the respondent agreed to that cash deposit being converted into Government promissory notes. It is difficult, therefore, to understand the contention that this conversion of cash into notes had also the effect of transferring the property in them from the respondent to the appellant unless there was some contemporaneous agreement to that effect. The learned Judge does not appear to have considered at all the question of the property in those promissory notes and has based his decision on certain findings as to what the defendants understood. I may say at once that in several cases, apart from the condition as to payment of water-rate, the learned Judge has obviously misconstrued the documents. In one case, namely, Ex. 9, he apparently has only read the document perfunctorily, for he gives its contents accurately as mentioned on the docket, but when the document itself is read it appears that the docket is not accurate and it would appear that the learned Judge has relied solely upon the docket without reading the actual document. That by itself would be sufficient to vitiate his judgment but it is also clear that he has not applied his mind in the right direction. The learned Judge starts by thinking it a most extraordinary thing, that, when Government promissory notes stood at about 98, the appellants should have purchased notes of the face value of Rs. 5,500 instead of notes of the face value of Rs. 5,300 considering the cash already in their hands was sufficient to purchase notes to the extent of nearly Rs. 5,500 (plus interest accrued to date) in view as they said, to secure against loss by depreciation. If there were depreciation below the price at which they purchased and notes only of Rs. 5,300 were purchased, the appellants might be put to great loss as the security would be inadequate. As it is, even after taking this precaution, the value of the notes has fallen far below the amount due by the defendants. There was, therefore, nothing surprising in the appellants purchasing notes of the value of Rs. 5,500. The main ground for finding that defendants were not liable for the depreciation is that there was no understanding on their part that they would be liable for any depreciation in value, but when a man owes promissory notes, he must know that, if they depreciate in value, he will be liable for such depreciation and not a third party, unless there is an agreement to the contrary. His misunderstanding on this point, if there was any, would be merely due to ignorance of ordinary business principles of which any man should be deemed to have knowledge. Every man knows that he is responsible for the condition of his own property and when that changes, the responsibility is his and not that of a third party. Whether the defendants really understood their position or not is immaterial in this case. The property in the notes was theirs and, therefore, when the notes depreciated they must bear the loss.

An attempt has been made to show that the property in the notes was not defendants' and reliance is placed on a letter by the Bank to the trustees. How that could effect a transfer of property, I do not understand. The contention is quite worthless. The defendants accepted the change in the nature of their property and had never repudiated it any time. They are, therefore, liable for this depreciation. The appellants would have been entitled to realise the security in their hands, at the end of the lease, but, as a matter of fact, they merely credited the market value of the notes at that date and asked the defendants to pay the balance, in fact, they even offered to return the notes if the defendants would pay the proper amount in cash. The Judge was, therefore, quite wrong in saying that the defendants were never consulted before the Government promissory notes were sold. This is yet another question of fact in which the Judge is completely wrong. Considering all these circumstances, the judgment appears to be most unsatisfactory.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court must be set aside and the decree of the District Munsif restored with costs both here and in the lower Appellate Court.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887),

s. 17—Ex parte decree, application to set aside—Tender of decretal amount—Deposit made after expiry of limitation—Substantial compliance.

An application to set aside an ex parte decree was presented on the last day of limitation at about 3 P. M. It was accompanied by a tender of the amount payable under s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but as no payments were passed by the treasury after 12 noon, the money was not actually deposited in the treasury till the following day:

Held, that there was a substantial compliance with the provisions of s. 17 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Cawnpore, dated the 11th May 1925.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision under s. 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. The question raised is whether there was a sufficient compliance with s. 17 of that Act in presenting an application to set aside an ex parte decree. The application was presented on the last day of limitation at about 3 o'clock. It would appear from the judgment of the Court below that it was accompanied by a tender of the amount payable under s. 17, but as no payments are passed by the treasury after 12 o'clock in the day the tender was not returned to the applicant or the money actually deposited in the treasury till the following day. I agree with the Court below that this was a substantial compliance with the provisions of s. 17. The applicant did every thing that was possible for him to deposit the money at the time of presenting the application, and it was only owing to the particular rules in force of the local treasury that it could not be deposited till next day. The principle of the ruling [Munna Lal v. Radha Kishan (1)] relied on by the Court below is applicable. I accordingly dismiss the revision but without costs as the respondent is unrepresented.

Hindu Law—Widow of divided member—Funeral expenses.

Under the Hindu Law, where a widow of a divided member of a Hindu family dies, without having any self-acquired property of her husband, the relations responsible for her maintenance, and not necessarily those who perform the ceremony, are liable to pay for her funeral expenses, in like proportion as the maintenance itself.

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of South Kanara, in A. S. Nos. 34 and 35 of 1922, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Principal District Munsif, Mangalore, in O. S. No. 96 of 1920.

Mr. B. Sitarama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Y. Adiga, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The short point in this second appeal is who is to defray the funeral expenses when a widow dies being a member of a divided Hindu family, and not being in enjoyment of any self-acquired property of her husband. The widow was being maintained by her husband's nephew and great nephew each of whom contributed half. The lower Courts have ruled that they should pay for her funeral in like proportion and this seems logical and equitable. If the family were not divided they would pay at this rate. There is no direct authority on the point but Sir E. J. Trevelyan has deduced a similar rule from such authority as exists. See Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 88. I see no force in the contention that the relation who performs the ceremony under the Hindu Law must necessarily pay for it. In a joint family the son does not pay for the funeral of his father. Accordingly I confirm the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss this appeal with costs.

The respondent files memorandum of objections and wishes an issue to be tried which was not previously framed and finds no place in the pleadings, whether under the partition of 1875 defendant was bound to pay the amount claimed irrespective of the receipts upon which until now his claim has been based. I consider that this new point cannot be raised at this late stage. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the Court of the District Judge, South Arcot, dated the 30th January 1922, in O. S. No. 11 of 1921.

Mr. S. T. Srinivasagopalachariar, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Krishnaswamy Aiyar and K. R. Rama Aiyar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This suit has been brought to enforce three mortgages evidenced by Exs. A, B and D. Audi and Ramaswami were father and son. A and B were executed by Ramaswami and D was executed after Ramaswami's death by Audi and Ramaswami's widows the first defendant and another. Subsequent to the execution of these mortgages, the first defendant obtained a decree for maintenance against Audi and in execution of it she and her father the 10th defendant became the purchasers of the properties which had been previously mortgaged.

In regard to the first two deeds, the question is, did the interest of Audi pass to the plaintiffs, the mortgagees. They were executed by Ramaswami, the son, but the lower Court has found, and we agree with the finding, that he was the manager of the family. As regards the question whether the monies were borrowed for family purposes, the learned Judge relying mainly on oral evidence and probabilities has come to the conclusion that they were not so borrowed. He however has failed to give effect to the admission contained in the later document Ex. D. It is very clearly stated in it that the monies under A and B were borrowed by Ramaswami for purposes binding on the family and as we have said it was executed not only by Audi but also by the 1st defendant. No reason has been shown why this admission should not be acted on. It must be remembered that evidence in the suit was given long after the transaction, whereas the interval of time between Exs. A and B on the one hand and D on the other was only four years. The lower Court has however come to the conclusion that A and B are binding upon the share of Audi but for a different reason. It has held that by Ex. D, Audi ratified the mortgages A and B. This view may be open to question but we agree with the conclusion of the lower Court.

Next we have to deal with Ex. D. It was executed shortly after the death of Ramaswami. The consideration, namely, Rs. 4,000 was made up thus:—

	Rs.
(1) Balance of interest due under Exs. A and B ...	382
(2) Balance due by Ramaswami for goods supplied ...	130
(3) Cost of stamp for Ex. D ...	20
(4) Amount received in cash ...	3,468
TOTAL ...	4,000

The plaintiffs admitted that the fourth item was not due as they had not paid it and so no question arises in regard to it. Regarding the other three items, the Court has held against the plaintiff. This finding cannot be supported. There is a clear admission of Audi (Ex. E) which the lower Court has somehow overlooked. According to that, all the sums excepting the last were received by the executants. The first item of D is the balance of interest due under A and B. This item having been disallowed, the learned Judge directed that interest upon A and B should be calculated as if credit for interest in D had not been given. As we are holding that the first item in D is due, it will not be necessary to adopt this course. In calculating interest under A and B credit must be given for the amount of interest included in D. As regards D, our conclusion is, that the first three sums are due and they will carry interest at the rate provided in the document.

There remains lastly the question of law raised by Mr. Srinivasagopalachari, the learned Counsel for the appellants. He has contended that in Exs. A and B Ramaswami described the properties as absolutely belonging to him but as a fact he was entitled only to a half share, the mortgages must operate only on that share. We cannot accept this contention. The properties that were mortgaged were the entire properties and not Ramaswami's share in them. The description given shows that it was the entire property that was intended to be mortgaged. The recital that the executant was the owner may be treated as surplusage. Not only did he purport to mortgage the entire property, but on our finding he possessed the legal capacity to do so. As the manager of the family he was competent to enter into a transaction binding on the whole property. There were thus three elements present first, he purported to mortgage the whole property, secondly, he was legally competent to do so and thirdly, there is nothing in the document to repel the natural inference that what was intended to be conveyed was the whole property. Sankaranarayanan Pillai v. Rajamani (1) and Sabapathy Chetty v. Ponnusawmy Chetty (2) are clear authorities for the position that in the circumstances the interest conveyed should be held to be that which the executant was capable of conveying. Balwant Singh v. Rev. Rockwell Clancy (3) strongly relied on by the learned Counsel was distinguished in those two cases, and we adopt the observations on this matter in the judgment in those cases. We may observe that Sabapathy Chetty v. Ponnusawmy Chetty (2) is almost on all fours with the present.

The decree of the lower Court is modified and the following decree is substituted. There will be a mortgage decree for the amounts due under A and B. There will similarly be a mortgage decree for the amount due under D. The plaintiffs will first bring to sale the properties in A and B for the amounts due under them. If after satisfaction of those mortgages there is any balance, that will be applied towards the debt under D. The properties mentioned in D will be sold only in the event of any balance remaining even after the monies have been so applied.

The appellants will pay the respondents the costs of the appeal. There will be no order as to costs in the memorandum of objections.

Application for revision of an order of the Additional District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 12th November 1925.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—Mr. G. R. Deo has been heard for the applicant. It appears from Bengal Revenue Circular No. 4 of January 1922, that the matter of the liability to duty of a sum standing to the credit of a deceased person in a Railway Provident Fund was referred by the Board of Revenue of Bengal to the Advocate-General and the Board agreed with him in holding that Provident Fund money is exempt from duty and that the Administrator has nothing to do with this fund, which passes to the nominee even if there is no Administrator, it does not form what can properly be called an asset of the estate. In this view I concur. It has, however, been brought to my notice in a previous case that the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company perhaps for its own protection, ordinarily refuses to pay this money without Letters of Administration. The amount will, therefore, be mentioned among the assets, but no Court fee will be recovered on it. The order that a Court-fee is to be paid is set aside. The proceedings will continue.

Although in a suit under s. 92, C. P. C., a decree may be passed against a trustee in office to account for the income of the property in his possession, a claim for a specific sum in damages on account of loss to the trust by the misconduct of the trustee is not one of the reliefs falling within the scope of the section.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order, dated the 12th March 1923, of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Dindigul, in O. S. No. 74 of 1920.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Dindigul directing payment of Court-fee on the amount mentioned in the plaint as damages on the ground that the proper Court-fee was not paid. The first plaintiff has preferred this petition.

The contention of Mr. Rajah Iyer, for the petitioner, is that the order of the Subordinate Judge was without jurisdiction inasmuch as his client was entitled to ask in a scheme suit for an account against the trustee. No doubt in a scheme suit a decree may be passed against the trustee in office to account for the income of the property which was under his management. But in this case what the plaintiff has done is to ask for a specific sum to be paid by the defendant as damages for the loss caused to the said devasthanam by the defendants' misconduct. Claiming damages on account of misconduct is not one of the reliefs under s. 92, C. P. C.

If the plaintiffs wanted the defendant to account for the income of the institution of which the said defendant was the manager, he should have been asked to submit an account relating to his management. Prayer (b) of para. II of the plaint does ask for an account of the management. But prayer (c) wants the defendant to pay Rs. 53,000 and odd as damages for the losses caused to the devasthanam during his management. As this is made on a different footing from the ground of accountability of a trustee for the income of the property which was under his management, I think the order of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and I dismiss the civil revision petition with costs.

It is open to the plaintiffs to file another suit after obtaining the consent of the Advocate-General for such reliefs as they deem proper.

JUDGMENT.—The question before the lower Appellate Court was whether a certain plot of land was the property of the plaintiff or of the defendant, and the learned District Judge held largely on the strength of a certain document that it was the property of the defendant.

In second appeal for the first time the objection has been raised that the document is compulsorily registrable as a lease reserving a yearly rent, and without registration is not admissible in evidence to affect the property to which it refers. I have examined the document. If it is a lease it is determinable at any time at the will of the landlord, and it has been held more than once that the mere recital of an annual rate of rent in such a lease does not constitute it a lease reserving a yearly rent within the meaning of s. 17 (1) (d) of the Registration Act, vide Muhammad Mosam Khan v. Bakhtawar (1) and Kanwar Ranzor Singh v. Chippal (2).

A second contention has been put forward that the document has not been proved to have been executed by the ostensible executant Nawab, but the finding of the learned District Judge to that effect is one of fact and the suggestion that it is based on no evidence at all has no force. I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 17—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 54—Sale-deed—Agreement to re-convey—Registration, whether necessary.

Where a registered sale-deed is followed by an agreement to re-convey, and the latter can be treated as an altogether separate transaction from the sale-deed itself, then under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, the agreement vests no interest in the property in favour of the vendor and does not require to be registered. But if the agreement to re-convey is really a part and parcel of the transaction of sale, which is only partly evidenced by the registered deed of sale, then the agreement to re-convey must also be registered. In other words, when a transaction is evidenced by a document which is in effect divided into two parts, one of which is registered and the other is not, then the law looks to what is the real transaction between the parties, and demands that the whole document evidencing that transaction must be registered, whether it consists of one part or two. [p. 528, col. 2.]

Per Coyajee, J.—The question whether an agreement to re-convey immoveable property exceeding Rs. 99 in value does or does not require to be registered must, in each case, be decided on a consideration of the contents of the document itself and of such facts as might be proved for the purpose of showing in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts. Proximity of time, or even the identity of the dates of the two documents, is not the decisive circumstance in all cases. [p. 529, col. 2.]

Mr. A. G. Desai, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. N. Thakor, (with him Mr. J. G. Rele), for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued for specific performance of a contract for the sale of certain immoveable properties by the defendants on their passing a sale-deed to him, and for possession.

The document on which the plaintiff sued is Ex. 30 and is dated March 17, 1897. It is addressed to four persons, Govindgiri, Pitambargiri, Chamelgiri and Harigiri, the four chelas of Guru Daulatgiri. It runs as follows:—

"On March 2, 1897, we have jointly purchased from you the property. After having got registered an arbitration award amongst ourselves about that property and after you have paid off all your personal debts due to us, every one of us will, to the extent of his own rights separately pass to every one of you a separate agreement to sell one-fourth portion of the property purchased from you, the period for the said agreement being one of twenty one years. When every one of you pays, after 21 years, his one-fourth share of the amount according to the agreement of sale, every one of us will pass to every one of you a separate sale-deed at your expense. The same will be passed either to you or to your legal heirs or to the executors of your will."

Then there are detailed the shares which the purchasers under the document referred to in this Exhibit should take, and for which they were to pass sale-deeds to the various chelas as stated therein

We are only concerned in this case with the father of the plaintiffs now deceased, viz., Chamelgiri to whom Naro Balkrishna Patkar was to pass a sale-deed to the extent of a 4-annas share. The first defendant is the son of Naro and the second defendant is his daughter-in-law.

The main question argued in the case was whether this Exhibit is admissible in evidence for want of registration. The Judge said:—

"The defendant had contended that this potchiti required to be registered. No authority was shown in support of that contention. Exhibit 30, potchiti, by itself did not create, declare, etc., any right, etc., to or in the immoveable property, it merely notified that after certain contingencies a satekhat bargain paper, agreeing to reconvey would be passed. The writing is not thus compulsorily registrable under s. 17 of the Registration Act."

If the document is to be considered as an agreement to obtain a satekhat, then it would be barred by limitation. The suit can only proceed on the basis that the document itself is an agreement to re-convey. In 1909 a suit was brought on this document together with the sale-deed dated March 2, 1907, on the ground that the two constituted a mortgage, and the property was sought to be redeemed. That suit was dismissed. From the evidence in that case it was shown how Ex. 30 came to be executed. Although the sale-deed is dated March 2, 1897, it was really executed after Ex. 30. The chelas would not execute the sale-deed until they obtained the agreement from their creditors. It is obvious, therefore, that these documents evidence one transaction, and, therefore, the principle which was laid down in Bala Khandapa v. Sadashiv Hari Chivati (1), after a consideration of the decision in Mir Gazi v. Miya Ali (2), would be applicable. Each case must stand on its own facts. If the agreement to reconvey can be treated as a separate transaction, as it was in the case last cited, then under s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, it vests no interest in the property and need not be registered. But if the document which has not been registered, is really a part and parcel of the transaction, which is only partly evidenced by the registered document, then it is clear that the other document also requires to be registered. In other words, when a transaction is evidenced by a document which is in effect divided into two parts, one of which is registered and the other is not, then the law looks to what is the real transaction between the parties, and demands that the whole document evidencing that transaction must be registered, whether it consists of one part or two.

The result is that, in our opinion, Ex. 30 is not admissible in evidence for want of registration. That disposes of the case. The appeal will be allowed with costs throughout.

Coyajee, J.—This suit was instituted by Chamelgiri Guru Daulatgiri Gosavi for specific performance of an agreement, Ex. 30, dated March 17, 1897, to sell certain immoveable properties. Chamelgiri having died, the respondents were brought on the record as his legal representatives, and the suit was proceeded with.

The facts of the case, so far as they are now material, may be briefly stated. In March 1897, Chamelgiri and three other persons executed a deed of absolute sale, (Ex. 33), conveying certain properties to Naro Balkrishna Patkar (father of defendant No. 1) and two others. On March, 17, 1897, the purchasers signed the document, Ex. 30, by which they agreed to reconvey the same properties to the vendors in the manner and subject to the conditions therein stated. In the year 1909 the vendors brought a suit (No. 93) against the purchasers alleging that the said two documents taken together constituted a mortgage, and claiming that they were entitled to redeem it. The suit failed on the ground that Ex. 33 was an absolute conveyance and that the two documents could not be so read as to convert the transaction into one of mortgage.

The plaint in this case was presented on December 2, 1922. The suit was resisted on the grounds, among others, that: (1) the agreement, Ex. 30, was not enforceable by law; (2) it was not admissible in evidence for want of registration; and (3) the claim was barred by the law of limitation. All those contentions failed in the Trial Court, and the plaintiff obtained a decree for specific performance of the agreement and for possession of the suit properties on his paying to the defendants the sum of

Rs. 7,249-12-0. The case of defendant No. 2 need not be separately considered.

From that decree, the defendants have brought this appeal, and their main contention is that as the document, Ex. 30, had not been registered, it could not be received as evidence of any transaction affecting the immoveable property comprised therein, and that, therefore, it could not be made the foundation of a suit for specific performance.

The plaintiff refers to the sale-deed (Ex. 33) in the second paragraph of his plaint, and then in the fifth paragraph he says:—

“At the time of the execution of the sale-deed mentioned in cl. 2, it was agreed between Patkar, Raikar and Pradhan, the vendees on one hand, and Chamelgiri, Pitambargiri, Govindgiri and Harigiri vendors on the other, that the vendees should reconvey the properties sold to the vendors and the terms thereof which were agreed upon were as under: . . . A writing about the aforesaid conditions was passed on March 17, 1897, by Naro Balkrishna Patkar, Mahadeo Krishna Raikar and Ramchandra Bajirao Pradhan to Chamelgiri, Govindgiri, Pitambargiri and Harigiri.”

No oral evidence, we understand, was led in the case. Naro Balkrishna Patkar died some time before this suit was filed; his evidence was, therefore, not available. Chamelgiri died while the suit was proceeding; he was not examined, but the evidence given by him in the earlier suit No. 93 of 1909 was received and marked as Ex. 39 in this case. Its admissibility was not questioned before us. That evidence clearly shows that although, the sale deed bears date March 2, it was not signed by the vendors until after they had obtained the agreement (Ex. 30) on the 17th. He said: “I went to Alibag on the 17th for registering the document, (that is, the sale deed). We affixed our signatures to the document in the Registrar’s office. Those signatures were made after the counter-agreement (now Ex. 30) was taken. The counter-agreement was made on that very day.” Chamelgiri has given the reasons why he and the other vendors would not execute the sale-deed unless and until the purchasers agreed by a separate document (Ex. 30) to reconvey the property, that is, not to deal with the property as full owners for a period of twenty-one years. The transaction, then, was one and indivisible, it was to be found partly in one document and partly in the other. Exhibit 33 purports to be a deed of absolute sale and has been duly registered. Exhibit 30, which purports to limit the purchasers’ interest in the property conveyed under the former document has not been registered. This latter document came under s. 17 (1) (b) of Act III of 1877 and its registration was compulsory; it did not fall within the exception contained in s. 17 (h) of that Act which now corresponds to s. 17 (v) of Act XVI of 1908: Achutaramaraju v. Subbaraju (3). The facts of this case distinguish it from those cases in which a registered-deed of absolute sale is followed, soon or late, by an unregistered agreement to reconvey the same property. The question whether an agreement to reconvey immoveable property exceeding Rs. 99 in value does or does not require to be registered must, in each case, be decided on a consideration of the contents of the document itself and of such facts as might be proved for the purpose of showing in what manner the language of the document is related to existing facts. Proximity of time, or even the identity of the dates of the two documents, is not the decisive circumstance in all cases.

Respondent’s Counsel relied on: (i) Bhagwan Sahai v. Bhagwan Din (4), (ii) Vaman Trimbak Joshi v. Changi Damodar Shimpi (5) and (iii) Mir Gazi v. Miya Ali (2). It is sufficient to say that the facts of this case, as set out above, are entirely different. It is true that in each of those three cases, the two documents under consideration bore the same date; and, moreover, in cases (ii) and (iii) the agreement had not been registered. But in all the three cases, the documents embodied, each a separate and distinct transaction. Whereas, in this case there is but one transaction and it is contained partly in a registered document and partly in an unregistered one. In Bhagwan Sahai’s case (4), the plaintiff sued to redeem certain property on the ground that a deed of absolute sale of the property and a contemporaneous agreement to reconvey it within a period of ten years, constituted a mortgage. The Courts in India found in favour of the right to redeem. The Privy Council reversed their decree and dismissed the suit on the ground that it was not a case of mortgagor and mortgagee, but one of an absolute sale with a right to re-purchase within a period of ten years. The question whether an unregistered agreement to reconvey property exceeding Rs. 99 in value could be made the basis of a suit for specific performance was not raised and was, therefore, not considered (see the facts set out at pages 98 and 99*.)

In Bala Khandapa v. Sadashiv Hari Chivati (1), the plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain property on the basis of a sale-deed (Ex. 22) and an agreement to reconvey (Ex. 23). Their Lordships held that the document (Ex. 23) could not be treated as a separate document entirely apart from the sale-deed, and that it required to be registered. The learned Chief Justice said (page 1067†):—

"The plaintiff has to prove that he is entitled to get a reconveyance from the defendant, and he could only prove that by evidence, and unless Ex. 23 can be exhibited he must fail. He can only succeed if he can satisfy the Court that Ex. 23 was an entirely separate transaction from Ex. 22, since it will be conceded that if the defendant as owner of the property had, after the sale had been executed, agreed to reconvey the property to the plaintiff after a certain date, that might be a document which need not be registered. That was the view taken by this Court in Mir Gazi v. Miya Ali (2), though in that case the two documents were simultaneously executed, and the Court came to the conclusion that the two must be treated as separate, so that the second document was nothing more than an ordinary agreement to sell. I should consider myself that that was a very extreme case."

In this case the document (Ex. 30) was obtained by the vendors before they executed the sale deed Ex. 33, it purports, as indeed it was intended, to limit the purchasers' interest in the immoveable property conveyed under Ex. 33; it, therefore, required to be registered; and being unregistered it could not be made the foundation of a suit for specific performance.

For these reasons I agree in the order proposed by my Lord the Chief Justice.

Where an instalment bond provides that on default in the payment of two instalments the whole amount due under the bond shall become payable, and default is made in the payment of two instalments, a suit to recover the amount of the bond is governed by Art. 75 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, and limitation begins to run from the date on which the second instalment in respect of which default was made became due.

Revision against the decree of the Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 27th November 1923, in Civil Suit No. 539 of 1923.

Mr. G. R. Pradhan, for the Applicant.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Non-Applicant.

ORDER.—The only point in this case is one of limitation. The defendant executed a bond for Rs. 375 in favour of plaintiff on 3rd October 1915. Rs. 25 were repaid immediately and the balance was repayable by seven instalments of Rs. 50 each, payable in Kartik Shuddh 15th every year, beginning from Fasli 1326 (1916). On failure of any two instalments the whole was to become payable.

The plaintiff brought a suit on the bond on 22nd March 1923, alleging that the instalments for 1326, 1327 and 1328 (1916, 1917 and 1918) had been paid and those for 1919 and 1920 had not been paid. The last payment was in March 1921 on account of the instalment for 1328. The defendant denied any payment subsequent to 1916.

The Small Cause Court Judge found that the instalments of 1327 and 1328 were paid as stated by plaintiff and awarded plaintiff's claim.

Defendant applies in revision on the ground that the alleged payment by defendant being neither a payment of interest as such or a part of payment of principal in the hand of defendant could not operate to save limitation under s. 20 of the Limitation Act.

It is further argued that the mere payment and acceptance of an overdue instalment will not operate as a waiver and reference is made to Ballabhdas v. Dalipsingh (1).

*Pages of 17 I. A.—[Ed]

Neither of these pleas was urged in the Small Cause Court where the defendant simply denied any payment after 1916 and stated he was not in Nagpur during subsequent years.

The case is governed by Art. 75 of the Limitation Act and the cause of action arises when the default is made. Section 20 of the Limitation Act has no application. The Small Cause Court Judge has found that the instalments for Fasli 1327 and 1328 were paid. The cause of action arose when the instalments of 1329 and 1330 were not paid. The suit must be brought within three years from the date when the instalment of 1330 fell due which was Kartik Shuddh 15th, 1330. (26th November 1920.) The suit was brought in March 1923 and is in time.

It is argued that overdue instalments were to carry interest and so there was no full payment of the instalment of 1328. It was, however, accepted as a payment of the instalment in full.

The application is dismissed with costs.

Land Redemption and Foreclosure Regulation (Bengal) (XVII of 1806)—Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887, s. 104)—Mortgage—Revenue Records, entry in—Presumption—Redemption suit—Burden of proof.

Where in the case of a mortgage comprising a stipulation by way of conditional sale, the mortgagee purports to take foreclosure proceedings and a mutation is thereafter recorded in the Revenue Records showing that the mortgagee's rights have been converted into full proprietary rights, the burden is nevertheless upon the mortgagee, in a suit for redemption brought by the mortgagor, to prove that his mortgage right has been converted by foreclosure proceedings in accordance with law into a full proprietary right. The only onus thrown upon the plaintiff in such a case is to show that there was a mortgage and that it was granted within sixty years of suit. Once this is established, it would rebut the prima facie presumption of correctness of the Revenue Record entry, and the onus would then be on the defendant to show that the revenue entry is in fact correct and that there was a proper and legal foreclosure.

Second appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Amritsar at Lahore, dated the 18th November 1924, affirming that of the Subordinate Judge, District Court, Amritsar, dated the 7th March 1923.

Lala Moti Sagar, R. B., and Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Appellant.

Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit to redeem a mortgage of land granted in the year 1882. The mortgage was with possession and comprised a stipulation by way of conditional sale. The suit has been decreed by the Courts below on the ground that, though foreclosure proceedings in the suit were had in 1885, no record of those proceedings, with the exception of a mere entry in a register that notice was served on the mortgagor, is forthcoming, and the oral evidence to the effect that the notices were in accordance with law and that all the formalities required by the Regulation were observed has been rejected. In other words, the Courts below have held that there were no valid foreclosure proceedings and the mortgage consequently is still subsisting.

In 1888, after foreclosure proceedings, a mutation was written up to convert the mortgagee right into a full proprietary right. Bagu, the mortgagor, appeared before the attesting officer and denied receipt of consideration for the mortgage. He did not assert that the foreclosure proceedings were not in order, and since that date the quondam mortgagee has been in possession and regarded as proprietor. In 1902 Ruldu Ram, the quondam mortgagee, sold 37 kanals 8 marlas out of the land mortgaged to an uncle of one of the present plaintiffs who are reversioners of the mortgagor Bagu who died childless. The vendee is not one of the plaintiffs. Consequently it is not contended for the appellant with any vigour that there is any question of estoppel, but it is urged that, inasmuch as the entry in the Revenue Record is a prima facie evidence of the full proprietary right of the defendant, the burden of proving that there was no valid foreclosure lay upon the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs-respondents referred to Narendra Narain Singh v. Dwarka Lal

Mundur (1) and Madho Pershad v. Gajudhar (2) which lay down that the quondam mortgagee is fixed with the onus of proving the validity of the foreclosure proceedings, but it is noteworthy that in both those cases the plaintiff was the quondam mortgagee who was out of possession and who came into Court seeking possession within a short time of the foreclosure proceedings. Reference is also made to Indar v. Asa Singh (3) where the rule is cited that neither mortgagor nor mortgagee, by adverse act, can bar the right of the other. None of these rulings is of any direct help in the present case. Admittedly it lies upon the mortgagee to prove that his mortgage right has been converted by foreclosure proceedings in accordance with law into a full proprietary right, and the finding in this case is that such valid foreclosure proceedings have not been established. But the question for this Court's decision is whether in this case, in which the mortgagor's representatives are the plaintiffs, the burden of proving that the foreclosure proceedings were invalid does not lie upon them by reason of the mutation proceedings of 1888 and the presumption of correctness that attaches to the entry in the Revenue Record.

In my opinion the only onus thrown upon the plaintiffs is to show that there was a mortgage and that it was granted within sixty years of suit. This rebuts the prima facie presumption of correctness of the Revenue Record entry and the defendants are then fixed with the liability for showing that the revenue entry is in fact correct and that there was a proper and legal foreclosure. The Courts below on the evidence might have held that the foreclosure proceedings were good, but they have come to the opposite conclusion and the finding is one of fact.

For the foregoing reasons it must be taken that there were no legal foreclosure proceedings and the mortgage is still subsisting. I accordingly dismiss the appeal with costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 111 of 1925.

November 30, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Daniels.

THE BOMBAY BARODA AND CENTRAL INDIA RAILWAY—DEFENDANT

—APPLICANT

versus

MESSRS. GULABHAI BHAGWANDAS—PLAINTIFFS—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Carriage of goods—Railway Company—Freight charged at maund-rates, whether can be subsequently calculated at wagon-rates.

Where a Railway Company at the time of consignment agrees to charge freight on the basis of calculation at maund-rates and grants a Railway receipt on that basis, it cannot subsequently demand freight on the basis of a calculation at wagon-rates and vice versa.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Judge, Small Cause Court, Cawnpore, dated the 14th May 1925.

Messrs. Shiva Prasad Sinha and S. S. Sastry, for the Applicant.

Dr. M. L. Agarwala, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a revision against a decree of the Small Cause Court. The goods were consigned at maund-rates. The freight charged in the Railway receipt was Rs. 211. At destination the Railway claimed an additional sum of Rs. 219 on the ground that the goods occupied a full eight-wheeled wagon. The Judge of the Small Cause Court has decided that this overcharge was not justified as the Railway Company were not entitled to alter the basis of calculation at maund-rates on which the Rail receipt was granted to a calculation at wagon-rates or vice versa. This view is supported by the Full Bench decision in Chunni Lal v. Nizam's Guaranteed State Railway Co. (1). The learned Pleader for the applicant states that there is a mistake in the judgment in saying that the charge has been made at wagon-rates, but I find that the passage in the judgment is reproduced verbatim from the statement made by the defendant's Vakil in the Court below. Even if the applicant's case is correct and the Railway are charging on a conventional amount of maunds 320 because the goods occupied a complete wagon, this does not appear to me to make any difference in principle. The view taken by the Court below was, in my opinion, correct, and I dismiss this revision with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (A. V. C. s. 148, O. XXI, rr. 97 to 101—Execution of—O. XXI, r. 97, proceedings under, whether execution proceedings.

Order IX, C. P. C., has no application to execution proceedings. [p. 534, col. 2]

[Case-law considered]

Proceedings under O. XXI, rr. 97 to 101, C. P. C., are proceedings in execution and O. IX is inapplicable to them. [p. 534, col. 1]

A Court, therefore, has no jurisdiction to set aside under O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C., an ex parte order directing, free from obstruction, delivery of property to an auction-purchaser in execution of a decree. [p. 534, col. 2]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of 30th November 1922 of the Court of the District Munsif, Namakal, in R. E. A. Nos. 943 and 962 of 1922, in R. E. P. No. 539 of 1921, in O. S. No. 562 of 1918.

Mr. S. Varadachariar, for the Petitioner.

Mr. L. S. Veeruraghava Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—The only question in this revision petition is whether O. IX, r. 13 applies to execution proceedings. The District Munsif of Namakal passed an ex parte order on 26th October 1922 directing delivery of property free from obstruction. Defendants Nos. 5 and 6 applied on 9th November 1922 to set aside the ex parte order. The District Munsif set aside the ex parte order and passed a fresh order. The auction-purchaser who is also a decree-holder has preferred this civil revision petition. The question for decision is, was the order of the District Munsif setting aside his previous ex parte order passed without jurisdiction?

The answer to the question depends upon the wider question whether O. IX applies to execution proceedings. There are several cases on the point which are not all reconcilable. In Tirthasami v. Annappayya (1) Muthuswami Iyer, J., held that Chaps. VII and XIII of the old Code did not apply to execution proceedings. He rested his conclusion upon the Explanation to s. 647 of the Code of 1882. By Act VI, s. 4, of 1882 an Explanation was added to s. 647. This Explanation was enacted on account of the view held by the High Courts of Allahabad and Bombay that s. 647 corresponding to s. 141 of the present Code applied to execution proceedings. The Explanation is in these terms: "This section does not apply to applications for the execution of decrees, which are proceedings in suits." The Privy Council held in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2) that independently of the Explanation, s. 647 did not apply to applications for execution but only to original matters in the nature of suits, such as proceedings in Probates, and so forth. Muthuswami Iyer, J., held in Tirthasami v. Annappayya (1) that the dismissal of an ex parte did not bar a fresh application for execution. In Balasubramania Chetti v. Swarnammal (3) Benson and Sundara Iyer, JJ., held that O. II, r. 2 did not apply to execution proceedings. They observe at page 201:—"It could not have been the intention of the Legislature to apply to Execution proceedings provisions laid down with regard to suits only. The procedure to be followed in appeals and ex parte applications is specifically laid down in the C. P. C. section 141 is intended to apply to other proceedings in Civil Courts, such as Probate, etc.," Justice Ayling and Justice Seshagiri Iyer, JJ., followed this decision in Somasundaram Pillai v. Chokkalinga Pillai (4) In Kajuluri Swami v. Chintalapati Sur (5) Mr. Jackson, J., held that O. IX, r. 9 did not apply to orders passed in execution proceedings.

There are several cases which support the contention that O. IX is applicable to execution proceedings. In Subbiah Naicker v. Sadasiva Iyer (6) Ayling and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ., were of opinion that O. IX, r. 13, applied to execution proceedings. The point did not directly arise in that case, but the learned Judges held "orders in execution which came under s. 47, C. P. C., are decrees as defined in s. 2 of the Code and hence ex parte orders passed in execution are ex parte decrees and O. IX, r. 13 provides generally for the setting aside of ex parte decrees and not only for the setting aside of those classes of ex parte decrees which are not also orders passed under s. 47 in execution proceedings." In Chindambara Chetty v. Kandasami Goundan (7) the point was not decided, though Oldfield, J., in his referring order refers to the conflicting authorities on the point. The learned Chief Justice observed at page 780* "I desire to say that our decision in this case must be taken to be confined to the particular facts of this case, that is to say, that where you have nothing more than the non-attendance at the hearing of an application to settle the terms of a sale proclamation, the respondent cannot be taken to be estopped by reason of that non-attendance on the principle of res judicata from thereafter denying the liability of the property to execution". The decision in Kali Shettathi v. Shama Rao (8), relied upon by Mr. Veeraraghaviah does not help him. For, in the former, the point was not decided and in the latter Oldfield and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ., held that O. IX of the C. P. C., did not apply to execution proceedings.

There is a conflict of opinion in the other High Courts also. In Hari Charan Ghosh v. Manmatha Nath Sen (9), Jenkins, C. J. and Ray, J., held that O. IX, r. 13, C. P. C. was not applicable to a proceeding under rr. 100 and 101 of O. XXI. The learned Chief Justice after going into the history of s. 647 and the reason for enacting s. 4 of the Act VI of 1882 observes: "But after this alteration in the law, the Privy Council by a case, Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (2) decided on s. 647 as it stood before the Explanation was added, that the section did not apply to execution proceedings. The purpose of the Legislature in omitting that Explanation was to do away with that which was shown to be unnecessary by the Privy Council decision and to rely upon the terms of the section as interpreted by the Privy Council." This decision is a direct authority for the contention of Mr. Varadachariar for the petitioner that r. 13 does not apply to execution proceedings. A Full Bench of the Patna High Court in Bhubaneswar Prasad Singh v. Tilak- hari Lal (10) held that O. IX, r. 9 did not apply to an order dismissing for default an application to set aside, under O. XXI, r. 90, a sale held in execution of a decree. In that case, all the cases bearing on the question whether O. IX applies to execution proceedings, are collected. Though the learned Judges do not discuss in detail all the cases, they give sufficient reasons for their conclusions that O. IX has no application to execution proceedings. In Sheonandan Chowdhury v. Debi Lal Chowdhury (11) it was held that O. IX, r. 4 of the C. P. C., applied to an application under O. XXI, r. 100, which had been dismissed for default. With great respect, I am unable to follow the reasoning of the learned Judges. They observe at page 378.* "An application under O. XXI, r. 100, is not an application in execution proceedings, but is an original matter in the nature of a suit, and, in my opinion, the decision of the Judicial Committee in the case cited is an authority for the proposition that O. IX, r. 4 would apply by force of s. 141 to original matters in the nature of suits." All matters in execution are governed by O. XXI; O. XXI is headed "execution of decrees and orders" and applications under rr. 97, 99, 100 and 101 are applications to the Executing Court in the course of execution. It is difficult to understand why they cease to be proceedings in execution by the mere fact that the applications are made not by the decree-holder, but by other persons. It is the Court which executes the decree following the procedure laid down in O. XXI that entertains applications under rr. 97, 100 and 101. This view that after sale, proceedings in execution are not strictly execution proceedings is held by some of the learned Judges of the Calcutta High Court. In Diljan Mihha Bibi v. Hemanta Kumar Roy (12) it was held: "An application for setting aside an execution sale is not an application for execution, but in the nature of an original proceeding which is not excluded from the purview of s. 141 of the C. P. C. Such application, if dismissed for default, can be restored under O. IX, r. 9 of the C. P. C." In Bhuben Behari Nag Mazumdar v. Dharendra Nath Banerji (13) the same view was held. In Ramappa Chettiar v. Ekambara Padayachi (14) Venkatasubba Rao, J., held "A petition to restore a claim petition, dismissed for default of appearance, of the petitioner, is maintainable and not barred by O. XXI, r. 63, C. P. C."

When a decree-holder of an auction-purchaser is resisted in obtaining possession of immoveable property by a person in possession, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such resistance or obstruction under r. 97. If the Executing Court is satisfied that the obstruction was caused by the judgment-debtor or by some other person at his instigation, it shall direct that the applicant be put into possession of the property and if there is still further resistance, it may make the necessary order to enforce delivery of the property. If the Court is satisfied that the resistance or obstruction was occasioned by any person other than the judgment-debtor claiming on good faith to be in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, the Court shall make an order dismissing the application (r. 99). Where any person other than the judgment-debtor is dispossessed of immoveable property by the holder of a decree for possession or by the auction-purchaser, he may make an application to the Court complaining of such dispossession. If the Court is satisfied that the applicant was in possession of the property on his own account or on account of some person other than the judgment-debtor, it shall direct that the applicant be put in possession of the property. Rule 103 gives the right to the person against whom an order is made under rr. 98, 99 or 101 to institute a suit to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property, but subject to the result of such suit, if any, the order shall be conclusive. In considering the question whether the general provisions of the Code apply to execution proceedings, we must not overlook the fact that a right of suit is given under r. 103 to persons against whom an order is passed. In the case of parties to the decree, an appeal is provided under s. 47 of the C. P. C. and in the case of persons who are not parties to the decree, against whom an order is passed in execution, and in the case of the decree-holder or auction-purchaser against whom an order is passed in favour of persons not parties to the decree, a suit is provided. In the face of the clear wording of r. 103 it is difficult to understand why any proceeding after the property is brought to sale should be considered as something different from execution proceedings under O. XXI. On a careful consideration of all the cases, I have no hesitation in holding that proceedings under rr. 97, 98, 99, 100 and 101 are execution proceedings and, therefore, O. IX does not apply to them. The order of the District Munsif setting aside an ex parte order was passed without jurisdiction. The civil revision petition is allowed and the order, dated 30th November 1922, is set aside and that, dated 26th October 1922, is restored with costs throughout.

Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), ss. 30 (1), 32—Composition scheme, acceptance of—Annulment of adjudication, effect of—Debts not proved, whether discharged.

By the combined operation of ss. 30 (1) and 32 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the acceptance by the Court of a scheme of composition and the consequent annulment of adjudication operates as a discharge of the insolvent from all debts which were provable in insolvency but which have not been brought before the Insolvency Court. [p. 536, col. 2.]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Cawnpore, dated the 4th February 1925.

Mr. Ram Nama Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Shambhu Nath Seth, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This petition in revision is on behalf of the defendant and raises a question of law on which so far as this country is concerned, there does not appear to be any authority.

(14) 79 Ind. Cas. 818; 19 L. W. 685; 47 M. L. J. 13; 24 M. W. N. 479; 47 M. 651; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 5; 31 M. L. T. 309.

It appears that the defendant-applicant was adjudicated an insolvent by the Calcutta High Court on the 22nd of June 1921. He presented a scheme of composition which was ultimately accepted by the High Court and the adjudication was annulled on the 27th of September 1923. The respondents had a money claim as against the petitioner on the allegation that the latter obtained goods from them from time to time between the 15th of July 1916 and the 19th of June 1921, that he paid a portion of the price, and a small balance was still due with interest. On the completion of the insolvency proceedings, by a suit instituted on the 3rd of July 1924, the respondents claimed a sum of Rs. 109 and odd alleged to be due to them, in the Court of Small Causes at Cawnpore. The defendant denied the claim and pleaded, inter alia, that the insolvency proceedings barred the suit. The learned Judge held that the defendant was liable and he further held that the proceedings in insolvency were no bar to the maintenance of the suit.

The question that has been argued before me is whether the insolvency proceedings were a bar or not. The learned Judge thought that as the adjudication had been annulled the right of suit revived. This is a view which, however, has not been supported.

The answer to the question raised must depend on the interpretation of ss. 30 and 32 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, being Act III of 1909. The earlier section runs as follows:—

“If the Court approves the proposal, the terms shall be embodied in an order of the Court, and an order shall be made annulling the adjudication, and the provisions of s. 23, sub-ss. (1) and (3) shall thereupon apply, and the composition or scheme shall be binding on all the creditors so far as relates to any debt due to them from the insolvent and provable insolvency”.

It has not been denied that the respondents' claim was one which was ‘provable in insolvency’. Section 32 has to be read along with s. 30 as it makes the meaning of s. 30 (1) clear. It runs as follows:—

“Notwithstanding the acceptance and approval of a composition or scheme, the composition or scheme shall not be binding on any creditor so far as regards a debt or liability from which, under the provisions of this Act, the insolvent would not be discharged by an order of discharge in insolvency, unless the creditor assents to the composition or scheme.”

Reading the two sections together it appears to my mind that the acceptance of a scheme of composition operates as a discharge of the insolvent from all debts which were provable in insolvency, but which have not been brought before the Insolvency Court. A comparison of the language used in these two sections with the language of s. 45, will, in my opinion, leave no room for doubt that this interpretation is the correct interpretation. The sections in the English Law (Bankruptcy Act, 1914) which correspond with ss. 30 (1) and 32 of the Indian Act are ss. 16 and 17. The language employed in s. 16 (13) is very similar to the language employed in s. 30 (1) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act and s. 17 of the English Law corresponds with s. 32 of the Indian Act. Under the English Law it has been held that where a composition scheme is accepted and approved the debtor would get the same relief as is given by a discharge, vide Flint v. Barnard (1) and Seaton v. Lord Deerhurst (2).

On the language of the Act and on authority it is clear, therefore, that the suit in the Court below was not maintainable.

If we look to the principle of the whole enactment we shall at once see that this would be the only rule consistent with practicability. When a debtor takes shelter in an Insolvency Court, he cannot have complete protection unless a duty be cast on all the unsecured creditors of his to come forward and prove their claim to the Insolvency Court. If it be within the competence of such creditors to keep back their debts, so that, the rule of limitation permitting, they might come forward with their claims after the insolvent has been discharged or has managed to formulate a scheme for the payment of all scheduled creditors, the very object of the law of insolvency enactment would be frustrated.

I hold, therefore, that the suit of the plaintiffs was not maintainable in the Court below.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has urged that even though the Court below was in error, this Court should not exercise its discretionary power of revision in this particular case. He urged that his was a just debt and the passing of the decree would not entitle him to enforce the claim as against the insolvent, but would entitle him to go before the trustees under the scheme of composition and to obtain such relief as may be available. I do not quite see the force of this argument. There is nothing on the record to show that the respondents were unaware of the insolvency proceedings. The decree, if left outstanding, would be a source of constant trouble to the petitioner, although he may have done everything that was in his power to pay his creditors. There are no materials before me to enable me to find out clearly under what circumstances the plaintiffs' claim happens to be left out of the schedule prepared in the insolvency proceedings. According to the petitioner only a sum of Rs. 4-8 was due to the respondents, while on the respondents' own showing only a sum of Rs. 33-10-9 was due to them as a principal amount. The major portion of the claim due is said to consist of interest. I do think in the circumstances I ought to refrain from exercising my powers in revision.

The result is that I set aside the decree of the Court below and dismiss the respondents' suit. The respondents will pay the petitioner's costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Coyajee, J.—The plaintiff, (respondent in Second Appeal No. 163 of 1924), who holds the suit land on mulgeni tenure under the defendants at a fixed and invariable rent, sues for an abatement of his rent on the ground, inter alia, that the land has now become exposed to inundation from the sea. The Trial Judge dismissed his suit. But on appeal his claim was allowed by the learned District Judge, who says:—

"Appellant relies on Subramania Pathan v. Kattanbath Rama (1). Respondents reply that the lease then in question was one for twenty years and that the same principle cannot apply in the case of a perpetual tenancy; the proper remedy is a surrender of the tenancy which respondents are willing to accept. Appellant, however, has a right, which practically amounts to ownership. He is not willing to surrender it and defendants' readiness to accept the surrender shows that the land is not without value. The Madras case quoted recognizes the principle of abatement in such cases and the question of the length of the tenancy does not appear to be material. The order for abatement may be limited to the period during which the reason for abatement continues. There is evidence that the suit land has deteriorated and that the rents of surrounding lands have decreased; this evidence may, in the circumstances, be accepted. I hold, therefore, that the appellant is entitled to abatement on the ground of deterioration due to inundation from the sea."

He, therefore, declared that as the suit land had deteriorated on account of the inundation of the sea, plaintiff was entitled to an abatement of 7½ khandis plus five annas six pies cash; the declaration to remain in force until it was shown that for any reason the suit land should bear a higher rental. The main question for consideration in this appeal is whether on the facts of this case the plaintiff is entitled to proportionate abatement.

It is urged for the defendants that the general rule is that the tenant takes the demised premises subject to any defects existing in them at the time of the letting; and to any events which subsequently affect their value (Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XVIII, s. 962). This rule is, however, subject to exceptions; and it is urged that in the events that have happened the plaintiff's only remedy is the one to be found in s. 108 (e) of the Transfer of Property Act, 1882, which is in these terms:

"If by fire, tempest or flood, or violence of an army or of a mob, or other irresistible force, any material part of the property be wholly destroyed or rendered substantially and permanently unfit for the purposes for which it was let, the lease shall, at the option of the lessee, be void."

The provisions of that section, however, are not in terms applicable to this case for two reasons: (1) the Act was not extended to the Bombay Presidency until January 1, 1893; therefore, its provisions do not affect the rights and liabilities arising out of the legal relation which in this case was constituted by the agreement (Ex. 39), in the year 1889 (see s. 2); and (2) this being a lease for agricultural purposes, the provisions of s. 108 (e) do not apply to it (s. 117). That being so it is contended for the plaintiff that his right to claim abatement is founded on the principles of natural justice and equity and that it was recognized in this country before the enactment of the said Act. The plaintiff's contention, it is said, derives support from the judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock, C.J., in Sheik Enayutoollah v. Sheik Elaheebuksh (2). In that case the tenant sued for an abatement of his rent upon the ground that a part of his land had been washed away, and that a part of it had been covered with sand. The learned Chief Justice referred to the following passage in Bacon's Abridgment, 7th Edition, Vol. VII, page 63 (page 43*):

"...if part of the land be surrounded or covered with the sea, this being the act of God, the tenant shall not suffer by it, because the tenant, without his default, wants the enjoyment of part of the thing which was the consideration of his paying the rent; nor has the lessee reason to complain, because, if the land had been in his own hands, he must have lost the benefit of so much as the sea has covered."

His Lordship then proceeds (page 43*):

"We think that that rule is founded on the principles of natural justice and equity, that if a landlord let his land at a certain rent to be paid during the period of occupation, and the land is, by the act of God, put in such a state that the tenant cannot enjoy, the tenant is entitled to an abatement. The first question then is, whether there was any stipulation in the kabuliyat, which precluded the tenant from claiming abatement if, by the act of God, any portion of his land were washed away."

The case was then directed to be sent back to the first Court to try upon the merits, whether the kabuliyat contained any stipulation that the tenant should not have an abatement, if part of the land should be washed away. Then comes the following passage on which the plaintiff relies (page 44*):

"If the Judge find that the terms of the kabuliyat do not preclude the tenant from claiming an abatement in proportion to the land washed away, the case will have to be tried upon the merits, whether any portion of the land was washed away, and whether any portion of it was subsequently regained, because on that will depend whether the tenant is entitled to any and what abatement. If the land was re-formed, the abatement would cease from the time the regained land became as good as it was before; if it was not so good, the tenant would be entitled to an allowance for the injury done by the act of God. With regard to the land alleged to have been covered by sand, the Judge of the first Court will have to enquire if that portion was covered by sand, and thereby deteriorated, or rendered wholly useless; because if the land has been deteriorated, or rendered wholly useless by the act of God, the tenant would be entitled to an abatement, provided, there was no stipulation to the contrary in the kabuliyat."

I was at one time inclined to think that the plaintiff's contentions did derive support from the observations quoted above. On further consideration, however, I agree with my learned brother in the view that the learned Chief Justice was dealing with a case where a part of the land had been completely washed away, and another part had been covered with sand so as to render it wholly useless for cultivation. The judgment of Sir Barnes Peacock was followed in Subramania Pathan v. Kattambath Rama (1) as being in accordance with principles of natural justice. But that was a case of a portion of the demised premises becoming unfit for cultivation by reason of inundation from the sea. In Uma Sunkur Sirkar v. Tarini Chunder Singh (3) the patnidar was allowed abatement of rent on the ground that part of the land included in the patni tenure had been acquired by the Government for public purposes, although the kabuliyat executed by him contained the provision that he would make no objection on the score of diluvion or any other cause to pay the rent fixed or reserved by (the) kabuliyat. The ground of the decision was that the parties must be taken to have left the question as to abatement of rent to the general law of the country. It was, however, a case of total loss of enjoyment of a part of the land held under the patni lease.

"In matters of positive contract and obligation, created by the party (for it is different in obligations or duties created by law), it is no ground for the interference of equity, that the party has been prevented from fulfilling them by accident; or, that he has been in no default; or, that he has been prevented by accident from deriving the full benefit of the contract on his own side... The reason is, that he might have provided for such contingencies by his contract, if he had so chosen; and the law will presume the intentional general liability, where he has made no exception."

In this country Courts have long recognized the tenant's right to an abatement of rent where the property demised is lost, wholly or in part, by causes beyond his control. In this case, the lower Court finds that the productive capacity of the land has decreased by reason of the inundation, but the land has not become wholly unfit for cultivation. Local laws, applicable to various other provinces (e. g., the Punjab Tenancy Act, 1887, and the North-Western Provinces Tenancy Act, 1901) do enable a tenant to sue for abatement of rent of the ground that the productive powers of the land held by him have been decreased by causes beyond his control. There is no such enactment in force in this Presidency, and the plaintiff has not alleged or proved such usage.

On a fuller consideration of the subject, I concur with my learned brother in the order which he has proposed in Second Appeal No. 163. It follows that Second Appeal No. 164 fails and must be dismissed with costs. The only question argued in that appeal was—what rent was the plaintiff liable to pay from 1915-1916 to 1920-1921? The defendant obtained a decree for the stipulated rent for that period in Small Cause Suit No. 494 of 1921. That suit was decided in accordance with the findings recorded by the Trial Court in this case. The decree is not appealable. Moreover, if the plaintiff is not entitled to an abatement, he is liable to pay the stipulated rent.

Fawcett, J.—In this case, the main question is whether abatement of rent can be claimed for land, which has not been entirely washed away or covered by seawater, or rendered entirely useless for cultivation by its liability to inundation by sea-water. The facts found here are that the land can still be cultivated but its productive powers have deteriorated from its liability to inundation at high water. Paddy can still be raised though of an inferior kind to that formerly grown.

There is no legislation in the Bombay Presidency such as there is in other parts of India, (cf., Bengal Act VIII of 1885, ss. 38 and 52; Bengal Act VI of 1908, ss. 35 and 36; Central Provinces Act XI of 1898, ss. 15 and 18; Madras Act I of 1908; ss. 38, 39 and 42; Oudh Act XXII of 1868, ss. 18, 29 and 35B; Punjab Act XVI of 1887, ss. 20—26; United Provinces Act II of 1901, ss. 41—48) which permits of abatement of rent in the case of such deterioration as opposed to the case of total loss of the land held on tenancy, or part thereof. The Bombay Land Revenue Code also contains no provisions for abatement of assessment, except in the case of land, not less than half an acre in extent, being lost by diluvion (s. 47 of Bombay Act V of 1879, as amended by Bombay Act IV of 1913).

The contract between the parties gives no ground for a revision of the rent because of this deterioration. It fixes the rent "from generation to generation," i. e., in perpetuity; and (so far as its terms are concerned) just as the landlord could not claim to enhance the rent because the land became more productive from some accidental circumstance after the 'mulgeni' lease was granted, so in principle, I think the grantee cannot claim a reduction of rent because of the deterioration of the soil. The Bombay Gazetteer (Kanara), Vol. XV, Part II, page 186, describes 'mulgenidars' like the plaintiff as "a class of people...who on condition of the payment of a specified invariable rent to the mul or landlord and his successors obtained from him a perpetual grant of a certain portion of land to be held by them and their heirs for ever....The landlord and his heirs were precluded from raising the rent of the permanent lessee." It also points out that a difficulty arose out of the Survey Settlement sometimes fixing an assessment in excess of the rent fixed in the mulgeni deed, and consequently "most of the mulgeni deeds executed since the Survey began to contain the stipulation, that if the assessment is increased the lessee will pay the enhanced amount." The mulgeni lease in this case (Ex. 39) contains this latter stipulation; and an inference, therefore, arises that (at any rate so long as the land leased remained available for cultivation) the fixed rent should be invariable and not liable to enhancement except in the one case stipulated for, viz., the Government assessment being increased.

Prima facie, therefore, it seems to me to be a case where the English Law should be followed. This is that (subject to certain well-defined exceptions) the rent fixed by agreement must be paid, although the lessee suffers from an uncontrollable circumstance like the one under consideration. Thus Addison's Law of Contracts, 11th Edition, page 674, states the law as follows:—"Although, therefore, houses become ruinous and fall down, and fences and crops be destroyed by floods, or burned by lightning or accidental fire, or be thrown down by enemies, yet is the tenant liable to pay the rent so long as the land remains to him, and his legal title to the occupation and use thereof continues." I may refer also to Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XVIII, Art. 962 at page 481, and the case of Earl of Meath v. Cuthbert (4) which relates to premises near the sea-shore, that became devastated by the sea, but not "altogether and inevitably submerged." It is only when a part of the premises leased is entirely lost by inundation of the sea that English Law allows an abatement of rent on that account: cf. Halsbury's Laws of England, Vol. XVI, Art. 964 at page 484. This is on the principle stated in Bacon's Abridgment, 7th Edition, Vol. VII, page 63, that "it seems extremely reasonable that, if the use of the thing (demised) be entirely lost or taken away from the tenant, the rent ought to be abated or apportioned, because the title to the rent is founded upon this presumption, that the tenant enjoys the thing during the contract."

The principles of English Law, applicable to a similar state of circumstances, unless shown to be inapplicable to Indian society and circumstances, are to be taken as a guide in determining a suit according to "justice, equity and good conscience" under s. 26 of the Bombay Regulation IV of 1827, cf. Webbe v. Lester (5), Varden Seth Sam v. Luckpathy Royjee Lallah (6) and Waghela Rajsanji v. Shekh Masludin (7). I can see no sufficient ground for holding the English Law inapplicable to the condition of a case like the present, especially in view of the intended permanency of the rent that I have already mentioned.

Nor do I think that there is any real authority for a different rule being applied in India, apart from special legislation on the subject, such as I have already alluded to. In Sheik Enayutoollah v. Sheik Elaheebuksh (2) the Court expressly follows the rule laid down in the Bacon's Abridgment that I have mentioned, and says (page 43*):—"We think that that rule is founded on the principles of natural justice and equity, that if a landlord let his land at a certain rent to be paid during the period of occupation, and the land is, by the act of God, put in such a state that the tenant cannot enjoy, the tenant is entitled to an abatement." Accordingly it was held that unless there was any stipulation in the agreement of tenancy to the contrary, the tenant was entitled to an abatement of rent for any part of the land washed away. It is true that an inquiry was also ordered whether some of the land (page 44*) "was covered by sand, and thereby deteriorated, or rendered wholly useless," because in that case also there would be a similar right to abatement; but this must be read with the first sentence of the judgment which says (page 43*) "the appellant sues for an abatement of his rent, upon the ground that... a part of it (i.e., his land) had been covered with sand, from which we understand that it was so covered with sand as to have been rendered wholly useless." The words "deteriorated or rendered wholly useless" at the end of the judgment can, therefore, be read as equivalent to "deteriorated so as to be rendered wholly useless;" and it is, I think, unreasonable to think that Sir Barnes Peacock, intended to make a departure from the rule that there must be an entire loss of enjoyment, which is the evident basis of his judgment. If he did intend this, then he was probably thinking of s. 18 of Act X of 1859, which is mentioned in his judgment and which specifically allowed an occupancy raiyyat to claim an abatement not only for loss of land "by diluvion or otherwise," but also "if the value of the produce or the productive powers of the land have been decreased by any cause beyond the power of the raiyyat." But this is improbable, as he was dealing with the case on the basis that the appellant, not having a right of occupancy could not rely on this s. 18.

I know of no other authority that can be cited, apart from its being based on some statutory right like the one just mentioned, for allowing abatement for mere deterioration of the productivity of the land. Subramania Pathan v. Kattambath Rama (1) which is relied upon by the District Judge in his judgment, was a case of land flooded by sea-water and so rendered unfit for cultivation. Sukhraj Rai v. Ganga Dayal Singh (8) also appears to have been a case of permanent deterioration rendering the land totally unfit for cultivation (see at pages 666, 667 and 669); and even if it were not, there are statutory provisions enabling the Courts of the Central Provinces to allow abatement. Uma Sunkur Sircar v. Tarini Chunder Singh (3) which is also referred to in my learned brother's judgment, is a case of loss of the land by its acquisition by Government held to (8) 63 Ind. Cas. 219; 6 P. L. J. 665 at p. 666; 2 P. L. T. 569; (1922) Pat. 132; (1922) A. I. R. (Pat.) 169.

The plaintiff is, no doubt, under s. 26 of the Bombay Regulation IV of 1827, entitled to rely on "the usage of the country in which the suit arose;" but no such usage was pleaded in the plaint or attempted to be proved at the trial. An usage can of course be established by judicial authority. But I can see no sufficient ground for holding that it is part of the general law of the country recognized by the Courts, that a tenant can get abatement of rent for anything less than total unfitness of part of his land for cultivation, falling within the rule in Bacon's Abridgment that I have mentioned. The mere fact that statutory rights to abatement of rent on a lesser ground like that now in question have been created in other Provinces, does not justify the view that such a right exists, as part of the general law of the country. On the contrary, I think, it indicates that it was considered necessary to legislate, in order to create such a right. The enactments are in an ordinary form, not in that of affirmative legislation.

Accordingly, as there is no legislation in force here to help the plaintiff-respondent, I think that the District Judge was not justified in law in reversing the Trial Court's decree, dismissing the plaintiff's suit with costs. I would, therefore, allow the Appeal No. 163 of 1924, reverse the lower Appellate Court's decree, and restore the Trial Court's decree with costs against the plaintiff-respondent in this Court and the lower Appellate Court.

I agree with my learned brother that Second Appeal No. 164 of 1924 fails and should be dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 10, 24, 25—

Debtor's petition to be adjudicated insolvent—Prima facie evidence of inability to pay debts—Inquiry as to reality of debts, whether proper.

When a person presents a petition to be adjudicated an insolvent, the petition itself is treated as an act of bankruptcy under the Insolvency Law. And where he states that his liabilities are more than his assets, that must be taken as prima facie evidence that he is unable to meet his liabilities which is the case. The Court has to consider for the purpose whether the debtor is insolvent.

No inquiry ought to be held at that stage as to the reality of the debts. Such an inquiry into the bona fides of the insolvent is proper only when he applies for discharge and not before.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Anantapur, in I. P. No. 4 of 1922.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. V. Ananthakrishna Iyer, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Anantapur, dismissing the appellant's petition to be adjudicated an insolvent. The appellant stated in his petition that he had debts to the extent of Rs. 25,018-4-0 and that his properties were worth about Rs. 10,000; and he further stated that he was unable to meet his liabilities. The learned Judge dismissed his application on the ground that he was not satisfied, that the petitioner was unable to pay his debts. When a person presents a petition to be adjudicated an insolvent that petition itself is treated as an act of bankruptcy under the Insolvency Law. And when he says that his liabilities are more than his assets, that must be taken as some evidence that he is unable to meet his liabilities.

Under s. 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act where a debtor is the petitioner, he shall be required to furnish such proof as to satisfy the Court that there are prima facie grounds for believing the same. Under s. 25, the Court shall dismiss the petition if it is not satisfied of his right to present the petition. In this case, the learned Judge has taken evidence to consider whether some of the debts mentioned in his petition are real debts. Such an enquiry should not be held for the purpose of considering whether the application of the appellant should be granted or not. An enquiry into the bona fides of the insolvent should be held when he comes up for discharge and not before. What the Court has to do is to see whether prima facie the person applying to be adjudicated insolvent is unable to pay his debts. It cannot be said in this case that the appellant was able to pay his debts at the time when he made his application to the lower Court. On the evidence on record, we do not think there are no prima facie grounds for believing that the appellant is unable to pay his debts.

We set aside the order of the District Judge and remand the petition for fresh disposal.

We make no order as to costs.

Bombay Khoti Settlement Act (I of 1880), s. 33, r. II (1) (b)—Landlord and tenant—Rent payable—Borkhat, entry in, value of—Arrangement, unauthorised, between khot and tenant, whether can be enforced

The whole scheme of s 33 of the Bombay Khoti Settlement Act is to prevent arrangements being made in an unauthorised way by the khots with the tenants contrary to the terms of the bot-khat. Rule II (1) (b) under the section provides that if there is any agreement between the parties after the amount of rent has been fixed in the bot-khat, then the parties should appear in person or by duly authorised agent before the Recording Officer and consent to the entry being made altering the terms under which the tenant holds the lands. Where the agreement is not given effect to in this manner, the rights and obligations of the parties continue to be regulated by the terms of the entries contained in the bot-khat and the agreement cannot be given effect to. Second appeal from a decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, A. P., at Ratnagiri, in Appeal No. 67 of 1923, confirming a decree of the Joint Subordinate Judge at Deoghad, in Civil Suit No. 486 of 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff sued to recover possession of the suit property alleging that the same belonged to him, having been rented by the defendant under a rent-note dated May 5, 1913. The defendant raised various defences to which I am not going to refer in detail. It is sufficient to say in passing that they did defendant little credit, and only raised a prejudice against him in the Courts. In the Trial Court he attempted to show that the lavanchitti, Ex. 12, was obtained by misrepresentation, but failed to prove that. So it was held that he was bound by the lavanchitti, and that he forfeited his occupancy rights by having failed to pay rent for five years.

It cannot be disputed that the defendant's name was in the bot-khat as an occupancy tenant, paying rent according to the appraisal. That would give the plaintiff khot about eight maunds of paddy annually. According to the lease the tenant had to give six maunds and was not liable to enhancement. But the Judge omitted to notice that the defendant had to pay assessment, and as the cash payment for six maunds was Rs. 12, and the assessment was Rs. 4-0-6, it seems obvious that the rent payable under the lavanchitti, taken together with the assessment, was practically the same as the defendant had to pay under the bot khat. The Trial Judge gave the plaintiff a decree directing that the defendant should deliver possession of the land described in the plaint, and pay Rs. 72 as rent for the six years in arrears. He further directed an inquiry with regard to mesne profits.

In appeal the Judge said that the only point was whether the lavanchitti had been fraudulently obtained by the plaintiff as alleged by defendant. He found that issue in the negative, and agreed in other respects with the Trial Court. Only he thought that as plaintiff has taken Rs. 100 from the tenant when the lavanchitti was passed, the plaintiff ought to pay back that sum before taking possession.

I do not think that either of the Courts below recognised the importance of the bot-khat which is the record under the Khoti Settlement Act of the terms according to which various classes of occupants hold their lands. Section 33 says "rent payable to the khot by privileged occupants shall be as follows." There are three classes mentioned: Dharekari; QuasiDharekari, and any permanent tenant. Rent would be payable "in each case according to the terms of the entry in the Survey Record made in respect thereof, and for the time being applicable thereto, under the following rules." Rule II (1) (b) provides that if there is any agreement between the parties after the amounts have been fixed in the bot-khat, then the parties should appear in person or by duly authorized agent before the Recording Officer and consent to the entry being made altering the terms under which the tenants held the lands.

It seems to me that the whole scheme of s. 33 of the Khoti Settlement Act is to prevent arrangements being made in an unauthorised way by the khots with the tenants contrary to the terms of the bot-khat. And in this case if the defendant had admitted that he held as occupancy tenant according to the terms of the bot-khat, and was bound to pay rent according to those terms, he would have had the Courts entirely in his favour. Unfortunately he denied the validity of the lavanchitti, he denied apparently the plaintiff's title as khot, and he asserted that he was entitled to hold the land on payment of assessment only. We think that the right which lay in the plaintiff was to recover the rent as fixed in the bot-khat, and that the lavanchitti was not a valid document, as it had not been registered before the Recording Officer.

The result will be that the plaintiff is entitled to recover rent according to the bot-khat. There is no reason why the defendant, considering his conduct, should not be ordered to pay Rs. 72 which are in arrears according to the bot-khat. The plaintiff, however, has already recovered Rs. 100 under the terms of the lavanchitti. Therefore, we leave the order for payment of Rs. 72 as it stands in the decree of the lower Court, and we also declare that the defendant is entitled to set-off any money paid by him to the plaintiff under the lavanchitti. In other respects the suit is dismissed, but without costs.

Coyajee, J.—I agree in holding that the lavanchitti sued upon in this case is not valid and binding on the defendant. In the year 1890 there were disputes between the khots of this village and the tenants. A decision was arrived at by the Settlement Officer, and in accordance with that decision entries were made in the Settlement Records. It is clear then that this lavanchitti executed by the plaintiff khot in favour of the defendant in the year 1913, was an attempt to modify those entries. The third issue framed in this suit was: "Can plaintiff challenge the entry in Survey Records and is not defendant an occupancy tenant in respect of the lands in suit?" The Trial Judge says: "The defendant ceased to be an occupancy tenant the moment he obtained the lease, Ex. 12, and his relations with the plaintiff were governed by the lease and not by the provisions of the Khoti Act; hence the fact that he is described as an occupancy tenant in the bot-khat does not help him to repudiate the lease, Ex. 12." He accordingly passed a decree directing the defendant to deliver to the plaintiff possession of the suit-lands and to pay Rs. 72 as arrears of rent. On appeal, the defendant raised, among others, the same question, but the Appellate Judge did not deal with it. I am unable to agree with the view of the Trial Judge. It was not contended before the lower Court that the defendant had resigned his land. The bot-khat continues to show his permanent tenancy. He is liable to pay rent according to the terms of the entry made in the Survey Record. The agreement as to rent contained in the lavanchitti was not given effect to in the manner provided by s. 33, r. II (b), of the Khoti Settlement Act. In my opinion, the rights and obligations of the parties continue to be regulated by the terms of the entries contained in the Settlement Records.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the judgment-debtor against an order of the District Judge of Chittagong, dated the 18th March 1925. The facts are these. The properties of the judgment-debtors were put up to sale in execution of a mortgage-decree obtained by the respondents-mortgagees. In execution of that decree the lands described in the boundaries of the mortgage-deed were sold and purchased by the decree-holders. The decree-holders obtained possession of the properties purchased by them at the auction-sale. In the proceedings in execution the purchasers were obstructed by the judgment-debtors and by an application proceedings under O. XXI, r. 98 were initiated. That application was made by the auction-purchaser and was headed as an application under O. XXI, r. 98, C. P. C. The learned Subordinate Judge passed an order adverse to the auction-purchasers and it purported to have been made under the said rule. Against that order the auction-purchasers preferred an appeal to the District Judge. The learned District Judge in that appeal construed the decree, the mortgage-bond and the sale certificate and made an order in favour of the auction-purchasers and reversed the order made by the Subordinate Judge. The present appeal, as I have already stated, is by the judgment-debtors against that order of the learned District Judge.

The first point argued in this appeal was that the appeal before the learned District Judge was incompetent as the Code did not allow an appeal against an order passed under O. XXI, r. 98. The learned Vakil for the respondents argued that the appeal was competent because the questions were decided between the decree-holders and the judgment-debtors under s. 47, C. P. C., and not merely questions under O. XXI, r. 98. There is a large number of cases on the point in controversy, and I shall refer only to some of them, that is to the cases of Aduram Haldar v. Nakuleswar Rai Chowdhury (1) and Sasibhushan Mookerjee v. Radhanath Bose (2). In these cases the view that was taken was that in these proceedings the decree-holder qua decree-holder was really not a party. The question was merely between the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser and any question which might arise between the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder could not be raised and any decision which was passed relating to the construction of the decree would not be binding against the decree holders. In that view when proceedings were initiated by the auction-purchaser under O. XXI, r. 98 and the matter was decided under that rule it must be held that the order was passed under that rule. As any order passed under that rule is not appealable, the appeal before the learned District Judge was not competent and any question which had been decided by the learned Subordinate Judge in the order that he passed as to the construction of the decree or, in other words, a decision on the rights of the decree-holder as against the judgment-debtor was foreign to the proceedings which were before him. Any such judgment would not be binding upon the decree holder. Following the principle laid down in the cases I have cited, I think, the order passed by the District Judge in appeal was passed without jurisdiction, as no appeal lay before him.

The result, therefore, is that we set aside his order and restore the order of the learned Subordinate Judge. As I have already stated it must be distinctly understood that any view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge would not be binding against the decree-holders as decree-holders. The appeal is, therefore, allowed. But in the circumstances of the case there will be no order as to costs.

No order need be passed in the Rule which was merely for the stay of execution during the pendency of this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 97—Preliminary decree—Appeal—Final decree passed during pendency of appeal—Procedure.

When an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed by the Trial Court during the pendency of the appeal against the preliminary decree, the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal on the file against the final decree, or at least to inform the Appellate Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a final decree has been passed. [p. 546, col. 1.]

First appeal from the decision of the First Class Subordinate Judge, at Ahmedabad, in Civil Suit No. 1324 of 1923.

Mr. R. J. Thakor, for the Appellant.

Mr. B. G. Rao, for Mr. G. S. Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—In this case the plaintiff sued to recover Rs. 6,721 and costs and interest on the footing of a registered mortgage-deed, dated January 23, 1923, for Rs. 6,500. The defendant admitting the mortgage pleaded that he had not received a certain sum of Rs. 2,600 as a part of the consideration. The First Class Subordinate Judge held that this plea was bad, and directed that after taking an account of what was due on the mortgage the defendant should pay Rs. 6,721 and costs of the suit with interest at nine per cent. from the date of suit till re-payment within six months from the date of the decree. In default plaintiff to recover this sum by the sale of the mortgaged property. That decree was passed on April 10, 1924.

An appeal was filed to this Court from that decree and was heard on August 21, 1925. In the meantime, the defendant not having paid the decretal amount, the plaintiff applied for a decree absolute, and accordingly a decree was passed for the sale of the mortgaged property. In the appeal against the preliminary decree which came before this Court, we were not told that the decree had already been made absolute, and that an order had been made for the sale of the property. Consequently in dismissing the appeal we directed that the time for payment should be extended by six months from the date of our judgment.

The respondent's Pleader now asks us to delete that order. The correct legal position, when an appeal is filed against a preliminary decree, but no stay of proceedings is asked for, and a final decree is passed in the lower Court without any appeal being filed therefrom, is somewhat obscure. It seems to me that the proper course for the appellant in such a case is to put an appeal on the file against the decree absolute, or in any event to inform the Court, when the appeal against the preliminary decree comes on for hearing, that a decree absolute has been made. It may not be that the Appeal Court is debarred from hearing the appeal from the preliminary decree merely on account of the Court below having passed a final decree. But to avoid the difficulties which may arise when no application has been made for stay of proceedings, it would certainly be desirable that, in any case where a preliminary decree is passed, and a party appeals against that decree, when the Court below passes a final decree, he should file an appeal against that decree.

In this case if the property had already been sold before the decision of the Appeal Court, it is difficult to see how this Court could have set aside the sale. But we think the fairest order to be made now is that the respondent-mortgagee should add his costs of the postponed sale and of the application if any to the mortgage, and that the appellant-mortgagor should have one month from this day to pay what is due. In default the respondent can proceed to get the property sold. The respondent must pay the costs of this application if any.

We make it clear that the mortgagee is entitled to his decretal amount and interest and all his costs, charges and expenses. Those must be paid if the mortgagor desires to avoid the sale of the property.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 145, O. XXV, r. 1 (3)—Security for costs—Bond hypothecating property—Enforcement of security—Procedure—Execution.

Plaintiff was required to give security for costs and appellant who offered himself as surety executed a bond that if the plaintiff failed to obey the order of the Court with regard to the payment of costs, certain property of the surety specified in the bond would be liable for the satisfaction of the order and that if the property proved insufficient for the purpose the surety would himself be liable. Plaintiff's suit was dismissed and plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the suit. Defendant took out execution for costs and applied for sale of the property hypothecated by the surety:

Held, (1) that on the language of the bond executed by the surety the defendant was not bound to proceed first in execution against the plaintiff and only on his failure to obtain satisfaction from the plaintiff to proceed against the surety;

(2) that there was no mortgage of his property by the surety and that the proper procedure to enforce the liability of the surety under the bond was to proceed in execution by sale of the hypothecated property.

Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 22nd November 1924.

Mr. Damodar Das, for the Appellant.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Two points of law have been raised in this appeal and a third point, also of law, has been argued with the permission of the Court.

It appears that Musammam Amrit Bibi, the respondent No. 2, brought a suit for recovery of her alleged dower-debt from the decree-holder, respondent No. 1, Mustafa Husain, who was in possession of some of the property of the late husband of Musammam Amrit Bibi, as an heir to his wife, the daughter of Musammam Amrit Bibi's husband. While the suit was pending, Mustafa Husain obtained an order from the Court to the effect that the plaintiff Musammam Amrit Bibi must furnish security for his costs. This security was furnished by the appellant Ata Husain. He gave a bond hypothecating a certain property, on the 25th of April 1922. The suit was decided against Musammam Amrit Bibi and Mustafa Husain has taken out execution for costs,

He applied for the sale of the property hypothecated by Ata Husain and also he applied for the attachment and sale of certain other property, said to belong to Musammam Amrit Bibi.

Ata Husain objected to the execution proceeding against him and his case is that he is liable only after Musammam Amrit Bibi has been compelled to pay and has failed to do so and that a failure on the part of the decree-holder to execute the decree against Musammam Amrit Bibi amounted to a release of his liability. The point urged for the first time is that the appellant's liability can be enforced by a suit and not in execution.

As regards the plea that execution should proceed at first against the lady, we have to look to the language of the bond itself. The bond says that if the lady failed to obey the order of the Court the property of the surety would be liable and also he himself in case the property proved insufficient. There is no provision for the principal debtor being proceeded against as a condition precedent to execution against the surety. This disposes of also the connected plea that by not proceeding against the principal debtor the surety has been discharged. Section 139 of the Contract Act does not apply to the facts of the case. It is true that the learned Judge of the Court below suspected that the judgment-debtor Musammam Amrit Bibi had been won over by the decree-holder Mustafa Husain who is her son-in-law. But that Court did not arrive at any definite finding. I agree with the Court below that the question of collusion is immaterial. Even if there be any collusion the decree-holder has done nothing, no overt act by which it can be said that the principal debtor has been released from liability to the decree-holder or that any remedy of the surety against the principal debtor has been impaired. It is clear, therefore, that the two points taken in the grounds of appeal cannot succeed.

The third question is whether s. 145 of the O. P. U. applies and there can be no execution of the decree by sale of the property charged, in the execution department. This question cannot be decided without having regard to the language of the bond executed by the appellant. It is to be noted that there is no mortgage in the legal sense of the term. The appellant said in the bond that the Court had called upon Amrit Bibi to furnish security for costs to the amount of Rs. 600 and that, therefore, the appellant was offering himself as a surety agreeing that the amount of costs payable by the lady might be realised by sale of the property hypothecated and the balance from him personally. It is clear, therefore, that there is no mortgage in the proper sense of the term. There is no mortgagee and in the language of their Lordships of the Privy Council, the Court not being a juridical person it cannot be sued, it cannot take property and it cannot assign the mortgage: vide, Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (1). The bond before the Privy Council was in language very similar to the language of the bond now before me. The learned Counsel for the appellant has relied on the case of Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (2) and it was urged that the Court might assign the mortgage to anybody in order that the mortgage might be enforced by a regular suit. As was pointed out in the course of the argument, the observations in the case of Amir v. Mahadeo Prasad (2) of Richards, C. J. at page 227,* that the bond could only be enforced by a regular suit brought by the Court itself or by some person to whom the Court could transfer the mortgage for the purpose of instituting the suit, go counter to the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council already quoted. The position, therefore, is this that there is a liability undertaken by the appellant and there ought to be some method of enforcing the same. The method can be by way of execution alone as there is nobody to enforce the mortgage by means of a suit. This was the opinion of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Raj Raghubar Singh v. Jai Indra Bahadur Singh (1) and a similar view was taken by a Bench of this Court in Beti Mahalakshmi Bai v. Badan Singh (3). I hold that the surety bond given in the present case can be enforced by execution alone and, therefore, the order of the Court below was correct.

The appeal fails and is hereby dismissed with costs.

Railways Act (IX of 1890), ss. 77, 140—Suit against Railway—Notice to officer other than Agent, validity of.

The mere fact that the Agent of a Railway Company constitutes a department for the registering and investigation of claims, and that a claim is preferred to that department, does not absolve the person making the claim, if he intends to sue the Railway Company, from giving notice to the Company as prescribed by s. 77 read with s. 110 of the Railways Act.

When a person claiming against a Railway Company must be presumed to know that he must do a certain act in a certain way within a fixed time, without which preparatory step a suit will not be competent, he is not prevented from taking that step because he has been told that his claim is receiving attention and no further answer is received before the expiry of the period of limitation. On the contrary the fact that his claim is not being attended to is sufficient to warn him that if he wants to prosecute his claim in Court he must do what the law requires.

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Shah.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General, (with him Mr. Daphtary), for the Appellants.

Mr. Binning, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No. 966 of 1923 the defendants raised an issue whether the plaintiff delivered a notice of his claim as required by ss. 77 and 140 of the Indian Railways Act.

On June 15, 1922, the plaintiff wrote to the Deputy Traffic Manager that the bales had not been received and requesting him to settle the claim.

On June 23, the letter was acknowledged, and it was intimated that the claim would receive attention.

On October 23, the plaintiff was informed that his claim could not be accepted as the goods were burnt accidentally by fire. This information would not have reached the plaintiff within six months from the date the goods were consigned.

On November 25, the plaintiff wrote to the Agent of the defendant Company giving notice of his claim. The learned Judge held that the first notice given to the Deputy Traffic Manager was a notice to the Railway Administration on the ground that there was a Department in the Traffic Manager's Office which dealt with claims, to which claims addressed to the Agent would be sent for disposal. As the Railway Administration had constituted a separate department for dealing with claims and that department kept a register of claims to which the Agent had access at any time, a notice to the Traffic Manager was a notice to the Railway Administration. With due respect that may be equity but it is not logic.

Section 140 of the Indian Railways Act defines when notice has to be given under the Act to the Railway Administration, how that notice has to be given, and the mere fact that the Agent constitutes a department for the registering and investigation of claims, cannot deprive the Railway Company of the protection given to it by the Act against suits on claims of which due notice as provided by the Act has not been given to it.

In my opinion the notice of June 15, 1922, was not a notice to the Railway Administration. It might be argued that where the Traffic Manager delayed for four months before informing the plaintiff that his claim could not be entertained, the Company had by their own action induced the plaintiff to refrain from sending a notice under s. 77 to the Railway Company. But when a person claiming against a Railway Company must be presumed to know that he must do a certain act in a certain way within a fixed time, without which preparatory step a suit will not be competent, he is not prevented from taking that step because he has been told that his claim is receiving attention and no further answer is received before the expiry of the six months. On the contrary the fact that his claim is not being attended to is sufficient to warn him that if he wants to prosecute his claim in Court he must do what the law requires.

On a strict interpretation of the law I feel compelled to hold that the point raised by the defendant Company was competent, and was fatal to the plaintiff's case.

the order dated the 5th of March 1925 passed by the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich. The facts are as follows :—The appellant holds a decree of sale on a mortgage as against the respondent. Under s. 68 of the C. P. C., the decree was transferred to the Collector for execution. The Collector instead of proceeding to sell the property has made a lease of it by the terms of which he has provided for the satisfaction of the decree in several instalments.
To this course adopted by the Collector the decree-holder took objection by an application presented to the Subordinate Judge, who had originally passed the decree for sale. The Subordinate Judge rejected that application by the order now under appeal.We are of opinion that no appeal lies to

C. P. C. the Local Government has framed rules as to the venue of appeal against orders made by the Collector in discharge of his powers under s. 68. This Court is not the Court to which an appeal would lie under those rules. Therefore under sub s. (2) of s. 70 of the Code this for a declaration that they had a right to manage the suit Wadi, to let it to tenants and to realize the rent, that defendants Nos.

1 and 2 had not such a right, and to get a permanent injunction against them and to restrain them from making any such use.The plaintiffs alleged that they and defendants Nos 1 and 2 belonged to the Modh Ganchi caste of Kalupur Panchpura, and that the caste owned the suit Wadi.
There was a caste meeting convened on December 12th, 1920, to pass some resolutions in respect of the caste, as defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and one Vallabh had unauthorizedly got the management and did not submit accounts, and the property had been wasted. They further alleged that the caste entrusted the vahivat of the property to the defendants, and they were bound to hand it back to the plaintiffs in accordance with the caste resolutions.Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 contended that two factions existed in the caste, that the plaintiffs' faction had no right to have the management and that the jurisdiction of the Court was excluded.The Trial Judge held that the plaintiffs did not prove that the two factions in the Kalupur Panchpura caste had amalgamated, and he accordingly dismissed the suit.

In appeal, the Judges said: "Considering all facts I am satisfied that there was a re-union of the factions in 1969 V. S., 1913 A. D., that the plaintiffs are members of the caste and that it is in accordance with the resolution passed by a majority at a meeting, of which, the minority defendants Nos. 1 and 2 had perfect and legal notice and at which they could have had their say, if they choose to do so, that the present suit is filed. If defendants Nos. 1 and 2 choose to absent themselves and remain away they must thank themselves for the consequences." That is a finding by the Judge that there were not two sections or factions in the caste in the sense that the caste was split up into two divisions, so that a meeting of one section or faction would not bind the members of the opposite faction, and that, therefore, jurisdiction of the Court was not excluded.

The appellants have relied upon the Full Bench decision in Nemchand v. Savatichand (1). There the plaintiffs, who were certain members of the Shrivak caste at Surat, asked for a decree giving them half the compensation granted by the Collector in regard to certain shops belonging to the caste which had been divided into two factions, the plaintiffs forming one, and the defendants the other, of such factions. The Court confirmed the decree of the District Judge who held that the question involved was a caste question not cognisable by the Civil Court.

We think that case is only an authority for this proposition, that when members of a caste, who have filed a suit in connection with caste property, have admitted that there has been a division of the caste so that they only ask to be held entitled to the division of the property, and to a decree to the extent of half of what was the caste property, then it can be said that really the caste has been divided in such a way that the question how the caste property is to be divided is one which the Courts cannot decide. No reasons for the Full Bench decision are reported and with all due respect without reason it can hardly be said to be convincing. In any event it cannot be extended beyond the facts of the case.

But in Lalji Shamji v. Walji Wardhman (2), although there was a division of opinion in the caste, it was held that the question at issue was not a matter relating to the internal administration and affairs of the caste, but to the property of the caste and so the Court had jurisdiction to interfere. That is the principle which I understand has always been followed by this Court.

It follows then that the jurisdiction of the Court is not excluded in every case in which there has merely been a division of opinion in the caste. Otherwise as soon as there is such a division on a particular question, no Court would have any jurisdiction to decide the question, with the result that the only way the question could ultimately be decided would be by resort to force.

It seems to me that in this second appeal it is only a question of fact whether or not the caste was split up and could be considered to be two separate entities, so that the question relating to the caste could not be decided by the Court. But from the finding of the Appellate Judge it would appear that the caste was not really divided into two factions, that although some members would not agree with the opinion of the other members of the caste, still the caste remained as a caste, and could meet together when the minority might have an opportunity of protesting against the resolutions moved by the majority. The mere fact that they might vote against such resolutions cannot of itself result in the splitting up of the caste into two factions so that the question relating to caste property could no longer be decided by the Court.

The plaintiffs here had the authority of the caste at their meeting to take these proceedings for the preservation of the property belonging to the caste, and it seems to me they are entitled to get the decree which the Appellate Court gave them against defendants Nos. 1 and 2. They must be taken merely to be holding out against the wishes of the caste with regard to the management of the caste property.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.
Coyajee, J.—I agree in holding that the decision of the lower Appellate Court is right, on the ground that the question arising in this case is not a question between two distinct sections of the Modh Ghanchi Caste of Kalupur Panchpura, but that the suit was brought against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 personally.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 10—Decree against widow of deceased debtor—Birth of posthumous son—Legal representative, who is—Execution, whether can proceed against son.

A creditor brought a suit against the widow of a deceased debtor to recover the debt and obtained a decree. Subsequent to the date of the decree the widow gave birth to a son. The decree-holder sought to execute the decree against the son as the legal representative of the deceased debtor.

Held, that on the analogy of the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10, C. P. C., the son who really represented the estate of the deceased debtor must now be treated as his legal representative and that execution could, therefore, proceed against the son [p 552, col 1.]

Civil revision from an order of the Subordinate Judge, Muttra, dated the 12th February 1925.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Applicant.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This revision raises a question of law on which there does not appear to be any direct authority. The matter is not, it further appears, covered by any direct rule of procedure contained in the C. P. C.

The facts are these. One Pancha was indebted to one Jugal Kishore. Pancha having died Jugal Kishore brought a suit to recover his money against Pancha's widow Musammatt Kota. When decree was passed, the widow was pregnant and she gave birth to a child, the petitioner before me, a few months later. The decree-holder sought to execute his decree against the widow and obtained an attachment of certain properties. Pancha's brother Sancha for himself and as the guardian of his nephew, the petitioner Batuk Nath, preferred an objection apparently under O. XXI, r. 58 of the C. P. C. and it succeeded.

The decree-holder brought a suit under r. 63, O. XXI of the C. P. C. and this suit was dismissed for default. His appeal was still pending before the District Judge when that learned Officer disposed of the present matter.

Having been unsuccessful in executing his decree against Musammatt Kota, the decree-holder's representative (decree-holder having since died) sought to execute the decree by bringing Batuk Nath on the record as the legal representative of his deceased father. Batuk Nath came forward with a number of objections, only one of which has been so far decided, viz., whether he could be properly brought on the record as the legal representative of the deceased Pancha. The Courts below have agreed that Batuk Nath, if the execution is continued against him, would be entitled to prefer any objection that he may have to the execution of the decree.

The sole question for decision by me is whether the Courts below were right in allowing the execution to proceed against Batuk Nath.

As already mentioned there is no clear authority either way on the point and the matter is not covered by any clear rule of enacted law. The matter is one of first impression.

Mr. Das in his able argument has urged that substitution of Batuk Nath would really mean passing of a decree against the petitioner and that the Court below was not justified in so acting. He relies on the case of Ashi Bhushan Dasi v. Pelaram Mandal (1). In that case a creditor sued an infant on the allegation that he was the adopted son of the deceased debtor. The infant was impleaded under the guardianship of the widow of the deceased. Subsequently it transpired, as the result of another litigation, that the infant had not been adopted by the deceased. The creditor then sought to execute the decree against the widow of the deceased on the ground that she represented the estate and that she had virtually been a party to the suit. The learned Judges repelled the contention and held that a decree against a person who was not the legal representative of the deceased could not be turned into a decree against the widow of the deceased.

The facts of this case are entirely different. Here the suit was brought against (1) 21 Ind. Cas 519; 18 C. W. N. 173, 18 C. L. J. 362.

a person who was then de facto and de jure the legal representative of the deceased debtor. The decree was, therefore, obtained against a person who represented the estate of the deceased. On the birth of Batuk Nath, by operation of law, the estate devolved on him and he became the sole representative of his deceased father. The case is very similar to the illustration given by the learned Counsel for the respondent, viz., where subsequently to the making of a decree against a widow, she takes an adoption and thereby divests herself of her husband's property, the decree is treated as binding on the son unless, of course, he can show that the decree was obtained by collusion or fraud. Again, when an estate is represented by a Hindu widow and she dies and a reversioner comes in, the decree passed against the widow is treated as binding on the reversioner except under circumstances which need not be considered here. The present case is really very similar to the illustration given by Mr. Asthana. On the analogy of the provisions of O. XXII, r. 10 the person who really represents the estate at a particular moment ought to be treated as the legal representative of the deceased debtor.

I am of opinion that the Courts below were right. Before I leave I would like to point out with some emphasis that no other question so far has been decided by the Courts below and it is open to the applicant to put forward any other objection that he may have to the execution of the decree, e. g., a plea of res judicata etc.

The petition in revision is dismissed with costs.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION APPEAL No. 81
OF 1925

Letters Patent (Bom.), cl. 15—Finding that suit is maintainable, whether "judgment"—Appeal, whether lies

A finding that a suit is maintainable and should proceed, even though embodied in a formal decree, is not a "judgment" within the meaning of cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court, and is not, therefore, open to appeal [p. 553, col. 1.]

Per Coyajee, J.—The word "judgment" in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety, and does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character, which merely decides some isolated point, not affecting the merits or result of the entire suit. [p. 553, cols. 1 & 2]

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Mirza.

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad (with him Messrs. Kanga, Advocate-General, B. J. Desai and Mulla), for the Appellant.

Mr. Coltman, (with him Mr. Jayakar), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Macleod, C. J.—The plaintiff filed this suit with a view to get the terms of the consent decree, passed on June 13, 1912, whereby inter alia her maintenance was fixed at Rs 2,000 per every two months, varied, on the ground that circumstances had arisen which justified her asking for an increase. The defendant in his written statement submitted that the suit was not maintainable, that the sum payable to the plaintiff had been fixed by a consent decree and could not be altered without the consent of the defendant.

A preliminary issue was raised in a somewhat unintelligible form, viz., whether the suit was not maintainable as alleged in para. 1 of the written statement. After hearing arguments on that issue, the Judge came to the conclusion that the suit was maintainable, and as the parties were not ready to go on with the hearing, the further hearing of the suit had to be adjourned.

But it appears that on that decision an order was drawn up as follows:—"The suit being this day called on for judgment this Court doth declare that this suit is maintainable."

Against that decision the defendant has filed an appeal. The respondent has taken an objection that no appeal lies as there is no judgment before this Court within the meaning of that word under cl. 15 of the Letters Patent. Whether a decision is a judgment or not is a question which very often arises, and, I have no desire myself to add to the literature which has accumulated thereon. The judgment of Justice of the Peace for Calcutta v. Oriental Gas Company (1) is always referred to. But the attempt made therein to define judgment does not seem to have prevented in each case in which the question has arisen, lengthy arguments being brought forward to show whether the particular decision before the Court was a judgment or not. After considering very carefully what was set forward as a definition of 'judgment' in that case, I prefer myself to consider each decision as it comes before me, and to form my own opinion whether it is a judgment or not for the purpose of deciding whether an appeal lies. For the purposes of this case to my mind the distinction between decisions and orders thereon which stand by themselves, and decisions on a single issue in a suit, is a very real one. It is not desirable on general principles that a suit should be tried piecemeal, and a decision on an issue to the effect that the trial of the suit should proceed can never to my mind amount to a judgment.

If in this case the Judge had decided that the suit was not maintainable and had dismissed the suit, then undoubtedly an appeal would lie against that decision. But in this case the Judge has decided that the suit should proceed. He will then consider the remaining issue in the suit, whether the plaintiff should be granted in the circumstances of the case increased maintenance or not, and when he has decided that question there will be a judgment, against which all the arguments which are now sought to be raised against the decision on this issue can be placed before the Court. We are not shutting out the defendant from any objection which he may eventually be advised to raise against the final decree in the suit. We are merely pointing out that so far nothing has been decided with regard to the rights and liabilities of the parties, there is only a decision that the suit should proceed, and against that decision no appeal lies.

The appeal will be dismissed with costs.

Cross-objections will be dismissed with costs in the sense that they fall with the appeal.

Coyajee, J.—I concur and will add that while it is best not to attempt to define the expression "judgment" as used in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent, a correct guidance on the subject is to be found in the view expressed by Sir Richard Garth, C. J., in Ebrahim v. Fuchhrunnissa Begum (2). His Lordship said (page 534)*: "I think that word 'judgment' means a judgment or decree which decides the case one way or the other in its entirety, and that it does not mean a decision or order of an interlocutory character, which merely decides some isolated point, not affecting the merits or result of the entire suit." In this case what the learned Trial Judge has done is to direct that the trial of the suit should proceed. In the circumstances I agree in holding that it is not a 'judgment' within the meaning of that word in cl. 15 of the Letters Patent.

Messrs. M. B. Kinkhede, R. B., and A. V. Wazalwar, for the Appellant

JUDGMENT.—The main contention urged on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant is that the receipt (P. 1) is not a kabuliyat, as it is held to be by the learned District Judge. It is urged on behalf of the appellant that the lease is not the sole repository of the terms of the agreement between the parties and that there was, in reality, a prior oral lease. I have found it difficult to entertain the suggestion in view of the terms of the receipt. These terms include the following pertinent matters :—

(2) 4 C. 531; 3 C. P. R. 311, N. Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 337

(a) That the lessee has taken a lease of the fields specified for the Fasli years 1334-35.

(b). That the consideration was Rs. 1,200.

(c). That Rs. 30 were paid as earnest-money on the date of execution and that Rs. 300 would be paid on 11th February 1924, Rs. 600 in December 1924 and Rs. 270 in 1924.

The receipt further contained a recital that a formal lease deed would be executed next day, a stamp not being available at the time.

I concur with the learned District Judge in thinking that the present receipt cannot be taken out of the definition of "lease" under s. 2 (7) of the Registration Act on the authority of the decisions in Panchanan Basu v. Chandi Charan Misra (1) and Hemanta Kumari Devi v. Midnapore Zemindari Company (2). So far as the terms of the receipt go, they expressly imply a definite and fixed lease for a specific period. In Kedar Nath v. Shanker Lal (3) what was decided was that a registered kabuliyat executed by the lessee is not sufficient to bestow title upon him and cannot be considered a lease within the meaning of s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act. Here, however, the plaintiff has come to Court, in effect, relying upon this document (P. 1). He alleges that the defendants are in possession of the property and have not paid Rs. 300 due on 11th February 1924. In those circumstances it seems to me that the receipt in question must be considered as an acknowledgment that the lease has been given and, this being so, it would come under "kabuliyat" or "undertaking to cultivate or occupy" within the meaning of definition in s. 2 (7) of the Registration Act. This being so and being unregistered, it is clearly inadmissible in evidence.

So far as the alternative contention urged in appeal is concerned, viz., that the suit might be regarded as one for damages for use and occupation, cf. Sheo Karan

Singh v. Parbhu Narain Singh (4), I find myself in full agreement with the decision of the lower Appellate Court and have nothing to add to its remarks.

The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondents —Execution of decree—Death of judgment-debtor—Legal representative, whether can prove status as agriculturist

Where a judgment-debtor dies after decree but before execution proceedings are completed, it is open to his legal representative to prove that he was an agriculturist and thus claim the benefit of the provisions of the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act

Second appeal from the decision of the Acting District Judge, Belgaum, in Appeal No. 94 of 1923, reversing an order of the Subordinate Judge at Athni, in Darkhast No. 196 of 1918.

Mr. M. V. Bhat, for the Appellant.

Mr. H. B. Gumaste, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a decree was passed in Suit No. 4 of 1917 in the Court of the Second Class Subordinate Judge at Athni against, amongst other persons, one Thalya Mahar. He died soon after the decree was passed on September 27, 1917, and his widow was placed on the record. On June 1, 1918, a darkhast was filed against her. Her husband was not described in the proceeding which was ex parte against him as an agriculturist and the widow died before the darkhast came on for decision. The present applicant is the daughter of Thalya and she applied to be declared as an agriculturist so that she could obtain the privileges of that status in the execution proceedings. The Trial Court ordered the sale of the property and attachment to proceed.

In appeal the Acting District Judge set aside that order and directed the Subordinate Judge to find on the issue as to whether the applicant was or was not an agriculturist, and if it was found that she was an agriculturist to grant the appropriate relief.

If Thalya had survived, in the execution proceedings he would have been allowed to prove his status as an agriculturist under the decision in Rudrappa Sanvirappa Mensinkai v. Chanbasappa Mallappa Bhusad (1). There is no reason, therefore, why the fact that he died before the execution proceedings were completed should prevent his legal representatives from proving that they were agriculturists so as to enable them to obtain the relief provided by the Act. It would have to be proved that the applicant was an agriculturist at the date of the decree, and an enquiry as regards that fact has been directed by the District Judge. We think that order was right and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XLI, r. 25—Appeal—Finding misread—Revision

Where a lower Appellate Court completely misreads the findings of the Trial Court, it acts with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction, and its order is open to revision.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional District Judge, Shahjahanpur, dated the 14th of April 1925.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Applicant.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This revision is pressed on the ground that the Court below has entirely misread the findings submitted to it on a remand under O. XLI, r. 25. An examination of the record shows this to be correct. The issues remitted were:—

(1) Are the plots in suit situated in Mahal Basti Begam?

(2) Did the defendant ever pay rent to the zemindar of Azizganj; and if so on what ground?

The learned District Judge says, "The finding on the first issue is in the affirmative, and on the second is in the negative." In fact the finding on the first issue was in the negative. The learned Munsif found that the land in suit must be held to be in Azizganj. He also found that the zamin-dar of Azizganj had been collecting rent. Through what extraordinary mistake the error crept into the learned Judge's judgment it is difficult now to know. The learned Judge in treating the findings as being the opposite of what they really were acted with material irregularity in the exercise of his jurisdiction. The best course will be to set aside his decree and direct him to re-hear the appeal, and this order I accordingly pass. Costs will abide the result.

Appeal against the decision of Mr. Justice Mirza.

Mr. Kanga, Advocate-General (with him Mr. Pandya,) for the Appellant.

Mr. J. H. Vakeel, (with him Mr. B. J. Desai), for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Maganlal Padamsey filed a Suit No. 1953 of 1920 against one Thommadra Erikalappa. Thommadra filed a written statement and counter-claim not only against Maganlal but against three other persons including Devji Padamsey, the present plaintiff-appellant. Maganlal failed to obey the order made in the suit to file his affidavit of documents, whereupon Thommadra applied for an order that in default of the affidavit the plaintiff's suit should be dismissed, and that he should be held entitled to an ex parte decree on his counter-claim not only against Maganlal but against the other defendants to the counter-claim who were not in default. That order unfortunately was made, but it was obviously a wrong order, which the defendants other than Maganlal to the counter-claim were entitled to treat as a nullity, and all the proceedings under that order, the putting down the suit for an ex parte decree against these defendants to the counter-claim, and the passing of a decree against them ex parte were absolute nullities against these defendants including Devji Padamsey, who has now brought this suit to set aside the ex parte decree passed against him.

The defendant relies on the fact that there was no concealment of the true facts, because, when the case came on for hearing, the Chamber order was put in as Ex. F. and the Judge was entitled to presume that was a proper order passed against all the defendants to the counter-claim. But the defendant to this suit Thommadra cannot now rely upon that order under which he was enabled to obtain a decree against the defendants other than Maganlal, and it would certainly be a fraud on the Court, that he obtained a decree against the present plaintiff Devji Padamsey in such a way. It is clear then that the fraud on the Court lay in obtaining the order against the present plaintiff and his other co-defendants to the counter-claim, which Thommadra must or certainly ought to have known, could not in any way be binding on Devji and his co-defendants. It is unfortunate that Devji was absent when Counsel was instructed on the last day available to ask that the ex parte decree should be set aside. Counsel moved late in the day and the Judge directed that the application should be adjourned and renewed the next day on affidavit. As Devji was still absent, apparently the application could not be renewed, and Devji had to file the present suit. As a matter of fact there was no necessity for an affidavit, the defect in the proceedings was clear on the record. It would certainly be a very extraordinary thing if Devji should be liable on a decree passed against him in such circumstances, without any remedy being open to him to get the decree set aside.

We must allow the appeal and set aside the decree passed against this defendant with costs throughout.

Appeal and revision petition against an order of the District Court, Tinnevely, in I. A. No. 992 of 1923 in O. S. No. 4 of 1905.

Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Appellants.

Mr. K. V. Sesha Aiyangar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The revised decree in this scheme suit as passed on March 16th, 1906 by the learned District Judge of Tinnevely (now Mr. Justice Phillips) provided that the trustee should hold office for a term of 7 years renewable at the Will of the villagers and the Court. New trustees were to hold office upon nomination by the villagers of Tiruvannathapuram and Timmarajapuram, subject to the approval of the District Court. More than twice 7 years had passed, when the matter came up again before the District Judge of Tinnevely in November 1924. At that time, there was a mahazar dated 16th December 1922, signed by several villagers asking the Court to approve of the nomination of Venkatarama Iyer. There was another mahazar dated 15th December 1923, asking the Court to appoint Venkateswara Iyer, the trustee hitherto in office. While that was pending, the present petitioner and appellant Sivan Pillai, who claimed to have an interest in the trust, filed a petition supporting the candidature of Venkatarama Iyer. The District Judge dismissed the petition and from his order this is an appeal or a revision. So far as the records show, the District Judge was in error in stating that the 4th respondent was to be treated as holding office for the third term. He seems to have failed to appreciate that under the scheme, it was necessary to have a nomination by the villagers and an approval by the Court before any trustee could be appointed or his term renewed. The District Judge might have called upon the villagers to make a nomination of the person considered by the villagers to be the most fit to be appointed as a trustee upon the expiry of the term of Venkateswara Iyer, and if the nomination so made by them had his approval, he might have appointed the nominee. It does not appear whether there was any such nomination and confirmation. But the District Judge made an order disposing of the petitions of Venkatarama Iyer and of Sivan Pillai. The petition of the former was that the present trustee should be removed. That request could not be granted by the District Judge upon a petition of this nature. For the removal of a trustee, it would be necessary to bring a separate suit, in the absence of any provision in the scheme for his removal. Upon Sivan Pillai's i. e., the petitioner's petition it is not clear what order the District Judge could have made other than to dismiss it, as it was not competent. The scheme does not provide for independent petitions being put in to support the candidature of various claimants for the office of trustee. As the District Judge has not acted without jurisdiction or committed any material irregularity in his order dismissing the petition, we cannot interfere in revision.

As regards the appeal, there is a preliminary objection that no appeal will lie. In the light of the recent Privy Council decision in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (1) and the decisions of this Court in Lokasikhamani Mudaliar v. Thiagaroya Chettiar (2) and Ranganatha v. Krishnaswami (3) I am of opinion that an appeal will not lie against the order made by a Court, as in this case exercising a power given to it by a provision in the scheme and that such an order is not an order made in execution. In Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Purusa Srrrangacharyulu (4) there is an observation that the order to be made by a District Court, in that case appointing a treasurer in a scheme of management of a devasthanam, should be considered as an order made in execution. But in view of the decision of the Privy Council to which I have referred, I do not think we are bound by that observation which was made with reference to the circumstances of the particular scheme concerned in that case. The appeal and the revision petition are dismissed. As the District Judge's order was somewhat ambiguous, there will be no order as to costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I entirely agree with the order proposed by my learned brother. I will just say a few words only about the preliminary objection. In view of the decision of the Privy Council in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (1), I think it must be held that the order is not subject to appeal under s. 47, C. P. C. In that case it was held by the Privy Council that an order passed by the District Judge affirming or disaffirming the rules made by a Committee of management in pursuance of directions in a scheme settled by it, cannot be made the subject-matter of an appeal under s. 47, C. P. C. The order that is now complained against comes within the scope of that ruling. In this order, the learned District Judge refused to accept the nomination by the villagers of one Venkatarama Iyer in pursuance of a "scheme" settled under s. 92, C. P. C., and treated the present trustee as continuing in the office. Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer who appears for the appellant has sought to distinguish the Privy Council case, on the ground, that what their Lordships stated in that case amounted to this only, namely, that applications with regard to the scheme decree settled in that case should have been made to the Privy Council, as the scheme decree was one finally passed by the Privy Council. I cannot accept this argument. There is no justification for such a contention in the judgment itself. The argument involves the assumption that the Privy Council decree is still not a final and complete decree, that the Privy Council should be considered to have given directions to the District Court to frame rules and to submit the District Court's recommendations and that it is for the Privy Council to pass orders after receiving such recommendations from the District Court. Such an argument was put forward in Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Thirumala Purisa Srirangacharyulu (4) and it is thus met by the learned Judges who overruled the argument: "It is true that their Lordships have statutory authority to make references under s. 17 of the Privy Council Act, 3 and 4 Will. IV, Cap. 41, in which case the referee would have to report to their Lordships, and the case would be adjourned pending the receipt of the report as in Hutchinson v. Gillespie (5) but in the present case it is, we think, clear from the judgment and the order that their Lordships did not intend to make any such reference but disposed of the appeal finally, leaving the directions contained in their judgment to be executed in the usual manner". I think similar observations may be made in this case also with reference to the suggestion made by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer.

This Court has already held in a decision in Lokasikhamani Mudaliar v. Thia-

garoya Chettiar (2) which was followed in Runganatha v. Krishnaswami (3) that directions given effect to under the provisions of the scheme cannot be made the subject-matter of an appeal under s. 47, C. P. C. See also the unreported decision in Vythilinga Mudaliar v. Mahadeva Iyer in Civil Revision Petition No. 645 of 1924. Two decisions, viz., Ponnambala Tambiran v. Sivaganana Desika Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi (6) and Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Purisa Srirangacharyulu (4), have been relied upon by the learned Vakils for the appellant in support of his argument. It may be pointed out that the proceedings referred to in the decision in Ponnambala Tambiran v. Sivaganana Desika Gnana Sambandha Pandara Sannadhi (6) did not relate to any scheme which was settled by the Court under s. 92, C. P. C. and, therefore, that decision is not obviously applicable. As regards Prayaga Doss Jee Varu v. Tirumala Purisa Srirangacharyulu (4) I agree with my learned brother in thinking that after the Privy Council decision in Sevak Jeranchod Bhogilal v. Dakore Temple Committee (1) it cannot be relied upon as an authority to show that the order in this case is appealable under s. 47, C. P. C.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115, O. XXIII, r. 1—Suit dismissed on question of technicality—Appeal—Withdrawal of suit—Revision

Where a suit is dismissed on a question of technicality and on appeal the Appellate Court allows the suit to be withdrawn with liberty to bring a fresh suit, the High Court will not interfere with the order in revision.

An error of judgment is not a ground for interference in revision.

Civil revision from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Farrukhabad, dated the 23rd March 1925.

Mr. N. P. Asthana, for the Applicants.

Mr. M. N. Raina, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—I do not think I should interfere in this case in revision. Certain minors brought a suit for recovery of a certain property on the strength of a deed of gift alleged to have been executed by their mother, who is said to be still alive, in their favour. The deed of gift was a registered document. But the learned Munsif returned it because a marginal witness had not been called to prove it. The executant of the deed was a Muhammadan and the registration was enough to give it validity. The document had been proved otherwise than by the examination of a marginal witness. A further question was whether the father who executed the document on behalf of his wife had an authority. There was a mutation of names in favour of the minors. It was really a question of technicality on which the suit of the plaintiffs failed because the power of attorney had not been filed. In the circumstances, I am not in a position to say that the Judge, in allowing the plaintiffs to withdraw their suit, acted without jurisdiction. He may have committed an error of judgment and even of that I am not quite sure.

The petition is dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

ODDH JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEALS NOS. 2, 4, 7, 3, 5 AND 6 OF 1924.

MUNNEY MIRZA—PLAINTIFF—

RESPONDENT.

Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s. 95—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Arts 115, 120, 132—Decree for arrears of maintenance charged on immoveable property—Decree paid off by one of several judgment-debtors—Charge—Suit to enforce charge—Limitation, commencement of—Interest, whether can be recovered—Charge, whether can be enforced against bona fide purchaser for value—Notice to husband, whether notice to wife.

The provisions of s. 95 of the Transfer of Property Act are not confined to usufructuary mortgages where the mortgagee obtains possession, but the words as to possession are to be read as applying to cases where it is possible from the nature of the mortgage to obtain possession. [p. 560, col. 1.]

Where in order to avoid the sale of certain property charged with the payment of a maintenance allowance, one of the judgment-debtors against whom the decree for arrears of maintenance has been obtained pays off the decree, he obtains a charge on the property in respect of the amount of the shares of the other judgment-debtors which they were liable to pay under the decree. A suit to enforce such a charge is governed by Art 132 of Sch I to the Limitation Act and the period of limitation begins to run from the date of the payment by the plaintiff. So far, however, as a claim to interest on the amount paid by the plaintiff on behalf of the defendants is concerned, the claim would be governed by Art 115 of Sch I to the Limitation Act and not by Art 120 and interest would be recoverable only for three years. [p. 561, col. 1.]

Such a charge cannot, however, be enforced as against an auction-purchaser who has purchased the property in good faith for value without notice. [p. 561, col. 2.]

In India the knowledge of a husband cannot be treated as tantamount to the knowledge of the wife who is a pardanashin lady. [ibid.]

First appeal against the judgment and decree passed by the Additional Sub-Judge, Lucknow, dated 17th September 1923 in Suit No. 259/102 of 1922.

Mr. Anant Prasad Nigam, for the Appellants.

Messrs. M. Wasim and D. K. Seth, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These six appeals are filed from decrees in two suits of contribution Nos. 258 and 259 of 1922. The suits were brought by one Munney Mirza for contribution. Two persons Babban Lal and Mohammad Asghar obtained two decrees for arrears of guzara charged upon immoveable property. Munney Mirza was one of the defendants and paid off the decretal amounts thereby saving the immoveable property from sale. He came to Court on the allegation that such payment gave him a charge on the property to recover proportionately their shares from the other defendants. There were several defendants and a separate decree was desired against every one of them by sale of the property in his possession.

Appeals Nos. 3, 4 and 7 relate to suit No. 258. Appeal No. 2 is filed by two of the defendants Qamar Jahan Begam and Roshan Jahan Begam. Appeal No. 4 is filed by one of the defendants Dwarka Nath, while Appeal No. 7 is filed by the plaintiff Munney Mirza against one of the defendants Abida Begam against whom his suit was dismissed by the Trial Court. Appeals Nos. 5, and 6 are corresponding appeals relating to suit No. 259.

In the appeals by the two ladies and Dwarka Nath the common grounds are (1) that the suit was barred by limitation and (2) that interest on the money due was recoverable only for three years prior to the institution of the suit and not for 6 years prior to that date as has been held by the lower Court.

There is an additional ground in the appeal by the ladies that in Appeal No. 3 there is a miscalculation which resulted in each of the ladies being made to pay Rs. 111-12-3 in excess of what was due from her.

The plea of limitation cannot, in my opinion, be sustained. Section 95 of the Transfer of Property Act lays down that where one of several mortgagors redeems the mortgaged property and obtains possession thereof he has a charge on the share of each of the other co-mortgagors in the property for his proportion of the expense properly incurred in so redeeming and obtaining possession. There is no question that Munney Mirza did redeem the mortgaged property by paying off the decretal amounts in both the decrees. The Privy Council has finally settled that the provisions of this section are not confined to usufructuary mortgages where the mortgagee obtains possession but the words as to possession are to be read as applying to cases where it is possible from the nature of the mortgage to obtain possession [Yakub Ali Khan v. Kishan Lal (1)]. It is interesting to note that the section was so interpreted first of all by a Single Judge of this Court in 1901 [Ghulam Maula Khan v. Banno Khanam (2)]. Subsequently in 1903 this view was adopted by a Bench of the Allahabad High Court in Bhagwan Das v. Har Dei (3). The judgment of their Lordships of the Privy Council was delivered in 1905. In Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukan Saran (4) Mr. Justice Banerji pointed out that even apart from the provisions of s. 95 such a payment by one of the judgment-debtors raises a charge on the property. [Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukan Saran (4).] There can thus be no doubt as to the creation of a charge.

The next question is whether the charge is created from the date of payment or whether the judgment-debtor who makes the payment is subrogated to the rights of the decree-holder and his period of limitation runs from the date of the decree-holder's mortgage. A Bench of the Calcutta High Court has held in favour of the view of subrogation which appears to be supported by observations in Ghose's Law of Mortgage [Raj Kamini Debi v. Mukanda Lal Bandopadhyaya (5)]. The learned commentator deals with the subject at page 397 of the Law of Mortgage Vol. I, 5th Edition. He details the remedies open to the person acquiring the charge and says:—"He may sue simply for reimbursement, if the defendant is personally liable, within the period prescribed for such suits by the Statute of Limitation" (that is, 3 years under Art. 99 of the Limitation Act). "He may also sue to enforce the right of the mortgagee to follow the mortgaged property but in such case he would occupy the same position as the mortgagee, supposing he had not been redeemed, and was the plaintiff in the suit. The period of limitation will not be either longer or shorter."

If this view is adopted the appeal will succeed because the charge in favour of the original decree-holders Babban Lal and Mohammad Asghar arose in 1910.

I am, however, of opinion that the view expressed by the learned commentator is not supported by the authority of Indian cases except the cases in the Calcutta Weekly Notes already referred to. A Bench of this Court held in Makhdam Khan v. Jadr (6) that the period of limitation runs from the date when the redeeming co-mortgagor sets up his adverse title. Here the case was not similar to the one before us because the suit was one for redemption and not for sale. The argument however would apply, first as a redeeming co-mortgagor must redeem within 12 years of the payment by one of the mortgagors, the mortgagor who paid can enforce his charge within that time. In the case of Bhagwan Das v. Har Dei (3) of the Allahabad High Court already referred to it was held that the suit was governed as to limitation by Art. 132 of the Limitation Act. The same was the view of Mr. Justice Banerji in the case of Ibn Hasan v. Brijbhukan Saran (4). In the nature of things there will be no merit in acquiring a charge if the limitation is to run from the date of the mortgage which is

(1) 28 A. 743; A. W. N. (1906) 216.

(2) 4 O. C. 273

(3) 26 A. 227; A. W. N. (1904) 3.

(4) 26 A. 407 at p. 443; A. W. N. (1904) 740; 1 A. L. J. 148.

(5) 57 Ind. Cas. 868; 25 C. W. N. 283.

(6) 9 O. C. 91.

paid off because in most cases the suit on the prior mortgage will be filed about the time when the period of limitation is to end. In such cases the judgment-debtor who saves the property by paying off the entire decretal amount will have no security and will be relegated to a right of a personal decree only. I hold that the period of limitation started to run from the date of the payment of the two decrees by Munney Mirza in 1913 and that, therefore, the present suits instituted in 1922 are within time.

As to question of interest the argument on behalf of the respondent was that there was no Article which provided for it and that, therefore, Art. 120 will apply. The argument on behalf of the appellants was that Art. 115 applied and that interest by way of damages could be recovered only for three years and no more. Article 115 provides limitation for compensation for the breach of any contract expressed or implied not in writing, registered and not herein specially provided for. I am of opinion that the language of this Article will meet the present case. Here compensation is claimed for breach of an implied contract that the co-mortgagor would be recouped for the money paid by him on behalf of the other mortgagors. It is, therefore, not necessary to seek the aid of Art. 120. I hold that interest was recoverable for three years only.

The contention as to miscalculation by the lower Court is correct. In one case the value of the property held by the two ladies is assessed at Rs. 97,000 for the purposes of contribution and in another suit at half that amount. The plaintiff ought to have noticed this conflict in the original decrees obtained by Babban Lal and Mohammad Asghar and arrived at a common basis for valuing the property. It will be bringing a Court of law into ridicule to value the same property for the same year at one figure in one suit and at double that figure in another suit instituted at the same time. The appellant ladies are entitled to reduction as claimed.

I next come to the appeals filed by Munney Mirza against Musammat Abida Begam, Appeals Nos. 7 and 6. The lower Court held that Musammat Abida Begam was bona fide purchaser for value without notice of the charge of Munney Mirza. It, therefore, dismissed Munney Mirza's suit against her. It was argued as a general principle that the charge can be enforced even against bona fide purchasers without notice. Such is not the view adopted by this Court. There is a ruling of a Single Judge of this Court to the contrary effect. The learned Judicial Commissioner, now Mr. Justice Lindsay held in Parbhu Dayal v. Babban Lal (1) that such a charge could not be enforced as against the auction-purchaser who is a bona fide purchaser for value without notice. Rulings were quoted in conflict with this opinion: they are of the Allahabad High Court. One of them Maina v. Bachchi (8) was referred to by the learned Judicial Commissioner in Parbhu Dayal v. Babban Lal (7) and dissented from. There is a subsequent ruling of a Bench of the Allahabad High Court Mahadeo Prasad v. Anandi Lal (9). In that judgment some cases of the Calcutta High Court in agreement with the ruling of this Court are quoted. There is thus conflict of authority between the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts and I see no reason to refer the matter to a Bench of two Judges when a judgment exists for the guidance of this Court delivered by a Judge of acknowledged merit. The next question is whether the lady respondent Musammat Abida Begam had notice of the charge of Munney Mirza. There is some evidence to show that her husband was aware of the charge under which Babban Lal and Mohammad Asghar sued for the recovery of arrears of guzara money. First of all, the knowledge of the husband cannot, specially in India, be treated as tantamount to knowledge of the wife, a pardanashin lady; secondly, knowledge of the charge under the Will of Darogha Wajid Ali falls short of the knowledge which must be imputed to the lady before it can be decided that she had notice of the plaintiff's charge. There is nothing to indicate her knowledge of Munney Mirza having paid the decrees of Babban Lal and Mohammad Asghar. I hold that she was a bona fide purchaser for value without notice.

In the result I dismiss Appeals Nos. 6 and 7 with costs. Appeal No. 3 is decreed to the extent of Rs. 223-8-6 with interest calculated by the lower Court on this amount for six years. It is further decreed for half of the balance of interest because I have held that interest is permitted for three years only and not for six years. The rest of the appeal is dismissed. Parties shall receive and pay costs according to their success and failure. As to Appeals Nos. 2, 4 and 5 they are decreed with respect to half the interest made payable by the lower Court by Kamar Jahan Begam and Roshan Jahan Begam and Dwarka Nath (in Suit No. 258 with respect to the two ladies and in Suits Nos. 258 and 259 with respect to Dwarka Nath). The rest of these appeals are dismissed. Parties shall receive and pay costs according to their success and failure.

(7) 23 Ind. Cas. 867, 1 O. L. J. 43

(8) 28 A. 655; 3 A. L. J. 551; A. W. N. (1906) 165.

(9) 92 Ind. Cas. 348; 22 A. L. J. 887; L. R. 5 A. 749 Civ.; (1925) A. I. R. (A.) 60; 47 A. 90.

VASSUMAL DEUMAL AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 36, O. XII, r. 6—Admission, judgment on—Procedure—Decree, whether must be drawn up.

In order to enable a plaintiff to apply for judgment under the provisions of O. XII, r. 6, C. P. C., it is not necessary that he should relinquish that part of the claim or relief which is not admitted by the defendant. He is entitled to judgment to the extent of the admission made by the defendant [p. 563, col. 1.]

Premasukdas Assaram v. Udairam Gungabux, 44 Ind. Cas. 233, 45 C. 138; 22 C. W. N. 204; 28 C. L. J. 498, and Ellis v. Allen, (1914) 1 Ch. 904 at p. 908, 83 L. J. Ch. 590; 110 L. T. 479, referred to.

United Telephone Co. v. Donohoe, (1886) 31 Ch. D. 399; 55 L. J. Ch. 480; 54 L. T. 34, 34 W. R. 326, distinguished.

On a judgment being passed under O. XII, r. 6, C. P. C., it is not necessary to have a decree drawn up. The plaintiff can in such a case enforce payment in execution proceedings under s. 36, C. P. C. [ibid.]

Application under O. XII, r. 6, C. P. C.

Mr. Isardas Udharan, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Tarachand Khimandas, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff has applied under O. XII, r. 6, C. P. C., for judgment against defendant No. 1 for Rs. 1,131-12 on the admission made by him in his pleading.

The plaintiff's suit is one for recovery of Rs. 1,990-15-0 and interest due thereon being the sum said to have been found due on a settlement of accounts of a dissolved partnership and shown in the potamel which was copied out in the partnership cash book and said to have been signed by the parties. According to the plaintiff's case the cash book is in the possession of the defendants and that both the defendants who were partners in the business are liable to him for payment of the amount found due. The defence of defendant No. 2 is that there was a settlement of partnership accounts by which it was agreed that whatever sum be found due to the plaintiff was to be paid to him by defendant No. 1. The defence of defendant No. 1 on the other hand is that a potamel was drawn and copied out in the cash book but it was neither agreed to nor signed by the parties, that he is not aware if that potamel showed this amount to be due that the cash book is not with him and that if the accounts are to be taken the sum due to the plaintiff would be Rs. 1,131-12-0 which he is ready and willing to pay. From this defence it appears that he has undertaken the liability to the plaintiff for the amount which may be found due or at any rate to pay the amount which he admits to be due. The admission of liability to the extent of Rs. 1,131-12-0 is as clear as it could possibly be. It is, however, contended by the learned Pleader for defendant No. 1 that the plaintiff cannot claim judgment for the amount admitted to be due unless he gives up the balance of his claim and reliance has been placed on the decision in United Telephone Co. v. Donohoe (1). In this case which related to an infringement of a patent the defendant admitted ten instances of the infringement complained of but denied that he had committed others. Thereupon the plaintiffs moved for judgment upon the admissions in the pleadings and the Court of first instance granted the injunction sought against the infringement by the defendant of the plaintiff patent but refused an inquiry as to damages. The Court of Appeal held that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages but limited it to the ten instances of infringement admitted on the ground that the judgment having been obtained upon a motion for judgment upon the pleadings, the plaintiffs were bound to take the negative as well as the affirmative allegations therein. As pointed out by Sanderson, C. J., in Premasukdas Assaram v. Udairam Gungabux (2) the question whether the Judge who in the first instance heard the application would have had jurisdiction to give judgment on the admission and to allow the plaintiffs to proceed to prove the rest of their claim as to the other alleged infringement if such an application had been made was not before the Court and that, therefore, the case of the United Telephone Co. v. Donhoe (1) is no authority for the proposition that the plaintiff can move for judgment only on his relinquishing the rest of his claim or relief.

The very object of this rule is to enable a party to obtain speedy judgment at least to the extent of the relief which according to the admissions of the defendant the plaintiff is indubitably entitled and the rule has been made wide enough to afford relief not only in cases of admissions made in the pleadings but also of admissions made de hors the pleadings. The expression "or otherwise" used in this rule does not mean "or otherwise under O XII", vide the observations of Sargeant, J., in Ellis v. Allen (3) on the interpretation of the corresponding English Rule, O. XXXII, r. 6, Rules of the Supreme Court. To limit the rule to cases where the plaintiff accepts the admission of the defendant as a whole either in respect of the claim as a whole or any distinct and separate part of the claim where such admission is made in respect of such distinct part would be to deprive the rule of its utility and to enable a dishonest defendant to dictate terms to the plaintiff.

On the merits, I have no hesitation in holding that this is a fit case in which I should in the exercise of the discretion vested in me by this rule pass judgment for Rs. 1,131-12-0 against the defendant No. 1 on the admission made by him and reserve liberty to the plaintiff to proceed with the rest of his claim against both or either of the defendants and I order accordingly. I allow the plaintiff costs of one hearing. It is not necessary to have a decree drawn up on this judgment as I consider that it is open to the plaintiff to enforce payment of the amount hereby awarded as an order in execution proceedings by virtue of s. 36, C. P. C.

GOBIND LAL DUTT—APPLICANT

versus

OFFICIAL ASSIGNEE OF CALCUTTA
—RESPONDENT.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), ss 5, 12—Calcutta High Court Rules, Ch XVI, r 27—Appeal filed beyond time—Extension of time—Delay in getting decree drawn up—Application for office copy of decree, effect of

Before an appeal can be filed, the decree or order must be drawn up and the would-be applicant must obtain a copy of the decree or order, which it is his duty to file with the memorandum of appeal [p. 565, col 2]

By reason of r 27, Chap XVI of the Calcutta High Court Rules, if the party in whose favour a decree has been made does not apply to have the decree drawn up within four days from the date of the decree any party to the suit may apply to have the decree drawn up [p. 564, col 2]

It is not sufficient for a person desiring to appeal to put in a requisition for an office copy without taking any steps to have the decree drawn up. This does not afford ground for extension of time under s. 5, Limitation Act, in the case of an appeal filed beyond time on account of delay in obtaining copy of the decree [p. 565, col 1]

Time which need not have elapsed, if the appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order, could not be regarded as 'requisite' time within sub-s. (2) of s. 12 of the Limitation Act [p. 565, col 2]

JUDGMENT.

Sanderson, C. J.—This is an application on behalf of Gobind Lal Dutt, who was the defendant in the suit, that the memorandum of appeal against the judgment and decree in the suit, dated the 6th of June 1924, which was presented on behalf of Govind Lal Dutt on the 18th of November 1924 and which was not accepted by the Registrar, should be admitted.

The material dates are as follows: The decree was made on the 6th of June 1924, as I have already mentioned, in favour of the Official Assignee against the present applicant.

On the 11th of June a requisition for an office copy of the decree was made by the attorney of the applicant Gobind Lal Dutt.

Nothing further was done until the 7th of August 1924 when a requisition for drawing the decree was made on behalf of the plaintiff.

This decree was drawn up, finally settled, and signed on the 16th of November 1924. The stamps necessary for the office copy were furnished on the 12th of November and the memorandum of appeal was presented on the 18th of November; on the 19th it was rejected by the Officiating Deputy Registrar on the following ground:—"As the requisition for drawing up the decree was not given within twenty days from the date of the decree, this memorandum cannot be accepted."

The learned Counsel who appeared for the applicant stated that he was bound to admit that the memorandum was not presented within the time specified by the Limitation Act and that it was necessary for the applicant to obtain extension of time.

The ground upon which he based his application for extension of time was that "before the 11th of June 1924 one Surendra Narain Bhaduri, who is a clerk in the service of the applicant's attorney, was informed by one Benoy Krishna Mukerji—the Court clerk of Messrs. Fox and Mandal, who were the attorneys for the plaintiff—that the requisition had been duly given for drawing up the said decree by the plaintiff's attorneys and that relying on the said information and as the said requisition for the office copy was accepted by the office, he (Surendra Narain Bhaduri) assumed that the requisition for the drawing up of the said decree had been duly given by the said plaintiff's attorneys and that he did not make any further enquiry as to whether such requisition had been actually given."

An affidavit has been filed on behalf of the plaintiff, sworn by Benoy Krishna Mukerji, the clerk in the employ of Messrs. Fox and Mandal, who is referred to in the petition verified by Surendra Narain Bhaduri: and, in para. 5, it is stated as follows:—

"With reference to the allegations made in para. 5 of the affidavit I emphatically deny that before the 11th June 1924 or on any other day I informed the said Surendra Narain Bhaduri or any other person of the office of Mr. J. K. Dutt that requisition had been duly given for drawing up of the said decree by us. I say that the statement is an absolutely unfounded one and has been made to cover up laches. I further say that the said Surendra Narain Bhaduri did not even know my name and on or about the 18th of November, 1924, he asked me what my name was. This I now think was then done with a view to put in my name in the affidavit as his alleged informant."

There is, therefore, a direct conflict of testimony as to whether the information, upon which the applicant relies, was given by Benoy Krishna Mukerji to Surendra Narain Bhaduri.

In my judgment it is impossible for us upon the materials which are now before this Court to hold that that information was in fact given. The result is that this application must be decided upon the basis that the allegation as to the information referred to in Surendra Narain Bhaduri's petition is excluded from consideration.

The question then arises whether there are any other circumstances connected with this application which would justify this Court in holding that the applicant has satisfied the Court that he had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed period as provided by s. 5 of the Limitation Act.

Now, it is well-known that by reason of r. 27, Chap. XVI of the High Court Rules, if the party in whose favour a decree has been made does not apply to have the decree drawn up within four days from the date of the decree, any party to the suit may apply to have the decree drawn up within one month thereafter.

In my judgment, the applicant or his attorney ought to have taken proper steps to ascertain whether an application had been made by the plaintiff to have the decree drawn up.

In this connection I desire to draw attention to the decision of this Court in Kamruddin Hyder v. M. N. Mitter (1) which was given on the 13th August 1924.

In that case reference was made to the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in Pramatha Nath

(1) 89 Ind. Cas. 277; 52 C. 342; (1925) A. I. R. (C.) 735.

Roy v. Lee (2), in which the following passage occurs:—"In their Lordships' opinion, no period can be regarded as requisite under the Act, which need not have elapsed if the appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order."

In this case, as I have already said, it is admitted that neither the applicant nor his attorneys made any application to the Registrar's office to ascertain whether the plaintiff had in fact sent in a requisition to have the decree drawn up.

The applicant's attorney made a requisition to the Court's office on the 11th June (five days after the decree was made) for the purpose of obtaining an office copy of the decree. Neither the attorney nor his clerk made any enquiry at the Court's office as to whether a requisition for drawing the decree had been made by the plaintiff. If such an enquiry had been made, it would have been ascertained that no requisition for drawing the decree had been made by the plaintiff. Such information having been obtained, if the applicant intended to appeal, it would have been his duty to make a requisition for the decree to be drawn up. In my judgment, time elapsed, which need not have elapsed if the applicant had taken reasonable and proper steps to get the order drawn up and to obtain an office copy.

If we were to hold that it was sufficient for the present applicant, desiring to appeal, to put in a requisition for an office copy without taking any steps whatever to have the decree drawn up in the event of the plaintiff not so doing, it seems to me that the provisions of the Limitation Act might be avoided.

I am, therefore, not satisfied that the applicant had sufficient cause for not preferring the appeal within the prescribed time.

For these reasons the application must be dismissed with costs.

Buckland, J.—I agree, and as this matter is being decided with reference to a point upon which, so far as I am at present aware, there has hitherto been no decision I desire to add a few words as to the principle involved.

Before an appeal can be filed, the decree or order must be drawn up and the would-be applicant must obtain a copy of the decree or order, which it is his duty to file with the memorandum of appeal. As stated, it is open to the party in whose favour the decree or order has been made, to furnish a requisition in writing for the order or decree to be drawn up. If he does not do so within four days from the date of the decree or order the other party may do so within one month thereafter. Consequently under the rules of this Court, it is open to a would-be appellant to have the decree or order drawn up.

It has been decided in the case of Pramatha Nath Roy v. Lee (2) by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council affirming the judgment of the learned Chief Justice and Mr Justice Chitty that "time which need not have elapsed if the appellant had taken reasonable and proper steps to obtain a copy of the decree or order could not be regarded as 'requisite' time within sub-s. (2) of s. 12 of the Indian Limitation Act (IX of 1908)." Consequently it is now not open to question that a party who desires to prefer an appeal against a decree or order must apply for a copy of such decree or order within twenty days—the period of limitation for preferring an appeal. The point is whether or not, even though he may have applied for such copy within time, he may be excused if he has not within the prescribed period filed a requisition for the decree or order to be drawn up. In my opinion, the principle applies equally to the filing of the requisition to draw up the decree or order.

The case to which I have referred relates to the copy of the order but it was held there by the learned Chief Justice that if the defendant desired to appeal from the order he should have applied to have the order drawn up and for a copy of the order in accordance with the rules of this Court.

The principle, it appears to me, is incontestably equally applicable to the preparation of the decree or order. There cannot be one principle applicable to the decree or order and another applicable to the copy for which the would-be appellant has to apply. It would be illogical and inconsistent to insist on his applying within twenty days for a copy of a document which it is within his power to have prepared and then to Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, West Tanjore, in A. S. No. 238 of 1920, preferred against that of the Court of the Temporary Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, in O. S. No. 52 of 1919.

Messrs. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer and A. V. Viswanatha Sastry, for the Appellant.

Messrs. V. C. Seshachariar, K. Bashyam Iyengar, M. S. Venkatarama Iyer and P. S. Narayanaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the 1st respondent in A. S. No. 238 of 1920 on the file of the District Court of Tanjore died during the pendency of the proceedings. An application was put in within three months for bringing on record his legal representative, but that application appears to have been dismissed on the ground that batta was not paid, and it now appears that the non-payment was entirely due to the negligence of the appellant's Vakil's clerk. A subsequent application was put in three and a half months after the 1st respondent died, asking for the restoration of the first petition and also for bringing on record a certain lady as the 1st respondent's legal representative. That petition was dismissed on the assumption that in so far as it prayed for the addition of the legal representative it was out of time and also on the ground that there was no sufficient reason for restoring the original petition.

The main question that is now raised in second appeal is whether the Judge was right in considering that the second application was out of time, namely, whether the period prescribed for such an application is six months, or only 90 days. The application is one under Art. 177 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act, and in the Limitation Act of 1908, the period prescribed is six months. In 1920 an amending Act was passed, and the question is whether that amending Act reduced the period of six months to 90 days, or left it at six months. The Allahabad and Lahore High Courts are both of opinion, that the period remains at six months notwithstanding this amending Act, whereas the Calcutta and Bombay High Courts are of the contrary opinion. In the case reported in Gobind Das v. Rup Kishore (1) the matter has been very carefully discussed and it was found that if the words of the amending Act, XXVI of 1920, were applied to the Act of 1908 as originally published in the Gazette of India, the period of limitation under Art. 177 would remain at six months. It appears that the other copies of the Act printed by the Superintendent of Government Printing, Calcutta, are paged differently, and in them against Art. 177 the word "Ditto" appears. The result of the amendment of Art. 176 which reduces the period of limitation to 90 days would have the effect of making Art. 177 read as having reduced the period similarly, namely, to 90 days. The amending Act, therefore, has a different effect if applied to the Original Gazette of India publication or if applied to subsequent publications of Act IX of 1908. Under s. 78 of the Evidence Act, there can be no doubt that the publication in the

Gazette of India is the proper method of proving the Act and if there is a conflict between the two publications, preference will certainly be given to that in the Gazette of India. The later publications do not purport to be published by the authority of the Government of India, but are printed by the Superintendent, Government Printing, India.

There is also another argument used by the Allahabad High Court in Alice Georgina Skinner v. Mukarram Ali Khan (2), and that is that Act XXVI of 1920 makes no specific reference to Art. 177 and consequently it can only be deemed to amend that Article by implication, namely, by altering the period under Art. 176 and retaining the word "Ditto" against Art. 177. This view has not been adopted both by Calcutta and Bombay High Courts on the ground that it was the intention of the Legislature to amend Art. 177. Nothing appears to that effect in the preamble of the amending Act and there is no reference to Art. 177 in the body of the Act. The word "Ditto" opposite to Art. 177 in the Act of 1908 was equivalent to the words "six months" and when that word "Ditto" is allowed to stand without alteration after the amendment of 1920, it is difficult to understand why its meaning should have been changed. Consequently, even if the word "Ditto" were to remain as in the subsequently published copies of the Act, its original meaning would not be changed unless the Legislature had declared its intention to alter it. On all these grounds I respectfully agree with the decisions of the Lahore and Allahabad High Courts. The Bombay case in Husenuddin Nurddin v. Dulakshidas Keshavlal (3), contains only a very brief judgment based on the fact that the amending Act is applicable to the published Acts and not to the Act as printed in the Gazette of India and does not meet the arguments mentioned above. The Calcutta decision is that of a Single Judge who by the reason of the view, he takes is so constrained to reject altogether the Act as published originally in the Gazette of India as being "not an accurate and true version of the Act which the Legislature enacted." When the Evidence Act distinctly lays down that this is the method of proving an Act of the Legislature, I regret that I cannot agree, with the view of the learned Judge that an Act so proved is not an accurate and true version. He goes further to hold that the Act can be proved by a means which is not contemplated in the Evidence Act and that such a proof is preferable to the proof laid down by the Statute. With all respect, I cannot agree in this view. I, therefore, follow the decision of the Lahore and Allahabad High Courts, that the period of limitation under Art. 177 remained at six months even after the amending Act, Act XXVI of 1920. That being so, the learned District Judge was wrong in treating the second petition of the appellant as being out of time. The prayer for the restoration of the first petition was unnecessary. The main prayer was to bring on record a legal representative and the application being within time, the prayer ought to have been granted.

I must, therefore, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and remand the suit to that Court for the hearing of the appeal after bringing on record the 1st respondent's legal representative. Costs will abide the result.

Court-fee on the second appeal will be refunded.

Within thirty days from the date of an auction-sale, the judgment-debtor applied to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale which had resulted in the property being sold for a very small sum. After the expiry of thirty days the judgment-debtor made another application pointing out that two heavy encumbrances had been shown in the sale proclamation whereas no such encumbrances existed on the date of the proclamation. The First Court found that this was a fact and on that ground set aside the sale. On appeal, the lower Appellate Court holding that the First Court was not authorised to look into the matters contained in the later application inasmuch as that application had been made more than thirty days after the sale, set aside the order made by the First Court

Held, (1) that the later application merely supplied additional particulars of the material irregularity alleged in the first application and that the lower Appellate Court, therefore, had jurisdiction to consider the allegations made in the later application; [p 569, col. 1.]

(2) that the refusal of the lower Appellate Court to consider the later application amounted to material irregularity in the exercise of jurisdiction and that the order of the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be set aside in revision [ibid]

Civil revision from an order of the Third Additional Subordinate Judge, Aligarh, dated the 31st of January 1925.

Mr. Hem Chandra Mukerji, for the Applicant.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to revise an order of a Subordinate Judge of Aligarh who on appeal set aside an order of the Munsif setting aside a sale held in execution of a decree.

It appears that a certain property of the judgment-debtor was advertised for sale and a sale actually took place on the 17th of September 1924. The judgment-debtor, who is the petitioner before the Court, on 14th October 1924 took exception to the sale on the ground that there was material irregularity in the publishing and conducting of the sale and that the price fetched was consequently too small. On the 25th of October 1924 the petitioner made an application pointing out that two encumbrances to the total amount of Rs. 5,807, had been shown in the sale proclamation, whereas no such encumbrances actually existed at the date of the advertisement. The Munsif found that this was a fact and on that ground he set aside the sale.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge held that the learned Munsif was not authorised to look into the matters contained in the application of the 25th of October 1924 inasmuch as that application had been made more than thirty days after the sale. He relied on the case of Harbans Lal v. Kundan Lal (1).

There can be no doubt that the learned Subordinate Judge has misread the ruling. All that was laid down there was that when an application is made for setting aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in publishing and conducting a sale and consequent substantial loss it is not open to the judgment-debtor to rely on some other ground for the same purpose. In the case quoted the application of the judgment-debtor to set aside the sale failed on the ground of material irregularity. But the learned Judges in the Courts below did set aside the sale on the ground that there had not been effected an attachment previous to the sale. This Court pointed out that this was a new point entirely beyond the scope of s. 311 of the old C. P. C.

In this case the application was based on the ground of material irregularity and it was only by way of additional particulars that it was pointed out that two heavy encumbrances which did not exist had been notified.

On the merits, therefore, the applicant has a very good case. If the applicant succeeds the case will have to go back to the Court of first instance because the lower Appellate Court has remarked that the auction-purchaser had no opportunity of meeting the allegation that the encumbrances notified did not in fact exist.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji on behalf of the respondent auction-purchaser has taken up the plea that no revision lay and he relies on the Full Bench case of Yad Ram v. Sunder Singh (2). That case is clearly distinguishable from the case before me. In that case the question arose whether a certain party had a right to apply to set aside the sale. The Judge in the Court below followed a ruling of this Court and held that the applicant could not make an application for setting aside a sale. The question was whether in so acting the Court below acted with material irregularity in the exercise of its jurisdiction. It was held that it did not.

In this case, the learned Judge of the Appellate Court had to consider whether the allegation made on the 25th of October 1924 could or could not be taken into consideration in deciding the application made on 14th October 1924. The learned Judge while purporting to follow a ruling of this Court really misread that ruling and refused to consider the application of the 25th of October 1924. If the learned Subordinate Judge had considered the application of the 25th of October 1924 and had come to the conclusion rightly or wrongly that he should not consider the application because the judgment-debtor had no right to apply for an amendment of his previous application I should have held that no revision lay. But the learned Subordinate Judge did not at all consider the application of the 25th of October 1924. He had the jurisdiction to consider the matter and he refused to consider it. In doing so he acted with material irregularity. I hold that a revision does lie.

The result is that I allow the application, set aside the order of the Court below and also the order of the Court of first instance and send back the case to the Court of first instance. The application of the applicant to set aside the sale will be considered after the auction-purchaser, Girdhari Lal, has been given an opportunity to meet the allegations made in the applications dated the 14th of October 1924 and the 25th of October 1924. The learned Munsif would treat the application of the 25th of October 1924 as an application to amend the previous application of the 14th of October 1924 and will decide whether or not he would allow the earlier application to be amended by the addition of the allegations contained in the petition of the 25th of October 1924. Costs in this Court and in the lower Appellate Court will abide the result.

Present:—Mr. Justice Coldstream.

Suit by one partner to recover debt due to firm—
Partners, others, whether necessary parties—Refusal of other partners to join—Procedure

In a suit by one partner in a firm to recover a debt due to the firm, the other partners are necessary parties.

Where in such a suit the other partners refuse to join as plaintiffs, the correct procedure is to join them as defendants.

Petition for revision of an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Ambala, dated the 10th November 1924, affirming that of the Sub-Judge, Fourth Class, Jagadhari, dated the 24th June 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—One Bulli Mal brought a suit against Jhabba and Niranjani Singh to recover Rs. 51-8-0, alleged to have been borrowed by the defendants jointly, with interest thereon amounting to Rs. 77-4-0 and the costs of a notice Re. 0-9-0. Jhabba admitted having borrowed Rs. 50 from the Firm of Bulli Mal-Biru Mal, but pleaded that the debt had been discharged by payment to Biru Mal. Niranjani Singh pleaded that he borrowed only Rs. 25 along with Jhabba and that he had re-paid this sum to Jhabba.

On the pleadings the Subordinate Judge framed a preliminary issue: "Is there a firm known as Biru Mal-Bulli Mal?" The issue was decided in the affirmative and the Subordinate Judge passed an order to the effect that "the plaintiffs should make the necessary amendment of their (sic) plaint in the name of the Firm of Bulli Mal-Biru Mal." The plaint was not amended, but Biru Mal stated in Court that he was not concerned in the transaction. The Court proceeded with the trial and found that the debt had been discharged by payment to Biru Mal. It dismissed the suit on the ground that the suit was bad for misjoinder as Bulli Mal could not sue without joining his brother Biru Mal, and that the debt had been discharged by payment to Biru Mal.

The Senior Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal holding that Bulli Mal could not sue alone, but without going into the question whether the debt had actually been discharged or not. The plaintiff has petitioned this Court for revision and it has been argued before me that the suit could not properly be dismissed merely on the ground that Biru Mal had not been joined as a plaintiff, for Biru Mal had signified that he was not prepared to sue.

I think that the procedure of the Trial Court was wrong. When Biru Mal refused to be joined as a plaintiff the correct procedure would have been to join him as a defendant, for it is clear that, on the finding that he was a partner with his brother in business, he was a necessary party to the proceedings. There was no refusal on the part of the plaintiff to join him either as plaintiff or as defendant.

I accept the petition, set aside the orders of the lower Courts and return the case to the Trial Court with a direction that Biru Mal should be asked whether he is prepared to join as a plaintiff. If he wishes to be joined as a plaintiff he should be so joined, and if he refuses, he should be joined as a defendant, and the case decided according to law. Costs will follow the event.

Guardians and Wards Act (VIII of 1890), s. 41—Minor, death of—Application by person claiming as heir for delivery of property, maintainability of—Dispute as to succession.

Where a minor in respect of whose property a guardian had been appointed under the Guardians and Wards Act dies and there is a dispute or even the likelihood of a dispute relating to the succession to his estate the Court has no powers under s. 41 of the Guardians and Wards Act to determine the succession and thereupon make any orders for granting delivery of possession of the minor's property or for rendering of accounts by the guardian [p. 570, col. 2].

A Court acting under the Guardians and Wards Act is functus officio when the minor dies. Any disputes or rights with regard to the property of the minor should thereafter be litigated in the ordinary Tribunals, though in simple cases where no contest can arise, the Court may have the power under s. 41 of the Act to make simple orders for delivery of property. [p. 571, col. 1.]

Mr. K. S. Jayarama Iyer, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—I am clearly of the opinion that this application is incompetent. The minor for whose person and property, the guardian had been appointed in this matter is now admitted to be dead and the petitioner now before me claims under an assignment from the son of the deceased second respondent and I am told that the second respondent's son had a right so to assign a share in the property, because it is alleged that on the death of the minor, the son of the second respondent became one of the reversionary heirs to the estate. When the application came on for hearing before me last week, I intimated to the learned Vakil for the petitioner, Mr. Jayarama Iyer, that I had my doubts whether such an application would be maintained under the Guardians and Wards Act after the death of the minor. I have now been referred to the case of Nataraja Pillai v. Subbaraya Pillai (1). In that case, Oldfield and Sadasiva Iyer, JJ., held that the words "for any cause" in cl. 3 of s. 41 of the Guardians and Wards Act were wide enough to cover the case of the death of a minor, though such a contingency is not contemplated or provided for in the previous portion of that section. With all respect, I am constrained to state that I very much doubt the correctness of that decision but being a decision of a Bench of this Court I cannot regard it as anything but binding on me. But, for the purpose of this application, it is unnecessary for me finally to hold whether or not the view of the law as set out in that decision is correct. In that case, what the learned Judges said was that the section applied and it was within the discretion of the lower Court to make or to refuse to make an order of the kind referred to therein. Even though the section might apply to cases of the death of a minor, still, I am clear in my mind that the section is applicable only to simple cases where there can be no doubt whatever about the succession to the minor and about the items of property which belong to the minor or the accounts relating to the management of the estate. When, however, there is a dispute relating to succession or the likelihood even of a dispute as to succession, in my judgment, the Court has no powers under the Guardians and Wards Act to seek to determine the succession to a deceased minor and thereupon make any orders for granting delivery of possession of property. Further the prayers in this application are far from being identical with the reliefs asked for apparently in the application with the order on which the learned Judges were dealing in the case in the Madras Weekly Notes. The section clearly speaks merely of orders being passed for the delivery of any property in the possession of the guardian or under his control and also for the delivery of any accounts in his possession or control. The prayers in this present application are for rendering of the accounts. The phrase "rendering of the accounts" means an order against the guardian for an account as in a suit for an account and cannot possibly mean the delivery of account books alone. It is also admitted that O. S. No. 2 of 1924 on the file of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Coimbatore is now pending to determine the succession to the minor's estate. In the face of the admitted fact that the succession to the minor's property is under litigation, or in other words, when the question is pending before another Court of competent jurisdiction for the purpose of determining the person who would be entitled to the property it is impossible to accept the contention that the Court that appointed the guardian of the person and property of the minor would have jurisdiction to make such an order as is asked for.

I am also surprised at prayer No. 2 for the removal of the guardian from the office when, ex concessu, his powers as guardian have ceased under s. 41 of the Guardians and Wards Act and that is the very basis of the contention before me.

The third prayer is still more strange, that the Court should appoint a fit and proper person to be in charge of the estate. I certainly think that a Court acting under this enactment is really functus officio when the minor dies. Any disputes or rights with regard to the property of the minor should be litigated in the ordinary Tribunals of the country. It may be that in simple cases where no contest arises or can arise, the Court having regard to the fact that it appointed a particular person as guardian and entrusted him with the management of the property may make simple orders for the purpose of the delivery of the property. But I do not think even such a provision can be extended to include the determination of doubtful or disputed rights to the property of a deceased minor.

It is not for me to suggest what course the petitioner should adopt. I should have thought that the remedy would have been obvious to any one who looked at the facts and circumstances of the case that the petitioner would have been well-advised to have gone to the Coimbatore Court and applied for the appointment of a Receiver who would have been able either to get such reliefs as might be needed or else to enforce such rights by proper proceedings. I must, therefore, dismiss the present application.

OPPOSITE PARTIES—RESPONDENTS.

Execution of decree—Mortgage-decree—Sale held without compliance with condition precedent, validity of—Auction-purchaser, position of—Sale set aside—Purchase-money, whether can be directed to be re-paid—Inherent power of Court—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 144, 151

Where an auction-sale takes place in the exercise of a jurisdiction vested in a Court, a third party purchaser cannot be bound by the result of any further litigation relating to the decree. Where, however, the terms of a decree itself do not justify a sale of the property, the sale cannot hold good merely because the Court had pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction over the property, even if the auction-purchaser is a bona fide purchaser, in the sense that he is a third party purchaser who had no notice of the facts of the case [p 572, col 2, p 573, col 1].

Where a mortgage-decree lays down a condition precedent which must be complied with before the mortgaged property can be sold, and the property is sold without such compliance, the sale cannot be allowed to stand [p 573, col 1].

Where certain property which has been sold in execution of a decree obtained on a prior mortgage is subsequently sold in execution of a decree obtained on a puisne mortgage and the subsequent sale is set aside at the instance of the purchaser at the previous sale in a proceeding to which the judgment-debtor, the decree-holder, the previous purchaser and the subsequent purchaser are all parties, the Court has inherent power to direct the decree-holder to pay back to the auction-purchaser the amount paid by the latter as the price of the property [ibid].

Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bulandshahr, dated the 24th of November 1924.

Mr. K. C. Mital, for the Appellant.

Messrs. P. L. Banerji and Panna Lal, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by an auction-purchaser in the following circumstances.

One Mahbub Ali Shah was the original owner of a certain share in the property described as  $6\frac{1}{2}$  sihams. He mortgaged four sihams out of the aforesaid share to his wife Sultana Begam as a first mortgagee and then he mortgaged the entire  $6\frac{1}{2}$  sihams to the respondent decree-holder Peary Lal. Sultana Begam obtained a decree for sale and it appears that in her suit Peary Lal was not a party. Sultana Begam's decree was executed and the four sihams share mortgaged was sold and was purchased by the respondents Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati. Peary Lal then brought his own suit. The order that was passed in the decree that followed was that the property mortgaged might be sold, but, if Peary Lal wanted to sell the property purchased by Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati, he must pay them a sum of Rs. 20,000 as a condition precedent to the sale. Peary Lal never paid the sum of Rs. 20,000, but brought to sale a  $2\frac{1}{3}$  sihams share, with the allegation that this was a property which could be sold without previous payment of any money. Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati objected to the sale. They said that the property which was going to be sold was really a part of the property which they had purchased in execution of a decree passed on the prior mortgage.

While this objection of Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati was still undisposed of the share advertised for sale was brought to sale and was purchased by the appellant Atma Ram. The objection was decided in due course on the 9th of December 1922 and it was dismissed. The sale was confirmed on the 12th of December 1922. Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati filed an appeal to this Court against the order dated the 9th of December 1922. It having transpired that the property had in the meantime been sold. Atma Ram, the auction-purchaser, was made a party in appeal. A Division Bench of this Court found on appeal that the judgment of the Subordinate Judge was very unsatisfactory, set it aside and remanded the objection to the Court below for disposal. The Court below had three parties before it, viz, Atma Ram the auction-purchaser, Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati, the objectors and the decree-holder, Peary Lal. It came to the conclusion that the property sought to be sold was really a part of the property which had been purchased by Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati and that, therefore, the property could not be sold in execution of Peary Lal's decree without the payment ordered. It accordingly set aside the sale and ordered that the objectors be put in possession. As regards the purchase money the Court remarked that Atma Ram might recover it by a regular suit.

Atma Ram in his appeal contends that he is a bona fide purchaser for value and the sale could not be set aside. He further contends that if the sale be set aside he should be paid back the price deposited by him in Court and that he should not be relegated for his remedy to a suit.

On the first question raised the learned Counsel for the appellant has cited several cases. They are:—

Rewa Mahton v. Ram Kishen Singh (1), Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (2), Peary Lal v. Hanif-un-nissa Bibi (3), Nazhat ud-Daula Abbas Husain Khan v. Dilband Begam (4) and Shivlal Bhagwan v. Shambhuprasad Parvatishankar (5).

On the strength of these cases it has been argued that a bona fide purchaser at an auction-sale was not to be defeated simply because, later on, it turned out that the decree was not a right one. There can be no doubt that these cases lay down that where there is an executable decree and the Court has the jurisdiction to execute it, a sale, made to a third party, who purchases without notice, would hold good although the decree may be reversed later on in appeal or otherwise. The principle is clear. Where a sale takes place in the exercise of a jurisdiction vested in a Court, a third party purchaser cannot be bound by the result of any further litigation relating to the decree. In my opinion, however, the principle laid down in these cases has no application to the facts of the present case. This was a decree which was not executable at all as against Musammam Parbati and Nanak Chand. As Mr. Seth has rightly put, it is a misnomer to call Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati, judgment-debtors. The decree was virtually a combined decree for redemption and sale. Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati had stepped into the shoes of Musammam Sultana Begam who had not been redeemed. There was a bar, according to the judgment, to the sale of the property purchased by Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati till the mortgage, on which they relied as a shield, had been paid off. The decree was, therefore, a combined decree for redemption and sale. It is wrong to say that the Court was seised of the jurisdiction to execute the decree and could sell the property in the exercise of its jurisdiction. If the decree did not permit of the sale of the property, the mere fact that the Court had pecuniary and territorial jurisdiction would not permit it to go contrary to the terms of the decree and sell the property. In my opinion, the terms of the decree itself did not justify a sale of the property and the sale cannot hold good, even if the appellant be a bona fide purchaser, in the sense that he is a third party purchaser who had no notice of the facts of the case. The result would be that the sale must be set aside.

The second question is whether on the sale being set aside the appellant should be relegated to a suit for recovery of his money or whether the money could be refunded to him under the present proceedings. It seems to me that, in the circumstances that had happened, the Court below was right in making what was virtually an order for restitution, viz, in passing an order that Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati shall be put in possession of their property which had been taken away from them as a result of sale and subsequent delivery of possession to Atma Ram. I have held that the Court had not acquired jurisdiction to sell the property and the sale, therefore, was a void one. The restitution must be complete and the decree-holder, if he has taken away the money, must hand it back to the appellant. If the money still be in deposit in Court the Court will, of course, hand it over to the appellant. I may note that O. XXI, r. 91, has no application to the facts of the present case. A purchaser who may wish to have a sale set aside on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no saleable interest would have only thirty days within which to apply from the sale. In this case the auction-purchaser maintained that the sale should be upheld and it was not till the Court held that the sale was void that his right to refund of the purchase-money arose. He could not, therefore, avail himself of the provisions of the Code. I do not see why the appellant should be relegated to a suit for his remedy when all the three persons concerned are parties to the present proceedings. The matter is only one of procedure and it strikes me that if there be no other rule applicable, the rule enacted in s. 151 of the O. P. C. would be ample justification for ordering a refund of the purchase money in the present proceedings.

Any objection to re-payment of the money that the decree-holder might have, could be urged in the present proceedings and he would not benefit at all by a regular suit being instituted against him. He has not shown any valid cause why he should not refund.

I allow the appeal in part and modify the decree of the Court below. I dismiss the appeal so far as it is aimed against the order of the Court below setting aside the sale and ordering restitution of the property to Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati. I modify the order of the Court below so far as it relegates the appellant for his remedy to a suit. I order the decree-holder Peary Lal to pay back the appellant the entire purchase-money paid by the latter into Court without deducting therefrom any poundage-fee or other costs accessory to a sale. He will also pay interest at 6 per cent per annum from the date of his recovery of the money out of Court. The appellant must have the entire money which he paid into Court and interest.

The appellant must pay the respondent Nanak Chand and Musammam Parbati the costs of the appeal and Peary Lal respondent must pay one-half of the costs incurred by Atma Ram in his appeal. Peary Lal must pay his own costs. The costs in this Court will include Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

APPEAL AGAINST ORDER NO. 438 OF 1924.

September 22, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Devadoss and Mr. Justice Waller.

CHITTAMMAL AND ANOTHER—APPELLANTS
versus

PONNUSAMI NAICKER AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss 4, 56—Official Receiver, powers of—Stranger in possession of property—Insolvent not entitled to present possession—Power of Court to dispose—Remedy—Question of title, decision of—Procedure

The position of the Official Receiver under the Provincial Insolvency Act is the same as that of a Receiver appointed under O XL, C P C [p 574, col. 2].

The Insolvency Court, therefore, cannot, acting under s. 56 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, direct any person to deliver up property in his possession to the Official Receiver unless the insolvent is entitled on the date of such application to the present possession of such property. If a title is set up by the person in possession, it is open to the Court on a proper application being made under s. 4 of the Act to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not [ibid].

Where an order is passed under s. 56 (3) of the Provincial Insolvency Act it does not determine the rights of the parties and though the Judge may incidentally determine the question, yet it cannot be said that the question is finally determined [p. 575, col. 1].

No body other than the Official Receiver can move under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act unless the Official Receiver is unwilling to act and the Court authorises a creditor or any other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate to act under that section in the name of the Official Receiver [ibid].

The power given to an Insolvency Court by s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act is subject to the provisions of the Act, one of which is the proviso to s. 56 (3) which is in the way of the Court removing any person from the possession of property whom the insolvent has no present right to remove. [p. 575, col. 2.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Tinnevely, dated the 4th November 1924, in I. A. No. 265 of 1923, in I. P. No. 17 of 1921.

Mr. K. Bhashyam Iyengar, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. R. Rangasami Iyenger, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—This appeal is against the order of the District Judge of Tinnevely directing the appellants to hand over possession of the property in their possession to the Official Receiver and his lessee. The first respondent herein is the lessee of the property from the second respondent who is the Official Receiver of Tinnevely. The appellants were in occupation of the property in dispute from the year 1897. The respondents applied to the District Judge for an order under s. 56 of the Provincial Insolvency Act directing the appellants to hand over possession of the property in dispute to the respondents on the ground that the property was the property of the insolvent. The learned Judge has passed an order under s. 56 (3) in favour of the respondents. The question for consideration is whether such an order can be passed against persons who claim adversely to the insolvent. Section 56, cl. 3, 2nd paragraph is in these terms:—

“Provided that nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove.” An application under s. 56 is made for the purpose of realisation of the property of the insolvent. If a person is in possession of the property on behalf of the insolvent, or claims under the insolvent, possession of such property may be taken under the orders of the Court by the Official Receiver. But where the person in possession claims adversely to the insolvent, or where he is able to show that the insolvent is not entitled to present possession, the Court has no power to proceed under s. 56, for the second paragraph of cl. 3 specifically says that “nothing in this section shall be deemed to authorise the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom the insolvent has not a present right so to remove.” The corresponding provision in the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act is s. 58; and cl. 2 of that section puts the matter beyond doubt. It is as follows:—

“The Official Assignee shall, in relation to and for the purpose of acquiring or retaining possession of the property of the insolvent, be in the same position as if he were a Receiver of the property appointed under the C. P. C. of 1908, and the Court may, on his application enforce such acquisition or retention accordingly.”

The position of the Official Assignee is, therefore, the same as that of a Receiver appointed under the C. P. C. Order XL, r. 1 (2) is as follows:—

“Nothing in this rule shall authorize the Court to remove from the possession or custody of property any person whom any party to the suit has not a present right so to remove.”

The power of the Court under the Provincial Insolvency Act, s. 56 is not any higher than the power of the High Court under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act s. 53. The Court, therefore, cannot, acting under s. 56, direct any person to deliver up property in his possession to the Official Receiver unless the insolvent is entitled on the date of such application to the possession of such property. If a title, however, flimsy is set up by the person in possession, the Court should not act under s. 56. It is open to the Court on a proper application being made under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act to try the issue whether the insolvent is entitled to the property or not. But in order to enable the Court to do that a proper application ought to be made under s. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, and the other side should be asked to plead thereto.

In this case it is suggested for the respondents that, though the application was made under s. 56, it must be deemed that the enquiry was held under s. 4 and the order was made under that section. But it is clear from the 6th paragraph of the District Judge's order that he passed the order only under s. 56 (3) and we cannot import into it something which is not there. If the application was one under s. 4 the first respondent should not have been made a party. Nobody other than the Official Receiver can move under s. 4, unless the Official Receiver is unwilling to act and the Court authorises a creditor or any other person interested in preserving the insolvent's estate to act under that section in the name of the Official Receiver.

It is again urged that the question of the title of the appellant has been gone into and has been found against and, therefore, it is unnecessary that there should be a fresh proceeding under s. 4. When an order is passed under s. 56 (3) it does not determine the rights of the parties and though the Judge may incidentally determine the question, yet it cannot be said that the question is finally determined. It would not be right to allow a loose procedure to obtain in insolvency proceedings. The law of Insolvency is not properly understood in the moftusal and it would not be right on the part of the Court to adopt a loose procedure for the purpose of realising the estate of the insolvent such a procedure would lead inevitably to hardship and to an unsettled state of the law.

In regard to the merits, it is unnecessary to say much. The appellants were in possession of the property from 1897. They claim to have been in possession of the property by virtue of an arrangement in the family. It is urged by Mr. Bhashyam Iyenger that no registered document is necessary for a family arrangement. If the appellant could show that there was a proper arrangement they would be entitled to retain possession of the property against the insolvent and against the Official Receiver.

On behalf of the respondents it is urged that the first appellant is dead and, therefore, the second appellant, the daughter of the first appellant, has no right to be in possession of the property. This question again will have to be gone into fully and in the absence of an investigation into the title of the second appellant it would not be right to deprive her of the possession of the property and drive her to a suit. If the order is to be construed as an order under s. 4 a suit would be barred; If it is construed as an order under s. 56 (3) the order is illegal inasmuch as the insolvent is not entitled to present possession of the property.

In a recent case it was decided by Spencer, J., and myself that the power given by s. 4 of the Insolvency Act is subject to the provisions of the Act, one of which is the proviso to s. 56 (3) which is in the way of the Court removing any person from the possession of property whom the insolvent has no present right to remove.

The appeal is allowed and the order of the lower Court is set aside with costs throughout.

Waller, J.—I agree that, where there is a dispute as to the insolvent's title, s. 56 cannot be invoked. For, in order that that section may be resorted to, the insolvent must have an immediate right to remove from possession. Proceedings, therefore, should have been taken under s. 4.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 47—Execution of decree—Death of decree-holder—Legal representative, determination of—Procedure—Hindu Law—Separated brother, whether legal representative in presence of widow

When a decree-holder has died and some person appears asking to be allowed to execute the decree as the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder, the Executing Court itself should under s. 47 of the C. P. C. decide who the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder is and should not refer the applicant to separate proceedings.

If the person who claims to be the legal representative of the deceased decree-holder produces a Probate or Letters of Administration or any such general conclusive proof of his status, the Court need not go further and should accept that as conclusive, but if there is no such evidence, the Executing Court itself should make an inquiry and come to a decision.

Where a separated Hindu dies leaving a widow his brother cannot be regarded as his legal representative and cannot be allowed to execute a decree obtained by the deceased.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Assistant Judge, Hyderabad (Sind), dated the 17th December 1923.

Mr. Tahirram Maniram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Srikishendas H. Lulla, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Harumal obtained a decree against one Allah Bachayo. Harumal died and Parumal made an application to execute the decree. The Court of the Sub-Judge of Mirpur Khas did not decide whether Parumal was the legal representative of Harumal but referred him to Court asking him to get a succession certificate. The judgment-debtor was not satisfied with this and appealed to the District Court, Hyderabad, which found that Parumal was not the legal representative of Harumal and found also that inasmuch as Harumal had left widows Parumal could be in no case the legal representative of Harumal and, therefore, dismissed the execution application filed by Parumal as being incompetent with costs. Against that Parumal comes here.

The question dealing as it does with the matter of a legal representative is one which is still left wrapped up in almost total obscurity by the Code. But it would seem that when a decree-holder has died and some person appears asking to be allowed to execute that decree as representing the decree-holder then it is under s. 47 necessary that the Court itself should decide who the legal representative of the deceased person is? It is true that no machinery is laid down by the Code as to how the investigation is to be held nor is it anywhere indicated what the effect of such finding would be if the person that the Court decides to be the legal representative ultimately turns out not to be such. But that is a defect which is found not only in the case of decrees but even in the case of suits. The fact remains that it is the business of the Executing Court itself to decide who the legal representative is. If the claimant who claims to be the legal representative, produces a Probate or a Letter of Administration or any such general conclusive proof of his status then the Court certainly need not go further and should accept that as conclusive. But if there is no such evidence then it is not for the Court to refer to the applicant to separate proceedings, but it must itself make up its mind after such enquiry as may be possible. Therefore, it is clear that the first order of the Sub-Judge of Mirpur Khas was wrong and he should himself have decided whether Parumal was or was not the legal representative of Harumal. Apparently he was of the opinion that Parumal was not the legal representative of Harumal although that is not clearly laid down, but it is on this particular point that the decision of the District Court turns. There it is found that Parumal was separate from Harumal and that Harumal left widows. In such a case it is clear that while those widows exist or until Parumal has been in some way able to obtain some power to act on behalf of the deceased Harumal, Parumal cannot be the legal representative of Harumal and is, therefore, not entitled to proceed with this execution application. It is not, therefore, necessary to discuss as to what are the rights of the brother of a deceased Hindu whether separate or joint in respect of the separate or undivided property of the deceased for that is wholly beside the question. What is wanted is to find out who the legal representative of Harumal is, not who the heir of reversioner is and it seems quite clear on the present evidence before us that Parumal is not the legal representative of Harumal, and, therefore, the order of the District Court dismissing the application to execute Harumal's decree seems correct.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal with costs.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gurgaon, dated the 18th October 1924.

Bakshi Tek Chand, Lalas Anant Ram Khosla and Jagan Nath, for the Appellant.

Mr. Des Raj Sawhny, for Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellants Amin Chand and his nephews Ram Karan and Piare Lal have been convicted of six murders which were committed in the house of one Pahlad, a Bania at Gurgaon, on the night of the 20th 21st May 1924, and have been sentenced to death for each. They have also been sentenced to seven years' imprisonment each for attempting to murder Pahlad's wife Chambeli and her infant daughter Shanti, who is also called Sano. One Dial Das has been similarly convicted and sentenced, but has not appealed, so that his case is before us only under s. 374 of the Cr. P. C. for consideration of the question as to the confirmation of the sentences of death. One Panna Lal was also tried for the offences, but has been acquitted.

Pahlad, who was one of the persons murdered and was a collateral of the appellants, was about 23 years old at the time of his death. He had been left an orphan at the age of two or three, and Bucha Mal, a brother of the appellant, Amin Chand, was appointed his guardian. Bucha Mal and his brother and nephews lived in Gurgaon Sadar, about a mile or a mile and a half from the town, and Pahlad lived with them after his father's death. Bucha Mal managed Pahlad's estate and had him married in 1917. Early in 1922 Bucha Mal was discharged from the guardianship on Pahlad coming of age, but Pahlad and his wife continued living with Bucha Mal and, after Bucha Mal's death in October or November 1922, with his widow Gulab Dei and Ram Karan's son Kundan, whom Bucha Mal had adopted.

On the 1st August 1923 Pahlad entered into an agreement with the appellants to give them a shop in exchange for a plot of land on which he wanted to build a house, and two deeds were drawn up, one executed by Pahlad and the other by the appellants, but the proposed exchange was not carried out and Pahlad built his house on another plot of land adjoining Piare Lal's house, which had been bought for him during his minority by Bucha Mal, and the agreement between Pahlad and the appellants was cancelled on the 6th March 1924. Pahlad began building his house in October or November 1923, and moved into it with his family on the 15th February 1924 when the lower storey had been completed. After they had moved into the house plague broke out at Ballabgarh, where Chambeli's home was, and her sister Ramon (aged 11) and her cousins Khacheru and Shib Charan (aged 9 and 7 respectively) came from there to Gurgaon and stayed with Chambeli. A boy of 14 named Amar Singh, whose father-in-law Zorawar was a collateral of Pahlad, also came to Gurgaon on account of plague breaking out in his village, and he slept sometimes at Pahlad's house and sometimes at Ram Karan's.

For about two months before the murders a Sadhu, named Gobind Das, had come from Jaipur State, and been living at Gurgaon in the house or in the Dharm-sala of Panna Lal. He posed as a physician and as a person possessing occult powers, among which was the power of ensuring that a child to be born to a woman should be a son. For some three weeks before the murders he visited Pahlad's house and treated Chambeli, as she was expecting her confinement and wanted a son. He used to come to the house at 7 or 8 in the evening and recite mantras after dark over an axe and a gandasa which he had with him, and to apply sandhur to Chambeli's forehead. After reciting the mantras he used to leave the axe and the hatchet in the kitchen. He used sometimes also to sleep at the house. Dial Das is said to be Gobind Das' brother or Chela and to have come to Gurgaon a few days before the murders. No mantras were recited by Gobind Das on the night of the 20th May, but Chambeli says that he came during the daytime and asked her for 1½ seers of gold as his reward for treating her and that she promised to give it to him.

It may be noted in cross-examination she said that he wanted to be paid immediately as he had finished the mantras, but in re-examination she altered her statement on that point.

On the night of the 20th May Pahlad, his wife's cousins Khacheru and Shib Charan, and the boy Amar Singh slept in a room in the upper storey of Pahlad's house, and Chambeli, her children Anguri (aged 5) and Shanti (aged 1½ or 2) and her sister Ramon slept on the ground floor in a dalan on the left, i.e., on the western side, of the court-yard. Early the next morning Pahlad, Khacheru, and Shib Charan were found lying murdered in the room in which they had slept, and Amar Singh was found there wounded and unconscious. Anguri and Ramon had also been murdered, the body of the former being found on a bed in the dalan in which they had slept, and that of the latter on the ground in the kitchen, which is on the right side, i.e., the eastern side, of the court-yard. Chambeli was found lying wounded and unconscious in the north-east corner of the court-yard, and her child Shanti was lying near her with a wound on the forehead. There were marks of blood on the northern and eastern walls near which Chambeli was lying. The injuries received by the persons killed and wounded were incised wounds, and had apparently been inflicted with the axe which Gobind Das used to have with him, as it was found lying bloodstained near Ramon's body. The gandasa was not found. Gobind Das had disappeared and he has not been traced.

The Assistant Surgeon, Doctor Chandarbansi, went to Pahlad's house at 5-15 or 5-30 in the morning on hearing of the occurrence, and had Amar Singh and Chambeli and her child Shanti taken to the hospital. Amar Singh died in the hospital without recovering consciousness. The child's wound was not serious, and Cham-beli's life was saved, though she had been very seriously injured. Chambeli recovered consciousness in about twenty-four hours, but for many days after she could not speak, both her jaws having been fractured. She remained in the hospital till the 10th July when she was discharged.

The Sub-Inspector Rahim Bakhsh, who investigated the case, got some of the people of Gurgaon to form a panchayat to try and find out who the murderers were, and on the 25th May in consequence of the opinion given by the members of the panchayat and on account of the rumours which reached him he arrested the three appellants as well as Kundan and Dial Das. Panna Lal was arrested on the 22nd June.

With regard to the motive for murders it is alleged by the prosecution (1) that there was ill-feeling between the appellants and Pahlad, (2) that the appellants had suffered losses and were in urgent need of money, (3) that Pahlad was demanding payment of the money which they owed him and they could not pay, and (4) that Pahlad was a rich man, and that as his reversioners they stood to gain considerably by his death.

With regard to the first point Nathi (P. W. No. 34), who was a partner of Pahlad, mentions a quarrel between Piare Lal and Pahlad about a matter of removing a lime grinding mill from the land which the appellants were to give in exchange for Pahlad's shop, but even if there was this quarrel it does not seem to have been at all serious, for Nathi says that it happened some four months before the murders and that Pahlad and the appellants used to meet one another as relations after it.

The learned Sessions Judge thinks the fact of Pahlad building a house for himself and moving into it before it was complete shows that there must have been quarrels between members of the two families. But it was perfectly natural for Pahlad to want to have a separate house for himself and his family, and when they moved into it the lower storey was complete and there was plenty of accommodation for them. Chambeli, no doubt, says that they moved into the new house because of quarrels between the families, but the quarrels which she speaks of between the women were only ordinary verbal quarrels and she admits that she knows of no dispute between her husband and the appellants except in regard to the proposed exchange of the plot of land for a shop. She also says that even after the quarrels the appellants and the women of their family used still to pay visits to Pahlad's house. That Pahlad and his family continued to be on friendly terms with the appellants is indeed shown by the fact, admitted by Chambeli, that when the lower storey of her husband's new house was completed, he gave a feast as a house warming which the appellants attended.

We are unable to agree with the Sessions Judge that the cancellation of the agreement for exchanging a shop belonging to Pahlad with land belonging to the appellants caused ill-feelings. He says that the shop must have been worth much more than the land, but this is a pure assumption not warranted by any evidence. Nor is there anything to justify his view that the conditions in the agreement in regard to the house which Pahlad had intended building on the land which he was to get were onerous, and that a hard bargain must have been driven with Pahlad. The conditions appear to us to have been quite natural and reasonable. Afterwards when Pahlad changed his mind and decided to build on the land which had been bought for him by Bucha Mal the appellants consented to cancel the agreement. That they cancelled it of their own free-will was expressly stated by them in the endorsement to which they appended their signatures on the deed, Ex. P, executed by Pahlad. An endorsement in similar terms was written on the counter-part P-Q which had been executed by the appellants, and this was signed by Pahlad. There is no evidence whatever to show that any pressure was brought to bear on the appellants in the matter of the cancellation of the agreement.

The prosecution has made a point of the fact of Pahlad having applied on the 19th March 1924 for a gun license, but there is no evidence to show that it was through fear of the appellants that he asked for the license. The application was rejected on the 2nd April, and no steps appear to have been taken by Pahlad for obtaining protection for himself against the appellants, nor did he present any petition or complaint against them.

The Sessions Judge has referred to the fact that Piare Lal's two sons died of small-pox a few days before the murders and that Pahlad went on with the building of the northern wall of his house, which adjoined Piare Lal's house, during their illness and after the death of the eldest son. He infers from this that the relations between Pahlad and Piare Lal were strained, but the further fact which he mentions that Pahlad stopped the building on the 18th May as soon as Piare Lal asked him to do so shows that such an inference is not justified.

He also says that there is no evidence to show that Pahlad went to condole with Piare Lal when his sons died or that he attended the funeral ceremonies, but the simple reply to this is that there is also no evidence to show the contrary.

We are of opinion, therefore, that the prosecution has failed to prove that the appellants bore any ill-will towards Pahlad.

Coming next to the matter of the appellants' financial position, we note in the first place that the Sessions Judge has made a mistake in thinking that the income tax paid by them shows that their annual income was only about Rs. 5,000. He has apparently confused the tax which they paid with that which was paid by Pahlad. The income-tax paid by the appellants' firm at Gurgaon and their branch firm at Pachparwa amounts to Rs. 691-12 and this would represent an annual income of about Rs. 22,000.

In the second place the learned Judge is wrong in thinking that it has been shown that the appellants' firms were not doing well and were in urgent need of money. He is impressed by the fact that large sums had been sent by the appellants' head firm at Gurgaon—Sil Chand-Shasi Ram, to the branch firms and had not been re-paid. But these sums were sent in the ordinary way to the branch firms for investment in the businesses, and the fact that they remained invested in these firms and were not sent back does not in the least show that the money was lost or that the firms were in a shaky condition. It is in no way shown that the firms had been incurring losses and that the appellants needed money urgently on that account. On the contrary the persons in charge of the various firms have been examined and have produced the accounts and the chithas prepared from them, while the chithas prepared from the Gurgaon firm's books of which the Police had taken possession, have also been produced, and all this evidence goes to show that the firms are prospering and have no bad debts.

A rough idea of the extent of the appellants' business is given by Ram Singh, (P. W. No. 25) who says that the Gurgaon firm has dealings to the extent of about half a lakh, and that the branch firms have dealings to the extent of about two or two-and-a-half lakhs.

Only two debts are shown to have been due from the appellants. One was Rs. 12,000, which they had borrowed from Kanhiya (P. W. No. 28) in January 1924. He took no receipt or writing of any kind from the appellants when he advanced the money, a fact which shows the good credit which they enjoyed, and he made no demand for payment. He has explained that the loan was taken in the ordinary course of business as the appellants dealt in grain and used to take advances when they were buying grain and to re-pay them, when it was sold. The other debt was one of Rs. 7,000 borrowed from Pahlad in January 1922. For this loan also no writing had been taken, and it is not stated by Chambeli or Pahlad's partner, Nathi (P. W. No. 34), or any other prosecution witness that Pahlad had asked the appellants to re-pay him. Kundan (D. W. No. 8), the son of Ram Karan and the adopted son of Bucha Mal, says that Pahlad had asked for the return of his money about 3 or 4 months before the murders, but also says that Pahlad subsequently said that he did not want the money then and would take it later. Even if Pahlad was wanting to be re-paid the appellants could have raised the money without any difficulty either by selling some of the grain of which they had large stocks, or by utilising part of their cash balances, or by borrowing. There is lastly the theory that the appellants thought that they would gain substantially by exterminating Pahlad and his family. Their share by inheritance in the property left by Pahlad would be  $\frac{1}{8}$ th, or if Kundan's share is included  $\frac{3}{16}$ th, and we are not impressed by the view taken by the Sessions Judge that they might have believed that their share would be greater. In coming to a conclusion as to the amount of Pahlad's property he has relied on a chitha in Pahlad's books in which Pahlad's assets are shown as of a total value of Rs. 74,546, but this chitha (No. 1 on page 6 of Paper-Book B) is undated while there is another one (No. II on page 7), bearing a date corresponding to the 5th December 1923, according to which the assets were of the value of Rs. 42,239. Chitha No. I must apparently relate to an earlier period as it contains an entry of Government promissory notes, which are not mentioned in chitha No. II and had, therefore, presumably been sold before chitha No. II was written. There is no mention of any cash in chitha No. II, nor is there any proof that Pahlad had any cash in his house or shop at the time when he was murdered. The learned Judge appears to have over-estimated the value of the property which would come to the appellants as their share in the inheritance. Moreover, a long period was bound to elapse before they could obtain their share, as the property would have first to be partitioned. The theory that in such circumstances the appellants planned the murders of Pahlad and all his family, to whom they bore no ill-will, and without the prospect of gaining any immediate advantage appears to us to be wildly improbable. It is particularly improbable that Piare Lal would have taken part in these crimes just after he had lost two of his sons, of whom one died on the 16th and the other on the 19th May.

No adequate motive has, in our opinion, been established for the appellants to commit the crimes of which they have been convicted.

We come now to the evidence as to the commission of these crimes. This consists of the statements of two witnesses, viz, Pahlad's widow, Chambeli and one Hardwari, who is the son of a sister of Bucha Mal's widow Gulab Dei and had been living in Gurgaon for about two months. Hardwari's story is briefly this:—He slept sometimes at Kundan's house and sometimes at Pahlad's. On the night of the murders he had gone to Pahlad's house to have a talk, and while he was there Gulab Dei called out to him to bring his razai and come and sleep at Kundan's house. He intended doing so, but Amar Singh persuaded him to stay at Pahlad's house, so he slept there in the same room as Pahlad and the boys. In the middle of the night he was roused by hearing Pahlad cry out, and saw him standing up and Panna Lal and Dial Das holding him by the arms, while Ram Karan and another man stood by. He also saw Gobind Das with an axe in his hand, and saw him strike Pahlad on his face. Hardwari says he lay down and hid his face in the razai, and then heard cries and sounds of blows. After a little while he raised his head and looked round and saw nobody in the room except Pahlad, Khacheru, Shib Charan, and Amar Singh, who were lying there. The place was covered with blood. He went downstairs into the court-yard, and as he was going down heard some body call out that a man was running away and then heard a voice reply "Let him go as it is probably Hardwari." He unchained the door, left the house, and went to Kundan's house, where he went to sleep. The Sessions Judge has discussed Hardwari's statement and held it to be unreliable, and we cannot agree with Mr. Sawhny's contention that the statement ought to have been believed. Without going into details we think that there are at least three strong reasons for rejecting Hardwari's statement. Firstly it is highly improbable that the murderer or murderers, who showed an intention to kill everybody in the house, would have allowed Hardwari to escape. Secondly, it is incredible that Hardwari would not have raised an outcry and that he would have gone quietly back to Kundan's house and gone to sleep without saying a word of what had occurred to any one. Thirdly, it is admitted that for nearly a month Hardwari, though repeatedly questioned about the murders, persisted in denying all knowledge of them and in denying that he had slept at Pahlad's house on the night on which they were committed. It was not till the 18th June that he told his story about having witnessed the murder of Pahlad, and that was after being confronted with Chambeli, who had on the previous day made a statement in which she mentioned Hardwari's presence on the night of the murders. That statement put Hardwari into a very awkward position, for if he continued to deny having slept at Pahlad's house and seen the murders, he ran the risk of being prosecuted himself. He had to give evidence about the murders for his own safety. It is obviously impossible in such circumstances to believe his evidence.

It remains to consider the evidence of Chambeli, on which the convictions of the appellants are based. Her statements were recorded on three different occasions before she made her statement to the Committing Magistrate. Her statement was recorded for the first time on the 4th June by Sub-Inspector Rahim Bakhsh. She was then not capable of making more than an extremely brief statement, in which she said merely who the murderers were and who had been present upstairs, and gave no account of what had happened. She was questioned by the Superintendent of Police on the 11th June, but no statement was then recorded. Her condition from that time was steadily improving, but it was not till the 17th June that she made a detailed statement, which was recorded by the Deputy Commissioner. Another detailed statement was recorded after that, viz, on the 24-25th June, by the Sub-Inspector. It is necessary to point out here a grave error into which the lower Court has fallen. The statements made by Chambeli to the Sub-Inspector of Police are relevant only for the purpose of contradicting her present testimony, and the statements made to the Deputy Commissioner and to the Committing Magistrate only for the purpose of contradicting or corroborating that testimony (no order, it may be noted, having been passed for the deposition before the Committing Magistrate to be admitted as evidence under s. 283 of the Cr. P. C.). But the Sessions Judge has treated all those statements as though they were substantive evidence like the statement made by the witness at the trial, and one consequence of this error has been that Dial Das has been convicted although there is no evidence against him other than the statement of Hardwari which the learned Judge himself has rejected. Chambeli in her evidence at the trial has not mentioned Dial Das as having taken part in the murders or as having been present when they were committed, and it is apparently only on account of her having incriminated him in two of her former statements that he has been convicted.

She, her children, and Ramon slept in the dalan, she herself and the child Shanti on one bed, and Anguri and Ramon on another. Her husband Pahlad was out when they went to bed, but he returned at about 9 or 10, and his wife unchained the outer door for him and he went upstairs. Shortly after midnight Chambeli was awakened by hearing her husband call out "mar gera." She could not see him or the other persons who were upstairs from where she was. She immediately went upstairs. There is a balcony upstairs which runs all round court-yard, and she went along the southern balcony past a rasoi to the door of the room in which her husband and the boys were sleeping, and there she saw her husband sitting in the room on the floor bleeding from an injury on the back of the neck. Gobind Das, whom Chambeli calls the Babaji, was standing by him and he struck him on the side of the neck with gandasa or an axe that he had in his hand. Chambeli looked round and then noticed Panna Lal standing on the balcony near a barred window of the rasoi and the three appellants standing on the western balcony in front of the room that is over the dalan in which she had been sleeping. She reproached Panna Lal and then either fell or was pushed from the balcony into the court-yard below. Soon after she had fallen and while she was still conscious the Babaji came down and struck her with the weapon he had, and, she then lost consciousness. In cross-examination, however, she altered this part of the story and said that she lost consciousness on seeing her husband bleeding and fell from the balcony, and then regained consciousness and sat up and moved a foot or two away from the place where she had fallen, and that then the Babaji came down and struck her and she again lost consciousness.

Now there are glaring inconsistencies between this statement and her previous statements. Even the extremely brief statement which she made on the 4th June to the Sub-Inspector was inconsistent with the statement subsequently made at the trial in that it mentioned the Babaji's chela as one of the murderers besides the Babaji himself.

In the statement which she made to the Deputy Commissioner on the 17th June she said that on hearing her husband's cry she sat up in bed and called out to him. There was the sound of beating upstairs and she could see the Babaji standing with a gandasa in his hand. She sat still for fear of being killed. About an hour after the appellants and Panna Lal came on to the roof, and she then went upstairs and found her husband lying dead. She lost consciousness and fell down into the court-yard. Then, changing her statement on this point, she said she became senseless after she had fallen and that she did not know who struck her. The inconsistencies between this statement and the one made at the trial are patent.

A different story again was related by her to the Sub-Inspector on the 25th June, when she said that on her husband crying out she went upstairs and saw the Babaji and his chela striking her husband, and the appellants and Panna Lal standing outside on the balcony. She reproached Panna Lal and then went downstairs. She went upstairs again and found her husband lying dead, but none of the other men there. She then fell down from the balcony and became unconscious.

We think it is impossible to place any reliance on the statement made by Chambeli at the trial when it is in such hopeless conflict with her previous statements. The Sessions Judge has recognised the glaring contradictions in her statements and he thinks that they are accounted for by the serious injuries which she had received, but we cannot agree with him. We grant the possibility of her memory being at first affected by the injuries and of the facts coming back to her mind gradually, but though the injuries might thus account for an event being omitted in one statement and mentioned in a later one they in no way explain contradictions in the statements.

Then the learned Judge says that there was no reason for Chambeli to name innocent persons as murderers. But in the first place it is clear from the evidence that while she was in the hospital various persons came to see her or were put in charge of her, so that it is not impossible that she may have been tutored, and her readiness to act on any hint that might have been conveyed to her in regard to the murderers is shown from her conduct on the 27th June at a parade which was held in the jail for the identification of Dial Das. The note P. G. written by Mr. Gurmukh Singh Mongia, the Magistrate who conducted the identification, shows what happened. Chambeli completely failed to identify Dial Das as she picked out three other men, one after another, who were totally unlike Dial Das in appearance. The Magistrate then sat down to write his note with his back slightly towards Chambeli and some people began asking why she had not been able to identify the man. She then said, while the Magistrate was writing, that she could now identify the man and she pointed out Dial Das. In the second place, even if Chambeli was not actually tutored, she probably heard while she was in hospital that the appellants were suspected of being concerned in the murders and had been arrested; and she may have thus become impressed with the belief that they were guilty and have implicated them on that account. It is noteworthy that she has improved her story in regard to the appellant's complicity in the murders, for, while according to her statement of the 17th June they appeared on the scene long after her husband's murder, in her evidence in Court she makes out that they were standing on the balcony while her husband was being murdered in the room.

The Sessions Judge thinks that Chambeli would not have invented the story of falling from the balcony into the court-yard when she could have said that she came down the stairs. But the explanation that suggests itself is that she had to invent the story in order to account for her being found lying wounded and unconscious in the court yard. According to the story told in the first detailed statement that she made, viz, the statement of the 17th June, she went upstairs long after her husband had been murdered, and the Babaji was not there when she got upstairs. At all events she made no mention of his being present there at the time and if she had mentioned his presence she would have been faced with the difficulty of accounting for his not killing her on the spot when he was no longer occupied with killing her husband or the other persons who were in the room with him. The Babaji not being there she could not say that he ran after her down the stairs and struck her down in the court-yard, and she was, therefore, driven to the necessity of saying that she fell from the balcony into the court-yard and lost consciousness. In her statement of the 25th June she changed her story and said that when she got upstairs she saw her husband being murdered, and that she then came down the stairs. But she had to bring in the story of the fall which she had told to the Deputy Commissioner on the 17th June, and in order to do this she was obliged to say that she went upstairs a second time. At the trial, however, she denied having gone upstairs more than once and made out that she lost consciousness on seeing her husband murdered and fell down from the balcony. It is important to note in this connection the discrepancies in her statements as to whether she lost consciousness before or after the fall from the balcony, and also a further contradiction to be found in her statement before the Committing Magistrate according to which she threw herself down from the balcony in despair.

The Sessions Judge has referred to the fact that Chambeli had a contusion on one of her knees, but that could have been caused by her falling on the ground when her assailant struck her in the court-yard.

Apart from the discrepancies in Chambeli's statement the story that she fainted and fell from the balcony into the court-yard is improbable for other reasons. One is that if she had had such a fall, the balcony being more than 12 feet above the court-yard, she would probably have had a miscarriage as she was more than six months pregnant. Another is that the story of her falling from the southern balcony does not explain how she came to be found in the morning lying unconscious, not near the southern wall of the court-yard but in the north-eastern corner about 2½ feet from the north and east walls. She says in cross-examination in her evidence at the trial that after the fall she regained consciousness and moved away a foot or two, but this is an improvement on what she had said before, and besides she does not say that she moved right into the far corner of the court-yard, which, it may be noted, is 15 feet square.

Then it seems hardly credible that Chambeli could have reached the room where her husband was in time for her to see what she says she saw. Her husband had received at least one blow when she was awakened by his cry, and she had to cross the court-yard, go up the stairs, and then go some way along the southern balcony to get to the room. One would naturally suppose that by that time Pahlad would have been despatched, and yet according to Chambeli he had received only the wound at the back of the neck and was sitting when she arrived.

There is another important point also. Chambeli does not say that she took the child Shanti upstairs with her, and naturally she would not have done so. Besides, if she had had the child with her when she fell from the balcony, the child would have been injured by the fall, whereas she had no injury except the wound inflicted by her mother's assailant. The child would, therefore, have been left lying on the bed in the dalan, yet in the morning she was found lying wounded beside her mother in the court-yard. No explanation of this is forthcoming on the prosecution theory. All the facts are, on the other hand, explained by the defence theory, which is that the murderer entered the dalan while Chambeli and the children were there, and first attacked and murdered Anguri, that meanwhile Chambeli picked up Shanti and ran out along with Ramon into the court-yard, that the murderer pursued them, struck down Chambeli in the corner of the court-yard, and wounded her and Shanti and then went into the kitchen where Ramon had taken refuge, and killed her and threw the axe down beside her.

Further it appears to be highly improbable that the appellants would have been present on the balcony at the time when the murders were being committed. If, as is alleged by the prosecution, they had hired Gobind Das to murder Pahlad and his family they would have surely taken care not to appear on the scene at all.

It is argued for the prosecution that as the outer door of Pahlad's house was chained Gobind Das must have been introduced into the house by Piare Lal from the roof of Piare Lal's house. But the argument is based on the assumption that Gobind Das had not been sleeping in Pahlad's house on the night of the murders. Although Chambeli professes to have no recollection of the Babaji having come to the house and slept there she admitted before the Committing Magistrate that he had slept there that night on the roof of the upper storey.

We need not discuss the question of the possible motive for the crimes, but we may observe that it is by no means necessary that the murderer must have been, as contended by the learned Public Prosecutor, hired by other persons to commit them.

Our conclusion for the reasons given above is that the evidence of Chambeli is, like that of Hardwari, absolutely untrustworthy and that there are the strongest reasons for disbelieving her story, and for believing that she did not go upstairs or see what happened upstairs, but that she remained downstairs in the dalan until the murderer came there. There is no other evidence to support the case for the prosecution.

We, accordingly, accept the appeals of Ram Karan, Amin Chand and Piare Lal, set aside all the convictions and sentences and acquit them, both of the offences under ss. 302-149 and of those under ss. 307-149 of the Indian Penal Code. Also under s. 376 of the Cr. P. C., we set aside the convictions of Dial Das for the offences under ss. 302-149 of the Indian Penal Code, and the sentences of death passed on him and acquit him of those offences. Further, acting under the provisions of s. 439 of the Cr. P. C., we set aside the conviction of, and the sentences passed on, Dial Das for the offences under ss. 307-149 of the Indian Penal Code, and acquit him of those offences.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 472 OF 1925.

August 6, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Kanhaiya Lal.

KHAMANI AND OTHERS—ACCUSED—

APPLICANTS

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 500—Defamation—Degradation in caste—Privilege.

A statement by the accused to certain members of the caste that the complainant had become a sweeper by reason of his having shaken hands and associated with sweepers, is defamatory and is not privileged where it does not represent the decision formally arrived at by a panchayat held to consider the matter.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Bareilly, dated the 25th July 1925.

Mr. S. C. Das, for the Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—The applicants have been convicted of an offence under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 51 each or in default simple imprisonment for four months. It appears that there was a procession taken out at Bareilly in November last in which various classes of people including some sweepers had joined. One of the persons who joined the procession was Mangli Prasad who belonged to the Bhurji caste. The three petitioners have been found to have told different persons of the same caste that if they associated with Mangli Prasad they would refuse to smoke or drink with them as Mangli Prasad had become a sweeper, by reason of his having shaken hands and associated with sweepers in that procession. It is argued here that the Trial Court had no jurisdiction, and that the three accused ought not to have been jointly tried, but none of these points were taken in the Courts below. If there were any substance in these objections, they would, undoubtedly, have been urged in the Courts below. It is also stated that the statements made were not per se defamatory, and that they were made in good faith and were privileged. The imputation made clearly suggested that Mangli Prasad was not fit to be associated with by reason of his having joined that procession or shaken hands with the sweepers. It cannot, however, be said that if he had done so, he had thereby become a sweeper, and the effect of the imputation must, undoubtedly, have been to lower his position or character in the estimation of his caste fellows. The imputation would have been privileged, if a panchayat of the caste had been held to discuss the matter, and the decision arrived at the panchayat communicated to the persons interested therein, but it has been found that there was no panchayat held to consider the matter, and no decision formally arrived at which would give it the protection claimed. One of the witnesses deposes that all the three accused joined together in warning him that if he associated with Mangli Prasad they would refuse to smoke or drink with him, as Mangli Prasad had become a sweeper. A joint trial under these circumstances is not open to any objection. The application is rejected.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 449 OF 1925.

November 13, 30, 1925.

Present :—Mr. Justice Sulaiman.

INDAR SINGH—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Penal Code (XLV of 1860), s 403—Criminal misappropriation—Repudiation of trust—Sapurdar of attached property—Failure to deliver property—Covenant for delivery of price—Civil liability

Section 403, Penal Code, is in no way restricted to appropriating property to one's own use. If a trustee repudiates the trust and asserts that he now holds the property on behalf of a person other than the one who entrusted him with it, he has misappropriated the property just as much he would have been said to misappropriate it if he had been putting forward his own claim to it. [p. 586, col. 1.]

When a Receiver attaches property and entrusts it to some person he does not purport to sell it to him or dispose of it at that time. The Receiver may not even be in a position to know its true value. The intention of the parties is that the articles should be returned in specie or produced at the time when the auction sale is to take place. The covenant in the sapurdnama, that the person entrusted with the property would be liable to pay a certain amount in case he fails to deliver the property, is more by way of security than because the property is transferred to him with liberty to dispose of or withhold it. In such cases it is the true intention of the parties which must be taken into account. Therefore, if the property is not produced the sapurdar is guilty of criminal misappropriation. It is not a case of mere civil liability [p. 586, col. 2.]

The mere fact that there is a civil liability does not necessarily absolve one from criminal liability [ibid].

Criminal revision from an order of the Additional Sessions Judge, Moradabad, dated the 21st July 1925.

Mr M N. Rana, for the Applicant

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown

JUDGMENT.—(November 13, 1925).—

This is a criminal revision from a conviction of the accused under s 406 of the Indian Penal Code. The facts are as follows :—One Harbans was declared an insolvent and Lala Ram was appointed Receiver of his estate in January 1925. The Receiver attached certain heads of cattle belonging to the insolvent and made them over to the applicant after taking a sapurdnama from him. The Receiver first fixed the 13th February for sale and three days earlier he sent a notice to the applicant to produce the cattle at the place where the auction was to take place, but the notice was returned unserved and no auction took place. On this the Receiver fixed another date for sale and sent a fresh notice to the applicant but even on that date the cattle were not produced, nor did the applicant turn up. Subsequently the Receiver received a notice from the applicant to the effect that the cattle attached by the Receiver did not belong to the insolvent but belonged to his brother who had filed an objection in the Execution Court and that the Receiver had no right to attach them. The Receiver replied that the applicant was bound to produce the cattle and he had no right to stop their production even if the insolvent's brother had filed an objection. To this the applicant replied that sapurdnama was not binding on him and that he in fact filed a complaint under s. 420 of the Indian Penal Code in respect of it. On such reply being received the Receiver with the permission of the Additional District Judge filed a complaint out of which this revision has arisen.

The complaint filed by the accused under s. 420 was dismissed summarily and he has not had that order revised. At the trial of the present case the accused denied that any cattle of Harbans had in fact been attached or handed over to him and he even denied a proper execution of the sapurdnama. The Courts below, however, have found these questions of fact against the applicant. I must, therefore, assume that the heads of cattle had actually been attached by the Receiver and made over to the applicant, who executed a sapurdnama in respect of them.

The learned Vakil for the applicant has argued, firstly, that no offence under s. 406 was committed as there has been no misappropriation, and secondly that in view of a clause in the sapurdnama for the payment of the price of the cattle there was no criminal misappropriation.

The applicant has not put the cattle to his own use nor has he disposed of them dishonestly. What has happened is that he is holding them still as trustee, but he is denying that he is holding them on behalf of the Receiver from whom he had taken them. He now asserts that the cattle belong to another person on whose behalf he holds them. Misappropriation has not been expressly defined in the Indian Penal Code. The illustrations to s. 403 all relate to cases where a person appropriates the article to his own use, but the illustrations cannot be taken to limit or narrow the scope of s. 403 itself. It seems to me that if a person sets apart an article for the use of another person, of which article he is a trustee of the complainant, he misappropriates it even though he has not put it to his own use. Section 403 is in no way restricted to appropriating property to one's own use. If a trustee repudiates the trust and asserts that he now holds the property on behalf of a person other than the one who entrusted him with it, he has misappropriated the property just as much he would have been said to misappropriate it if he had been putting forward his own claim to it. The applicant got possession of the cattle from the Receiver and undertook to return them to the Receiver. When subsequently he repudiated the right of the Receiver to attach the cattle and asserted that they really belonged to the insolvent's brother and that he would not hand them over to the Receiver he must be deemed to have committed a misappropriation.

As regards the second point the relevant portion of the sapurdnama is as follows :—
“Whenever the Court or the Receiver demands the production of the attached property I shall deliver the same without objection. If for any reason I fail to deliver them then I shall pay the price, Rs. 950.” The argument of the learned Vakil for the applicant is that when it was clearly stipulated that in case of failure to deliver the cattle the applicant would be liable to pay their price amounting to Rs. 950 his default cannot amount to a criminal misappropriation, and that at best his liability was only a civil liability. But the mere fact that there is a civil liability does not necessarily absolve one from criminal liability. When a Receiver attaches property and entrusts it to some person in the village he does not purport to sell it to him or dispose of it at that time. The Receiver may not even be in a position to know its true value. The intention of the parties is that the articles should be returned in specie or produced at the time when the auction-sale is to take place. The covenant that the accused would be liable to pay a certain amount is more by way of security than because the property is transferred to him with liberty to dispose of it or withhold it. In such cases it is the true intention of the parties which must be taken into account. There can be no doubt that in this case it could never have been the intention of the Receiver that the property attached should not be actually produced when the auction is to take place. If such property is not produced the insolvent as well as the creditors may suffer for it cannot be known beforehand what actual price would be fetched at the sale.

I would dismiss the application.

The conduct of the accused has been both obstinate and stupid. Had he returned the heads of cattle when his prosecution began it would have been possible to take a lenient view so far as the sentence is concerned, as the accused is a very old man. The learned Vakil for the applicant has stated before me that his client expressed his readiness to deliver the heads of cattle, etc., and that even now he is prepared to hand over the same. If the heads of cattle and other articles were delivered to the Receiver I would be prepared to interfere with the sentence. I accordingly allow this case to stand over for a fortnight. If by that time the cattle, etc., have been delivered to the Receiver and a duly sworn affidavit is filed before me stating that the delivery has been made, I would reduce the sentence. Put up for orders after two weeks.

(November 30, 1925).—The affidavit of Nain Singh son of Indra Singh shows that the accused has returned to the Receiver all the articles which were entrusted to him except two bullocks which have died and that he has paid to the Receiver Rs. 130 as their price and that in addition he has paid Rs. 300 on account of the expenses and costs incurred in prosecuting the criminal case. In view of these circumstances as indicated in my previous order I uphold the conviction but reduce the sentence to the period already served. The bail-bond is cancelled and he need not surrender.

Complainant's shop was broken into and a quantity of cotton and some pieces of cloth were stolen, but complainant did not furnish the Police with a list of the articles which had been stolen. Accused was seen next morning in the village carrying bundles of cloth. He was subsequently arrested and produced a bag of cotton and certain pieces of cloth of an ordinary character which any cloth merchant might be expected to stock and sell, but which were claimed by the complainant as belonging to him.

Held, that the evidence against the accused was of an inconclusive character and was not sufficient to support a conviction under s. 457 of the Penal Code.

Petition for revision of an order of the Sessions Judge, Ferozepur, dated the 20th January 1925, affirming that of the Magistrate, First Class, Muktsar, District Ferozepore, dated the 14th December 1924.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Petitioner.

Mr. J. N. Bhandari, for the Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the night between 11th and 12th November 1924 a burglary was committed at the shop of Gurditta. The shopkeeper came to his shop in the morning and found that the lock had been broken open and certain articles such as kapas and a quantity of cloth were removed. He lodged a First Information Report but did not produce a list of the missing articles as on account of confusion in the shop he was unable to prepare a list. Three persons, viz., Wasil, Jhaggar and Jamal Din were tried for the offence and were convicted by the Magistrate under s. 457, Indian Penal Code. Two of the convicted persons, viz., Wasil and Jamal Din appealed but their appeals have been dismissed by the learned Sessions Judge, Ferozepore. One of them, viz., Wasil has come up in revision to this Court. The only evidence against him is that he produced a bag of kapas and a ghara containing a quantity of the stolen cloth. The recovery list, Ex. P-C, contains the list of the articles which are as follows:—

1. White gabrūn phuldar.
2. White doria with green theka.
3. White gabrūn with green stripes.
4. Latha black.
5. White gabrūn with black line.
6. Latha white without number.
7. Latha white.
8. Gabrūn with lace, green coloured.
9. Gabrūn with black line.
10. One bag of kapas.

These articles were really incapable of identification. The complainant Gurditta, however, gave evidence and identified those articles as belonging to him. Such articles are of ordinary character and any cloth merchant may stock them and sell them. It is impossible to say with certainty that the cloth and the kapas produced belonged to Gurditta and had been stolen from his shop. The conviction, therefore, cannot be sustained upon this piece of evidence. It is, however, contended on behalf of the Crown that the three accused persons were seen by Bhag Singh, P. W. No. 7, in the early morning shortly after the burglary somewhere in the village carrying bundles of cloth and that this evidence coupled with the evidence relating to the production of the articles proves the guilt of the petitioner. I am unable to accept this contention. Unless it is established beyond all possible doubt that the bundles contained the goods stolen from the shop of Gurditta or that the articles produced by Wasil were the stolen property belonging to Gurditta the conviction cannot be allowed to stand. The evidence against the accused was wholly insufficient and inconclusive.

I, therefore, accept this petition for revision, set aside the conviction of Wasil and direct that he be forthwith released.

Under the Cr. P. C. of 1898 as amended in 1923, compensation can be awarded to the accused when the complaint is shown to be false and either frivolous or vexatious and it is not necessary to show that it is both frivolous and vexatious.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 1st June 1925.

Mr. Kumuda Prasad, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—The applicant Kashi Prasad brought a complaint against the opposite party which was found to be false and brought on account of enmity. The learned Trying Magistrate ordered the accused to pay Rs. 50 as compensation. The contention here is that no such compensation can be awarded unless the complaint is shown to be frivolous and vexatious, and reliance is placed on the decision in the case of Ram Singh v. Mathura (1). That case was, however, decided under the old Cr. P. C. The alteration since made covers a case where the complaint is shown to have been false and either frivolous or vexatious. The complaint in the present instance has been found to have been false and brought on account of enmity, and s. 250 of the Cr. P. C.

Bombay Abkari Act (V of 1878), s. 43 (1) (a)— Importation of foreign liquor—Punishment, appropriate.

On conviction under s. 43 (1) (a) of the Bombay Abkari Act the more appropriate form of punishment is imprisonment and not fine.

Reference made by the District Magistrate, Larkana, dated the 21st August 1925.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. Partabrai D. Punwani, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—The accused persons were convicted under s. 43 (1) (a) of Act V of 1878. The Second Class Magistrate of Labdaria finding that these two persons had imported foreign liquor from Kalat, inflicted upon each of them a fine of Rs. 100 or in default to undergo rigorous imprisonment for six weeks. This fine has been paid.

The case was referred here by the District Magistrate of Larkana on the ground that the sentence is inadequate.

It being necessary to ascertain in the first place whether the accused were properly convicted, we are of the opinion that it is not shown that Gulab was guilty of the charge, namely, that he imported the foreign liquor. He was a cartman and although his behaviour is suspicious, yet it by no means follows that even if he was aware that he was committing an abkari offence he imported the liquor. It is just as possible he may have been removing this liquor from some depot in British India to some depot in British India. We think, it is impossible to uphold his conviction of the offence of importing liquor. We, therefore, set aside the conviction on him, acquit and discharge him and direct that his fine should be refunded.

As regards the question of Ali Mardan, we are not inclined to set aside the finding of the lower Court. It seems clear enough that this accused ran away as soon as challenged. This indicates that he had a guilty knowledge as to what the cart contained. The natural inference is that he had been the importer for some time. And if that inference is incorrect it is for him to say how and under what circumstances he came into the possession of the liquor. We think, therefore, his conviction is right.

We are of the opinion that fine is an inappropriate sentence in a case like this. If the convict is a poor man, it means a great and excessive hardship not only to himself but also to his family. But as a general rule, the fine is very little deterrent because it is clear when importation on so large a scale as in the present case takes place, there must be some wealthy men behind it who are well able to pay fines in order to secure services of poor men. The only chance, therefore, of depriving such confederates of the services of their willing agents is to inflict punishment on these agents which cannot be lightened by any act of their principals. Therefore it seems to us that in such cases the more appropriate form of punishment is one of imprisonment. And the present case seems to be particularly a flagrant case.

On the whole, therefore, we enhance the sentence passed by the Second Class Magistrate, Labdaria and under s. 43 (1) (a) sentence Ali Mardan to three months' rigorous imprisonment. The fine, if paid, to be refunded.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Sessions Judge, Jhansi, dated the 19th August 1925

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Applicant.

The Government Pleader, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case Krishna Gopal Sharma has been convicted of an offence under s. 19 of the Arms Act. The upper storey of a house at Jhansi forming the Local Congress office was raided by the Police on 31st May last and a Mauser pistol and 64 cartridges were found in the bottom of a grain-bin in a room at the back. The room was behind the kitchen and had no doors. The upper storey was rented in the name of the accused. The accused, however, was not present at the time, and it is said that he had gone to Cawnpore five days before. At the time of the raid the key was in possession of Ajodhya Prasad to whom the accused had handed it over. There were two other members of the Local Congress present in the upper storey at the time of the search. It is further in evidence that the particular room in which the pistol and cartridges were found has no doors to it. The question is whether this is sufficient to prove beyond reasonable doubt that the pistol and cartridges were in the possession of the accused. It does not seem to me that it is. The evidence does not exclude a reasonable possibility of a pistol having been placed there by some other of the persons who frequented the rooms or even by Ajodhya Prasad in whose possession they were at the time. The learned Sessions Judge has felt the difficulty, and the circumstance which he considers decisive is that some days afterwards the accused was arrested in possession of a revolver with cartridges of the same brand as those found in the Congress rooms. Even this, however, is not to my mind decisive, unless it is shown that the cartridges were of a peculiar kind such as no other frequenters of the Congress rooms was likely to have. It might easily be that more than one person frequenting these rooms was in possession of unlawful arms and that the type of cartridge used by both of them was the same. The case is one of some difficulty, but the evidence is, in my opinion, not quite sufficient to bring home the possession of the unlicensed arms to the accused. I, therefore, accept his appeal and set aside the conviction and sentence in this case.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 202, 439—Refusal to issue process—Revision—Notice to accused, whether necessary.

It is not obligatory on a Superior Court to give any notice to a person against whom a Magistrate has refused to issue process under s. 202 of the Cr. P. C., when proceedings are being taken to revise that order.

Application to revise an order of Mr. Raymond, A. J. C., dispensing with notice of a revision application against an order of the City Magistrate, Karachi.

Mr. D. N. O'Sullivan, for the Applicant.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Opponents.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this case one Crowder brought a serious accusation against one Morrison in the Court of the City Magistrate, Karachi. The City Magistrate held an investigation, apparently under s. 202, Cr. P. C., and as a result of that enquiry came to the conclusion that he should not issue process. It is not necessary for the purposes of the present application to make any remark as to the expediency of the procedure adopted, and far less the propriety of the order. Crowder being dissatisfied with that order has made a revisional application on the Sessions Court side which came up before my brother Raymond, A. J. C. Raymond, A. J. C., admitted this application to a regular hearing and directed issue of a notice to Morrison. Shortly after that order the complainant having represented to the Court that Morrison is no longer in India, the Court directed notice to be dispensed with. And it is this order that the applicant Morrison now seeks to set aside.

There is nothing in the Code to make it necessary for a Superior Court to give any notice to any person against whom a Magistrate has refused to issue process under s. 202, when proceedings are being taken to revise that order. It is obvious that although one Magistrate may refuse to issue process another Magistrate may do so and process may thus be issued without the necessity of upsetting the order of the first Magistrate. It would be impossible to arrest any criminal if we accept the view that once any Magistrate has refused to issue process that is to give such criminal immunity from all processes for ever. No doubt notice is generally given when it is proposed to upset an order under s. 202 but that is mere matter of convenience and of equity. It is in no way obligatory for the Court so to issue notice.

The order of Raymond, A. J. C., therefore, dispensing to issue of notice was a perfectly good order in the circumstances and was made on due cause shown, it being represented to him that the opponent had left India. The circumstances which made it appear that it was difficult to serve notice rendered it very undesirable to delay the enquiry until notice had been issued.

We, therefore, dismiss this application.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 309—Attempt to commit suicide—Release on security—Revision—Order, whether can be set aside.

Section 562 (3), Cr. P. C., empowers the High Court in the exercise of its powers of revision to set aside an order under s. 562 and substitute a sentence of imprisonment.

An attempt to commit suicide should not be treated lightly.

Criminal reference made by the District Magistrate, Jhansi, dated the 14th of October 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—In the case of Emperor v. Musammât Kesar, under s. 309 of the Indian Penal Code, the Magistrate convicting the accused has dealt with the case under the provisions of s. 562, Cr. P. C., and taken security from her for her appearance if called on within one year.

It is proved that the accused jumped into a well merely in consequence of a quarrel with a woman neighbour in which abuse only was exchanged. The Magistrate considers that her object was to cast ignominy on the person she had quarrelled with.

I consider that no adequate punishment has been awarded and that the law has not been vindicated.

There is an increasing tendency among Magistrates to avoid punishing attempts of suicide. The law is clear but it is rapidly becoming a dead letter. If s. 309 is to be retained it must be enforced, and I feel that if it is to be enforced a pronouncement is required from higher authority than mine.

I, therefore, refer this case to the Hon'ble High Court for orders. I have selected it for reference because there can be no plea for the accused that she acted in desperation induced by suffering or shame.

The Magistrate will make such representation in support of his judgment as he may wish.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—For the reasons given by the District Magistrate I accept this Reference and substitute a sentence of fourteen days simple imprisonment for the order under s. 562 of the Cr. P. C. passed by the Court below. Dr. Vaish for the applicant has referred me to a ruling of the year 1914, Emperor v. Ghasite (1), in which it was held that the only procedure open to the High Court in such a case was to order a re-trial. The law has since been amended, and s. 562, sub-s. CRIMINAL REFERENCE NO. 540 OF 1925.

December 1, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman.

KALAP NATH—ACCUSED—APPLICANT

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Police Act (V of 1861), s. 34 (4)—Supplying water to public and receiving tips—Water, whether "exposed for sale"

A person who sets up a chauki (wooden board) with an earthen jar filled with water on a public place and supplies water to all those who want it, cannot be said to expose the water for sale within s. 34 (4) of the Police Act, merely because sometimes some of the persons who take water do voluntarily give tips to him.

The expression "exposes for sale" in s. 34 (4), Police Act, implies that every person who takes any quantity of the thing exposed has to pay for it.

Criminal reference made by the Sessions Judge, Benares, dated the 27th July 1925.

REFERRING ORDER.—The applicant, Kalap Nath, has been convicted by a Magistrate, First Class of Benares, under s. 34, cl. (4) of Act V of 1861 and sentenced to a fine of Re 1 or in default to undergo one day's simple imprisonment till the rising of the Court. The case was tried summarily by the Magistrate. The applicant has come in a revision challenging the propriety of the conviction both on facts and law.

The accused was charged and convicted under s. 34 (4) of Act V of 1861. This section provides that any person who commits any of the offences mentioned thereafter to the obstruction, inconvenience and annoyance, risk, danger or damage of the residence or of the passengers is punishable under that section. In cl. (4) of the Act is mentioned as "any person who exposes any goods for sale". In the present case it was alleged that the accused had kept a chauki with an earthen jar over it and was supplying water to those who wanted it, and that it was on the public road. On the side of the prosecution, was examined one Muhammad Hafiz, Head Constable, who took the accused to the thana. In his evidence he did not mention that the water was being supplied for price paid. There was no other evidence to show that the water was exposed for sale and unless this fact was proved the accused could not be convicted. The Trying Magistrate has come to an erroneous finding on this point and his reasonings are peculiar and illogical. One of the accused's witnesses Baijnath Prasad Vyas, happened to state, "sometimes Brahmans who supply water get some alms". The Trying Magistrate referring to this portion of the evidence jumped to this conclusion "Brahmans supplying water at pausara get alms". Later on he remarked in the judgment "his statement that pausarawalas get alms is true. Therefore though the water over the chauki was not technically exposed for sale the idea is that alms should be given in return for the drink which amounts to much the same thing". I am unable to follow the logic of the reasoning as it cannot be said by any stretch of language that the water was exposed there for sale. The witness had made a general statement that sometimes Brahmans who supply water get some alms which does not mean that the applicant was selling water. It was proved that he was employed by a lady to supply water during the hot month of May which is usually done by Hindus who consider it a maritorious act to supply water to those who require it. The water is never sold. If the man who supplies the water happens to be a Brahman it is quite possible that some of those who drink water may sometimes give him something as alms. But that fact alone would not convert the free supply of water into one for sale. It is also very doubtful whether the pausara was installed on a public road and there is nothing to refute the defence evidence that it did not obstruct the way of the passers-by and that the pausara was adjacent to a well at the place where it had been maintained during the previous years. Even if the pausara was kept on the public way the accused could not be convicted of an offence under s. 34, cl. (4) of the Police Act unless it was proved that the water was exposed for sale. He may be guilty of an offence under some other Act but not under s. 34 of the Police Act. There is absolutely no evidence that the water was exposed for sale and the finding of the lower Court is entirely erroneous. The conviction of the applicant was improper and although the matter is trifling but I think in the ends of justice the conviction should be quashed.

ORDER.—Under s. 438 of the Cr. P. C. I report the case for the orders of the Hon'ble High Court with the recommendation that the conviction may be set aside. The record will be submitted to the Hon'ble High Court with such explanation as the Trying Magistrate may like to offer.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Applicant.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Benares recommending that the conviction and the sentence passed on the accused under s. 34 (4) of Act V of 1861 should be set aside. The accused is apparently a servant of some lady who deputed him to supply water to all who wanted it at a public place. He set up a chauki (wooden board) with an earthen jar filled with water over it and supplied water to all those who wanted it. According to the order of the Judge it is not clear whether this board was set up on a public way nor is it clear whether it obstructed the way of the passer-by. But it is not disputed that it was set upon a public open space. Although sometimes some of the persons who took water did voluntarily give tips, it is difficult to say that water was actually exposed for sale within the meaning of sub-cl. (4) of the section. The expression 'exposes for sale' implies that every person who takes any quantity of it has to pay for it. This obviously is not what used to happen. The witnesses have merely stated that 'sometimes Brahmans who supply water get some alms'. This does not show that the water which is supplied is exposed for sale. All that I have to decide in this case is whether an offence under s. 34 (4) was committed. In holding that no such offence was committed, I am by no means suggesting that the accused was not guilty of any other offence under some other Act, nor am I suggesting that he was in any way justified in occupying a part of the public ground in the way he did. I accordingly accept the Reference and setting aside the conviction and sentence passed on the accused acquit him of the offence with which he was charged. I direct that the fine, if paid be refunded.

influence—Penalty*

In the absence of any evidence that at the time when a kabuliyat was executed, the landlord exercised undue influence over the tenant and that the latter was not a free agent, the landlord is entitled to recover interest on arrears of rent at the rate stipulated in the kabuliyat.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 19th of June 1922, affirming that of the Munsif, First Court at Lakshmipore, dated the 24th of June 1920.

Babu Nagendra Nath Chaudhury, for the Appellants.

Babus Hem Kumar Bose and Biraj Mohan Majumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Cuming, J.—In the suit out of which this appeal has arisen the plaintiffs sued the defendants for recovery of arrears of rent and cesses alleged to be due for the years 1323 to 1325 for a certain howla jama at an annual rent of Rs. 9-9 0 with interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum under a registered kabuliyat dated the 1290 B. S. corresponding to 1884.

The Court of first instance decreed that plaintiffs' suit as against defendants Nos. 3 and 6 on contest and ex parte against the other defendants at the rate of Rs. 9-9 0 per annum inclusive of cesses with damages at the rate of Rs. 25 per cent. He did not allow interest at the rate of Rs. 75 per cent. per annum as claimed by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs appealed to the District Court. That Court held that cesses were included in the rent, and it further held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to interest at the rate of Rs. 75 per cent per annum on the ground that the stipulation to pay interest at the rate of Rs. 75 per cent. per annum was entered in the kabuliyat as a threat to ensure punctual realization of the rent and on this ground he dismissed the appeal.

The plaintiffs have appealed to this Court on the question of interest. They contend that they are entitled to the interest at the kabuliyat rate, that unless the defendants can show that the parties did not contract on equal terms or that one party was in a position to exercise undue influence over the other and took unfair advantage of the other they are entitled to the interest at the kabuliyat rate.

I think the appellants are entitled to succeed. No attempt has been made by the defendants to prove that at the time when the contract was entered into the plaintiffs were in a position to dominate the defendants and to exercise undue influence over them to induce them to enter into the contract, and that the defendants were not free agents in entering into the contract. The defendants having failed to prove this the plaintiffs are clearly entitled to the interest at the rate stated in the kabuliyat.

The appeal is, therefore, decreed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is modified to this extent that the plaintiffs are entitled to interest at the rate of Rs. 75 per cent. per annum down to the date of the institution of the suit in the place of the damages at the rate of Rs 25 per cent. as allowed by the lower Appellate Court.

The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal and the proportionate costs in the two lower Courts.

Chakravarti, J.—I agree.

A mortgagee decree-holder is entitled to bring the mortgaged properties to sale in execution of his decree in any order he chooses whatever his motives may be. It is immaterial to his rights that the mortgagor had since the mortgage sold one of the mortgaged properties to some third person.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Kistna, at Masulipatam, in E. P. No. 24 of 1923, in O. S. No. 21 of 1921, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Masulipatam.

FACTS.—The plaintiff, a mortgagee decree-holder, applied by petition for execution of his decree and prayed that a proclamation for sale may be issued in respect of the mortgaged immoveable properties under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., and that they should be sold in a particular order and the amount collected and paid to the plaintiff. Objection was raised for the judgment-debtor that the first item which he had sold away ought to be sold first, but the Court directed the sale of the properties in the order in which decree-holder desired. The judgment-debtor appealed.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. Ramachandra Row and S. Subramanya Sastri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Assuming an appeal lies which is doubtful, we cannot interfere with the order of the Court below. The mortgagee is entitled to bring the properties to sale in any order he chooses. We cannot scrutinise his motives and even on the allegation of the appellant, there is nothing improper in those motives. The mortgagee cannot be in a worse position as to his rights because one of the mortgagor's properties has been purchased by some other person. The appeal is dismissed with costs of first respondent.

The consent of parties cannot make a piece of evidence relevant and admissible, which is not relevant and admissible under the provisions of the Evidence Act [p 595, col 2.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Vizagapatam, in A. S. No. 96 of 1922, (A. S. No. 335 of 1921, on the file of the District Court, preferred against that of the Court of the District Munsif, Yellamanchilli, in O. S. No. 131 of 1920.

Mr. B. Somayya, for the Appellant.

Mr. V. Govindarajachari, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The question in this suit was whether the plaintiff had been adopted by one Chinnayya before his death in September 1918. The District Munsif came to the conclusion on the evidence before him that the plaintiff was so adopted. On appeal to the Subordinate Judge, the Subordinate Judge came to a different conclusion on the evidence. It is contended in second appeal that the conclusion which the Subordinate Judge came to was influenced by the reception in evidence of Ex. A and Ex. II. These were attempted to be put in before the learned District Munsif but were rejected. Therefore, application was made to the Subordinate Judge to admit these. Exhibit A is a public copy of the deposition of P. W. No. 3 (4th defendant herein) before the Revenue Inspector. The request to admit this Ex. A was made by the respondent, and on that application the learned Subordinate Judge makes this note :

"P. L. N., who argues the case for the appellant's learned Vakil, has no objection to have the document marked. Mark this as an exhibit on the plaintiff's side A."

As to Ex. II this is a statement made by the natural father of the adopted boy and the Judge's note on the petition to admit that is :

"There is no objection to the statement made by the natural father".

The question I have to consider is whether the consent or want of objection by which Exs. A and II, were admitted in evidence by the Subordinate Judge is valid or whether as contended for by Mr. Somayya for the appellant the documents would naturally become evidence if and when they were put to the witness either to corroborate or contradict them. In other words, is the consent to the reception of these matters simply a waiver of formal proof or does it go to the root of the matter and is it an attempt to make evidence of what is really not evidence under the provisions of the Evidence Act? I may at once say that Ex A is sought to be put in under s. 157 and Ex II, under s. 145. Several cases have been quoted, for instance Bhavamma v. Ramamma (1). By s. 145 of the Indian Evidence Act, the credit of a witness may be impeached by proof of his former inconsistent statements, and before a witness can be impeached he must be given an opportunity of making any explanation which is open to him. And further in Bal Gangadhar Talak v. Shri Shrinivas Pandit (2) documents had been used for the purpose of contradicting witnesses without calling their attention to the portion of the documents so used. These depositions in a criminal case were imported in bulk into a civil enquiry as to a question of adoption. Their Lordships of the Privy Council held that there were no circumstances in that case to bring the matter within the purview of s. 33 of the Evidence Act, nor any warrant for using the documents for the purpose of either contradicting or discounting the evidence of the witnesses given in the suit. There is no question there of any consent or waiver of objection. On the other hand in a Full Bench case in this Court Jainab Bibi Saheba v. Hyderally Saheb (3), it was held that the evidence recorded in a previous proceeding between the same parties may be made admissible in a subsequent proceedings by their consent. Coutts Trotter, J., there said:—"It is clear that in this country neither an omission by an Advocate to object to the giving of irrelevant and inadmissible evidence, nor the failure of the tribunal to exclude it of its own motion, will validate a decree based on material which the Evidence Act declares to be inherently and in substance irrelevant to the issue. A wholly different question arises where the objection is not as to the nature and quality of the evidence in itself, but merely as to the mode of proof put forward"

And the learned Judge holds that "consent can cure what would otherwise be a defective method of letting in evidence in its substance and context relevant and germane to the issues"

I am of opinion that this is what has happened in the present case, namely, that there has been consent or waiver of objection to the mode in which these statements which are admittedly relevant under the Evidence Act should be admitted to the record. An earlier case in Inugunti Prakasa Rajanagaru v. Yeranki Venkata Rao (4) is to the same effect. There the learned Judge says—

"The facts admitted in evidence being themselves relevant, the provisions of law intended to test the credibility of witnesses or to enable the Trying Judge to make the test himself are not of such an important character that parties cannot waive the benefit of those provisions".

I am, therefore, of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge was justified in receiving these oral statements Exs. A and II, and in estimating the oral statements made by the witnesses in the light of the statements made by them in these documents.

The second appeal must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Diwan Mehr Chand, for the Plaintiff-Respondents

JUDGMENT.—This was a suit to recover the losses alleged by the plaintiffs to have been sustained by them in certain dealings in lac which they undertook as commission agents on behalf of the defendants. The first Court held that the suit came within the scope of Art. 83 of the Indian Limitation Act and that the plaintiffs had failed to prove that it was within time. On appeal the learned Additional Judge held that Art 64 was the Article applicable and that the suit was within time, since by Punjab Act I of 1904 the period of limitation under that Article was enlarged to six years.

One of the defendants challenges this finding in second appeal.

The plaintiffs made on behalf of the defendants two purchases, each of 100 maunds of lac, in Mirzapur, one in August and the other in September, 1916. Delivery was to be on the 15th October 1916. On that date an entry was made in the plaintiff's account book by which the defendants acknowledged a balance of Rs. 2,550 against them and agreed to re-pay it with interest at 8 annas per cent, per mensem. The plaintiff set forth this in his plaint describing the account as "Hisab yaddasht zabani mutabiq kharid-o-farokht" and stated that on the one contract a loss of Rs. 1,875 had been estimated and on the other a loss of Rs. 1,450. To these sums Rs. 225 commission was added and the total came to Rs. 3,550. From this were deducted two payments of Rs. 500 each made in advance by the defendants and thus the balance against them was Rs. 2,550. The plaint went on to set forth other and subsequent accounts which ignored the balance of Rs. 2,550 and commenced afresh with the charge of Rs. 3,550 against the defendants. They were debited further with Rs. 2-5 miscellaneous charges for telegrams, etc., Rs. 713 7-9, described as the actual loss subsequently ascertained as having been incurred on one of the contracts, and an extra charge of Rs 71-8 for commission on the other contract. On the other side the defendants were given credit for Rs. 1,000 (the two advance payments of Rs. 500 each), for Rs. 492-8 representing a subsequent advance payment for yet another transaction which had not materialized, and for Rs. 1,875 which had been the estimated loss calculated on the 15th October 1916 of the transaction on which the actual loss was afterwards found to Rs. 713-7-9 only. The plaintiffs in due course produced their books showing these accounts set forth as described after the signed balance. The learned Additional Judge observed that the plaint had been unhappily worded but that, in his opinion, the claim was not one by a commission agent for the re-imbursement of losses paid on behalf of his principal but a suit on accounts stated in writing signed by the defendants, that is to say, the account balanced on the 15th October 1916. The subsequent accounts he regarded merely as certain sums credited later in good faith by the plaintiffs thinking that the defendants were entitled to them. He held that from the 15th October 1916 the risk on the two contracts had become that of the plaintiff, and that the defendants could not have been called upon to pay more than Rs. 2,550 if the losses had been found later on to exceed that sum.

A flaw in this view is that the plaintiff actually claimed Rs. 71-8 as commission in addition to the commission item of Rs. 225 included in the balance. In my opinion the claim made in the plaint was not based on the balance at all, but mention of the balance was only designed to meet a possible plea that the transactions were mere gambling transactions and the claim was made on other and subsequent figures which superseded and ignored the balance altogether.

The suit was not one for money payable on accounts stated between the parties instituted within six years of the date on which the accounts were stated in writing signed by the defendants.

I hold the decision of the first Court to have been right, that Art. 83 governed the suit. This decision is supported by Manghi Ram v. Firm of Saran Das-Maman Chand (1) and by other subsequent rulings. It has been urged by the learned Counsel for the respondents that in any case under Art. 83 the suit would be in time in respect of the claim for Rs. 713-7-9 but all that appears regarding this is a statement by the plaintiff that the amount was debited against the defendants in his books on the 31st July 1919. There is no evidence of when the plaintiff actually had to pay it and I agree with the first Court that the plaintiff has failed to prove the date of damnification in respect of any of his claim.

I, therefore, accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r 90—Execution of decree—Property sold as belonging to judgment-debtor—Previous sale by judgment-debtor—Application by judgment-debtor to set aside auction-sale, maintainability of

Where, in execution of a decree, certain property is sold as belonging to the judgment-debtor, the latter is entitled to maintain an application to set aside the sale on the ground of material irregularity in the publication and conduct of the sale, and the application cannot be thrown out on the ground that the judgment-debtor had prior to the date of the auction sold the property to a third person and had thus ceased to have an interest in the property.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Mayavaram, in E. A. No. 210 of 1922, dated the 22nd August 1922, in O. S. No. 4 of 1921, on the file of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Nega-patam.

Mr. K. Rajah Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. Krishnaswamy Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Subordinate Judge of Mayavaram dismissing the appellant's petition for setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90. The Subordinate Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the judgment-debtor had no interest in the properties, he having sold them to Velu Pillai before the date of auction sale. The properties were sold as those belonging to the appellant. If the properties did not belong to him, the decree-holder could not have brought them to sale in execution of his decree and the Court could not have sold the properties as those belonging to the appellant. It cannot, therefore, be said that, when he applies under r. 90 of O. XXI to have the sale set aside on the ground of irregularity in publishing and conducting the sale, his interests are not affected. Rule 90 is wide in its terms. It says "the decree-holder or any person entitled to share in a rateable distribution of assets, or whose interests are affected by the sale, may apply to the Court to set aside the sale on the ground of a material irregularity or fraud in publishing or conducting it." Here the property was sold as the property of the appellant and we fail to see how they ceased to be his properties before the date of sale. If he had any interest at the time when the properties were sold, it cannot be said that his interest in them had ceased by virtue of the sale which would prevent his applying r. 90. We think the order is bad in law and we set it aside and direct the Subordinate Judge to restore the application to file and dispose of it on the merits. Costs of the appeal will be provided for by the lower Court when it disposes of the application.

Punjab Tenancy Act (XVI of 1887), ss 50, 77 (3) (g), (1)—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 18—Landlord and tenant—Dispossession of tenant by landlord—Suit by tenant to recover possession—Jurisdiction of Civil and Revenue Courts—Fraud—Extension of limitation

Sub-clauses (g) and (1) of s 77 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act cover all conceivable causes of litigation between a landlord and his tenant qua tenant, and an ex-tenant in that capacity, can look for no relief outside the Revenue Courts.

If a tenant, who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy in the circumstances mentioned in s 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, allows the period of one year prescribed by that section to expire without bringing a suit in the Revenue Court, he loses his remedy altogether, and by the combined operation of ss 50 and 77 (3) (g) is debarred from bringing a suit for recovery of possession or for compensation or for both in a Civil Court.

In a suit by a tenant to recover possession of his holding from which he has been dispossessed by the landlord, it is not any alleged fraud by which dispossession was carried out by the landlord which is pertinent for the purposes of s 18 of the Limitation Act, but the fraud by which the plaintiff has been kept from the knowledge of his right to institute a suit.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Hissar, dated the 30th June 1924, affirming that of the Munsif, First Class, Hissar, dated the 1st August 1924.

Mr. Shamair Chand, for the Appellants.

Pandit Nanak Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this suit alleged themselves to be occupancy tenants of certain land and the defendants to be the landlords. They sued for possession on the ground that in 1917 at a time when the plaintiffs had arranged for the cultivation of the occupancy tenancy by sub-tenants, the defendants landlords got a mutation sanctioned removing the plaintiffs' names from the record as occupancy tenants and thereby dispossessed them. The suit was for possession of the land comprised in the tenancy.

The defendants pleaded that the plaintiffs had lost their rights of occupancy by abandonment.

Both Courts below have concurred in decreasing the plaintiffs' claim. In second appeal the objection is raised for the first time that the suit was cognizable by a Revenue Court and not by a Civil Court. It is obvious that this is so.

The alleged dispossession took place on the 15th December 1917 and the suit was instituted on the 11th January 1921. In a precisely similar case of Mahindar Singh v. Allah Ditta (1) it was held that cases of this nature are fully covered by the decision in the Full Bench case of Akbar Hussain v. Karam Dad (2). In the judgment of Mr. Justice Shah Din in the latter case it is laid down that if a tenant, who has been wrongfully dispossessed of his tenancy in the circumstances mentioned in s. 50 of the Punjab Tenancy Act, allows the period of one year prescribed by that section to expire without bringing a suit in the Revenue Court, he loses his remedy altogether, and by the combined operation of ss. 50 and 77 (3) (g) is debarred from bringing a suit for recovery of possession or for compensation or for both in a Civil Court. This pronouncement was made after considering the observations of Sir Meredith Plowden in the referring order to P. R. 1891 [Kesar Singh v. Nihal Singh (3)], and it appears to me to be conclusive in respect of the present suit. In the same case Akbar Hussain v. Karam Dad (2) it was rightly pointed out by Rossignol, J., that s. 77 (3) (g) and (i) appear to cover all conceivable causes of litigation between a landlord and his tenant qua tenant, and that an ex-tenant, in that capacity, can look for no relief outside the Revenue Courts.

In the present instance the plaintiffs allege themselves to be tenants who have never abandoned their tenancy and the suit is not cognizable by a Civil Court.

I have been asked to consider the facts that no previous objection to jurisdiction was raised and that fraud was alleged in the plaint in deciding whether an order should be passed under s. 100 (3) of the Punjab Tenancy Act and the decree of the first Court ordered to be registered as that of an Assistant Collector. No specific allegation, however, is made in the plaint of the particular fraud by which dispossession was concealed from the plaintiffs by the defendants, and for purposes of s. 18 of the Limitation Act it is not the alleged fraud by which dispossession was carried out which is pertinent, but the fraud by which the plaintiffs have been kept from the knowledge of their right to institute a suit. As for the failure of the defendants to raise the question of jurisdiction before, it is not contended that this precludes me from going into this question in second appeal, and in view of the rulings of this Court cited above, to which I adhere, it would be vexatious to order otherwise than that the suit should be dismissed. I accept the appeal and dismiss the suit with costs throughout as being a suit which the lower Courts had no jurisdiction to hear.

In a suit for specific performance of an agreement to execute a simple mortgage, it is not competent to the Court to appoint a Receiver pending suit to take charge of the property in suit and thus do by way of receivership what it would not be entitled to do even by way of decree.

It is open to the Court in a suit for specific performance of an agreement to sell immovable property also to give a decree for possession. In such a suit it is not an improper exercise of discretion for the Court to allow the plaint to be amended so as to include an express prayer for possession.

No. 109 of 1925, preferred to the High Court against an order of the said Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ramnad at Madura, in I. A. No. 42 of 1925, in O. S. No. 39 of 1924.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and K. S. Venkataramani, for the Appellants.

Messrs. K. R. Venkatarama Iyer and Watrap S. Subramania Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ramnad at Madura appointing a Receiver in respect of the schedule properties in the suit which, according to the plaintiff's case, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had contracted to sell to him, and of the B schedule properties in the plaint which, according to the plaintiff, the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 had agreed to mortgage to him by simple mortgage. The suit is a suit for specific performance inter alia of this contract to sell and to execute a simple mortgage. Mr. T. R. Ramachandrier for the appellant contends that at any rate so far as the B schedule properties are concerned, it is not open to the lower Court to appoint a Receiver, the point being that the lower Court cannot by way of receivership do what it would not be entitled to do even by way of decree. At the highest, the plaintiff is entitled if he succeeds only to a simple mortgage on these properties, and having obtained this simple mortgage he could not immediately sue for possession. He is not entitled on the simple mortgage to possession. The most he could do is to enforce a sale on foot of the mortgage. We think that this argument is sound and that the lower Court was not justified in appointing a Receiver so far as the B schedule properties are concerned.

So far as the A schedule properties are concerned, Mr. T. R. Ramchandrier has also argued that the lower Court has exercised its discretion improperly in appointing a Receiver in respect of properties of which the plaintiff, in the first instance at least, is only asking for specific performance of sale and not for possession. Subsequently, however, the plaintiff was allowed to amend his plaint and put forward a prayer for possession of these properties also. A civil revision petition has been filed here against this amendment of the plaint and we deal with this now. Various rulings of this Court have been quoted to us, as also Form 47 of the First Schedule to the C. P. C., which set out that it is open to the Court in a suit for specific performance of sale, also to give a decree for possession. We are not, therefore, prepared to say that the lower Court exercised its discretion wrongly in permitting the amendment of the plaint and allowing the plaintiff to add a prayer for possession of the A schedule properties. That being so, the plaintiff's prayer for possession will stand, and in these circumstances we do not think we can say the lower Court exercised its discretion wrongly when it appointed a Receiver in respect of those properties, a decree for possession of which the plaintiff would be entitled to if he succeeds.

In these circumstances we dismiss C. R. P. No. 208 of 1925. No order as to costs.

As regards C. M. A. No. 109 the lower Court's order is set aside so far as the B schedule properties are concerned and the Receiver, if he has taken over charge of these properties must be discharged of it. No order as to costs.

ALLAHABAD HIGH COURT.

FIRST APPEAL FROM ORDER No. 31 OF 1925.

November 19, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Sulaiman and

Mr. Justice Mukerji.

MUMTAZ ALI—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

RESPONDENT.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 104 (f), O. XXIII, r. 3, O. XLIII, r. 1 (m), Sch. II, paras 20, 21—Arbitration—Award—Decree on award—Appeal—Remand—Appeal, second, whether lies

During the pendency of a suit the plaintiff made what purported to be an application under para 20 of Sch. II, C. P. C., stating that the matter in suit had been referred to arbitration and that an award had been made and requesting that the award may be filed and a decree passed in accordance with it. Defendant filed objections denying any valid reference to arbitration or the making of any valid award. The Court took evidence and decided that a valid reference and a valid award had been made and passed a decree in terms of the award. On appeal the lower Appellate Court held that no award had been made and remanded the case to the first Court for trial according to law. On second appeal by the plaintiff:

Held, (1) that the order of the Trial Court although in form a decree, must be treated as an order directing that the award be filed, and that as such it was open to appeal,

(2) that even if it was regarded as an order recording a compromise it was still an order open to appeal;

(3) that the appeal preferred by the defendant to the lower Appellate Court must, therefore, be treated as an appeal from an order, with the result that no second appeal was competent.

First appeal from an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Meerut, dated the 3rd December 1924.

Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Appellant.

Mr. S. A. Haider, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This purports to be a first appeal from order of remand. In the course of a pending suit, while a Commissioner was appointed by the Court to draw up a sketch plan, the parties are alleged to have agreed to refer their dispute to two arbitrators who went to the spot and made two marks on the land to indicate the line which should be drawn beyond which the defendant's construction should not extend. On the 22nd of April 1924 an application purporting to be one under Sch. II, r. 20 of the C. P. C., was filed by the plaintiff with a request that the alleged award made by the arbitrators should be filed in Court. Objections were filed on the 26th of April denying any valid reference to the arbitrators or the making of any valid award. The Court of first instance took evidence and decided that a valid reference and a valid award had been made. But instead of passing first an order directing the award to be filed and then passing a decree in terms of it it passed a composite order decreeing the plaintiff's claim in terms of it. An appeal was preferred by the defendant to the lower Appellate Court purporting to be an appeal from the decree so passed by the learned Munsif. There is no reference in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that the respondent's Vakil took the objection that no appeal lay to it. The lower Appellate Court came to the conclusion that the arbitrators had not made any award. It accordingly remanded the case to the Court below for trial according to law.

There can be no doubt that no appeal lies from a decree which is passed in terms of an award except in so far as it is at variance with the award. In this case there was a composite order passed by the Munsif and it is impossible to hold that the defendant was not entitled to any relief. Even if the order of the first Court were taken to be an order recording a compromise an appeal would lie from that order. In our opinion this case is on all fours with the ruling in Jagat Pande v. Sarwan Pande (1). The appeal to the Court below must be treated as an appeal from an order, with the result that no second appeal lies to this Court.

As there has been some confusion owing to the way in which the appeal was described—

In a proceeding under s 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act for assessment of additional rent for additional area, a document purporting to be a memorandum of measurement, which bears no date and about which it is not shown under what circumstances it was prepared, cannot be admitted in evidence

An application was put in before an Appellate Court asking that a document attached to the application should be admitted in evidence. The only order passed on the application was, "file with the record."

Held, that the document was not properly admitted in evidence

Babu Profulla Kamal Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sarat Chandra Basak (with him Babus Kanai Dhone Dutt and Sudhansu Sekhar Kar), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These two appeals are by the defendants against the decisions of the Special Judge of Jessore modifying the decision of the Assistant Settlement Officer. The proceedings out of which these appeals arise were proceedings under s 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act by the landlord for enhancement of rent under the provisions of s. 52 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also for the assessment of additional rent for additional area. The plaintiffs' case under s. 52 failed but in the lower Appellate Court, the learned Judge has allowed additional rent for additional area and he has arrived at his conclusion by admitting in evidence a certain document, a memorandum which is referred to in his judgment as showing the standard of measurement in Mahmudshahi Parganna. One ground of appeal by the defendants in these two appeals is that this memorandum should not have been admitted in evidence in the Appellate Court and the document is further attacked on the ground that there is nothing to show that the measurement stated in the memorandum was the measurement prevailing at the time the land was originally let out, that is, in the years 1866 and 1898 and it is further objected that there is no evidence to show in what circumstances the memorandum was prepared. We think this objection is well founded. The document has been produced before us—or rather a certified copy thereof. It bears no date and there is nothing to show how and under what circumstances it was prepared. Some suggestion was made on behalf of the respondents that it was prepared under the provisions of s 92, sub-s. (3) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. There is nothing to show this and under the circumstances, we do not think that the document should have been admitted in evidence. It is suggested, however, that three rent suits were tried together and, by consent, the evidence taken in one was to be treated as evidence in the other suits, and that by inadvertence this memorandum was only marked in the suit in which evidence was taken, but this is really a conjecture and is not founded on any certainty and we do not think that we should be justified in acting upon it. Moreover, it appears that the document was not properly admitted in evidence by the Appellate Court. The record shows that a petition was put into which the document was attached asking that it should be admitted in evidence and that on this petition the only order which was made was "file with the record." Under the circumstances, it seems to us that the document was not properly admitted and that the learned Judge should not have acted upon it. Moreover, even if it was admitted, for the reasons which I have already stated, it does not seem to us that it is a document which could have been relied on having regard to the absence of any evidence of the circumstances under which it was prepared.

For these reasons, we think, that the appeals must succeed. We, accordingly, set aside the decrees of the lower Appellate Court and restore the judgment of the learned Assistant Settlement Officer. The defendants-appellants will be entitled to their costs of this appeal and in the lower Appellate Court. Hearing-fee 3 gold mohurs in each case.

Appeal, second—Mala fides, whether question of fact—Interference by High Court

A finding that a certain action of a Municipality was prompted by mala fides is a finding of fact, and cannot be questioned in second appeal

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 15th June 1924, affirming that of the Junior Subordinate Judge, Ferozepore, dated the 9th October 1923.

Sheikh Niaz Muhammad, for the Appellant

Lala Jagan Nath Aggarwal, and Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal has arisen out of a suit for injunction against the Municipal Committee of the Ferozepur City restraining them from constructing a drain through the compound of the plaintiffs. It is an admitted fact that an alternative scheme for another drain prepared by a retired Engineer Sultan Singh had been approved. The Municipal Committee by passing a certain resolution in spite of the report of competent authorities that the scheme prepared by Sultan Singh was most appropriate and less expensive approved the scheme prepared by one Muhammad Nawaz Khan. The objections raised by the plaintiffs were overruled as being barred by time. Hence the present suit was instituted on the main ground that the Municipal Committee had acted mala fide. The issue to be decided in the case was whether the action of the Municipal Committee was mala fide and whether the plaintiffs are entitled to maintain the suit. Both the Courts below have concurrently found that the action of the Municipal Committee was mala fide. The lower Appellate Court, after examining all the relevant authorities on the question raised in the case and after considering the various resolutions passed by the Municipal Committee from time to time on the subject and after discussing the evidence on the record, recorded the following finding:—

“This action of the Municipality was tainted with mala fides. It was arbitrary, capricious, wanton, oppressive and unreasonable.”

Mr. Jagan Nath, the learned Counsel for the respondent, has contended that this is a finding of fact which cannot be interfered with in second appeal. Mr. Niaz Muhammad, on the other hand, has contended that these are conclusions drawn from the facts found and may be properly treated as raising questions of fact. On the facts found by the lower Appellate Court one can come to no other conclusion than that arrived at by the Court below. In Abdul Samand v. Municipal Committee of Delhi (1) the learned Judges held that the finding as to bona fides under circumstances similar to those in the present case was a finding of fact. In my opinion there is no room for interference in second appeal.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

The preliminary objection which was raised before Mr. Justice Harrison was not pressed before me because it was frankly admitted by Mr. Jaggan Nath, the learned Counsel for the respondents that a resolution was passed authorising Muhammad Nawaz Khan to file the appeal.

In the case of a joint Hindu family, if the father incurs debts and dies, the other members of the family do not stand towards him in the relation of heirs, they only succeed to him and the debts are binding upon them. In such a case the other members are liable to be adjudicated insolvents in respect of the debts incurred by the father.

Appeal against an order of the District Judge, Coimbatore, dated the 28th August 1924, in Insolvency Petition No. 43 of 1924.

Mr. M. Patanjali Sastriar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and P. Balakrishna Menon, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the District Judge of Coimbatore dismissing the appellant's application to adjudicate the respondent an insolvent. The learned Judge dismissed the application on the ground that the respondent should not be adjudicated in respect of his father's debt, as there was no personal liability on the part of the respondent in respect of such debt. The petitioner in this petition alleged that the respondent was pressed to pay the debt due to him and he requested the petitioner to give him time to collect the outstandings and pay him. Taking advantage of the time given to him, he made certain alienations in favour of certain creditors which the petitioner alleges to be fraudulent preferences. There is nothing in the Insolvency Act which prevents the undivided members of a joint Hindu family from being adjudicated insolvents in respect of debts due by the family. Each case would depend upon its circumstances. If the petitioner makes the necessary allegations and proves them, then the Court would be justified in adjudging the members of a joint family insolvents. In the case of a joint Hindu family, if the father incurs debts, and dies, the other members of the family do not stand in the relation of heirs; they only succeed to him and the debts are binding upon them. It was laid down by a Bench of this Court in V. S. Rm Chokalingam Chettiar v. Tiru-venkatasami, C. M. A. No 47 of 1916 that the relation of creditor and debtor existed between the lender and the members of a joint family in respect of debts incurred by the family. That being so, there was no reason why the lower Court should not have enquired into the matter and disposed of the petition on the merits. We, therefore, set aside the order and direct the District Judge to restore the petition to file and dispose of it according to the provisions s. 24 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. Costs will abide the result.

The expression "robbery from a running train" in Risk Note B used in the transmission of packages on the Railway does not include theft or taking without force. It has its technical meaning assigned to it by the Penal Code, [p. 606, col. 1].

De Rothschild v Royal Mail Steam Packet Company, (1852) 21 L. J. Ex. 273, 7 Ex. 734, 86 R. R. 813, 155 E. R. 1115 and Latham v Rutley, (1823) 107 E. R. 290, 2 B. & C. 20, referred to.

'Wilful neglect' as used in the Risk Note B may be taken to be the failure of a person to take any reasonable measures that he was aware of or should have been aware were likely to lessen the risk of loss of a consignment or a portion of it [p. 606, col. 2].

R v Downs, (1876) 1 Q. B. D. 25 at p. 30, 45 L. J. M. C. 8, 33 L. T. 675, 25 W. R. 278, 13 Cox C. C. 111, referred to.

The term 'running train' in Risk Note B does not signify that the train must actually be in motion. If the train is on its journey from one destination to another, that is, from junction to junction it cannot be said that the train is not a running train simply because it stops either on the road-side station or at any place between the road-side stations [p. 608, col. 1]

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Gonda, dated the 22nd October 1924, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Bahraich dated the 9th February 1923.

Mr. G. N. Mukerji, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, J.—This second civil appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiff-respondent against the Bengal North Western Railway Company, through its Agent at Gorakhpur, for damages for non-delivery of one out of four packages of cloth booked from Howrah on the East Indian Railway to be delivered at Nanpara on the Bengal North Western Railway Company. The Subordinate Judge of Bahraich dismissed the claim on the findings that—

(a) The fact that the defendant-Railway Company had carried the goods by another route than that specified was not proved to have increased the risk of loss,

(b) The loss of consignment was due to theft on a running train from liability for which the Railway was protected by the terms of the Risk Note B.

In first appeal the District Judge reversed this decision. He held that the Risk Note only protected the Railway from liability for robbery from a running train and not from theft from a running train. He held that the plaintiffs had sustained the burden of proving wilful neglect by the Railway Company as it was proved that the steps taken to secure the goods against loss by theft were inadequate. In this second appeal the following questions arise for determination.

Did the carriage of the goods by a longer route and a different route from that specified in the contract amount to failure on the part of the Railway Company to take the care required by s 151 of the Contract Act and, if so, can this be pleaded in second appeal?

As to this I hold that in second appeal the finding of the first Court cannot be reversed, namely, that the change of route did not call for any extra risk of loss, a finding with which I should be disposed to agree on the facts.

Does the expression in the Risk Note "robbery from a running train" mean robbery from a train in motion or robbery from a train from "junction to junction" (to adopt the explanation submitted by the Railway)? In view of my findings on the other questions it is not really necessary to decide this. It may, however, be pointed out that the term "running train" must be construed in the ordinary sense of the expression as used by the public inasmuch as the Railway Company did not put forward any evidence to show that the term was a technical term with a special meaning. Thus construed, however, I am of the opinion that if the meaning merely had been a train in motion, the expression "a train in motion" would have been used and not a "running train." I am disposed to hold that a train is still a running train even though it stops on stations en-route and certainly even though it stops on stations en-route and certainly even though it stops when held up by a signal. In adopting this meaning I am following a view taken in East Indian Railway Company v. Fazal Elahi (1) by Mr. Justice Boys of the Allahabad High Court. The case is reported in 85 Indian Cases 474.

Is the word "robbery" in the expression "robbery from a running train" merely equivalent to the word "theft"? This is one of the most important questions in this case. There is no doubt considerable authority for holding in the affirmative. I have been referred to East Indian Railway Company v. Nathmal-Behari Lal (2). It is there stated that the Judges, Richard, C. J., and Banerji, J., although it was perhaps unnecessary for the decision of the case, doubted very much whether the expression "robbery from a running train" in the contract meant anything else than an ordinary theft. It will be seen that this view was merely an obiter dictum, and was supported by no reasoning or explanation. Again in G. I. P. Railway Co., Ltd. v. Firm Bhola Nath-Debi Das (3) Mr. Justice Ryves states that he disagreed with the view of the Judge of the Court of Small Causes which was that robbery from a running train meant some thing very much more serious than theft from a running train, and that the idea of the contract was to protect the Railway from being liable for an attack by a band of robbers, an accident of the same category as some unexpected act of providence and expressed his own opinion as follows—

"It seems to me that robbery as used really is synonymous with theft and not in the sense as defined in the Penal Code."

It appears to me that in this pronouncement Mr. Justice Ryves after setting forth an excellent reason for the contrary view has dismissed that view without giving any reason for doing so except his own impression. I am next referred to Gopal Rai-Phul Chand v. G. I. P. Railway Co. (4). In this case Justices Daniels and Neave held robbery synonymous with theft merely on the basis of the two decisions mentioned. They furnish no other reason for so holding. Again I am referred to a ruling of the Madras High Court, B. B. and C. I. Railway Co., Ltd. v. Firm Nattaji Pratapchand (5). In this case at page 80* Mr. Justice Ramesam states "I assume robbery in the Form B is equivalent to theft". He bases this assumption upon the case already mentioned, G. I. P. Railway Co., Ltd. v. Firm Bhola Nath Debi Das (3). Thus it will be seen that in none of these rulings is the ratio decidendi set forth. That the view taken, however, was not merely a capricious view can be shown by reference to an English case, namely, the case of De Rothschild v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Company (6). This case was cited by the respondent as authority for holding that robbery in a Risk Note should not be construed as synonymous with theft. The case does not support this contention thus generally expressed, though, in my opinion, it does supply an argument for holding that "robbery" as used in this Risk Note is not synonymous with theft. It will be observed that in this Risk Note B the word "robbery" is preceded by the word "fire" in the clause, "provided the term 'wilful neglect' be not held to include fire, robbery from a running train or any other unforeseen event or accident". In that case Pollock, C. B., pointed out that he agreed with the contention that the word "robbers" in Risk Notes generally must be construed according to the ordinary meaning of the word, and not in the technical sense given to the word by the English Law and by some of the English Statutes, for two reasons. One was that the technical meaning was a felonious taking from a person by another, and that it could not be considered applicable to the case where packages were not in the personal presence of the Railway Company or their servants. The other reason was that there were many English Statutes where the meaning given by various decisions to the expression robbers or robbery was much more comprehensive than the technical meaning, and included the taking without force. After, however, making these remarks about Risk Notes in general—Pollock, C. B. added that "Considerations applicable to Risk Notes in general must be modified by considerations of the particular circumstances under which a particular Risk Note was made." He held that in the case before him the circumstances and also the conjunction of the word "robbers" with the word "pirates" was sufficient to indicate that the parties did not mean the defendant Company to be exempted from pilfering by thieves. From this ruling then I obtain the conclusion that "robbery" in ordinary parlance would include the taking without force, but that the adoption of the ordinary meaning might be negatived by the particular context of an agreement. Another English case which is instructive is Latham v. Rutley (7). In this case the expression of the contract was "fire and robbery excepted". The Judge left to the Jury the question whether robbery would include theft of the parcel at the wagon office in London before despatch by train, and the Jury decided that it would not cover this. The only importance of this case is that the meaning of the word "robbery" was left to the Jury. Now it appears to me that the reasoning set forth in the case of De Rothschild v. The Royal Mail Steam Packet Company (6) for holding that robbery in Risk Notes generally will include theft without violence is not applicable in India. The definition of robbery in India is by reference to the definition of theft, and the definition of theft is "taking..... out of the possession of any person,"

Goods may be in the possession of a Railway Company even though they will not be on its person or on the person of its servants. Again in India we are not embarrassed, so far as I am aware, by any Statutes using the word "robbery" in the sense "theft without violence". On the other hand ever since the passing of the Indian Penal Code in 1860 with its definition of robbery as theft with violence or show of violence it is reasonable to suppose that the public would attach to the word robbery the technical meaning. Again it is to be observed that this Risk Note B is one which, under s. 72 (2) (b) of the Indian Railways Act (IX of 1890), has to be in a form approved by the Governor General in Council. This means that it has to be passed by the Legal Advisers of the Government of India. It appears to me inconceivable that the Legislative Department of the Government of India would allow the expression "robbery" to be used where it was intended to express "theft." Lastly it will be seen in Risk Note B that the word "robbery" immediately follows "fire" and that it is followed by the words "or any other unforeseen event or accident." Theft without violence cannot be considered as an unforeseen event or accident. I consider that the context in any case would prevent the word "robbery" from being construed as synonymous with theft without violence.

On the evidence should the defendant Railway Company be held liable for the loss of the package, as a loss attributable to wilful neglect on its part or on the part of its servants? The decision of the previous question disposes of the plea that there cannot have been wilful neglect within the meaning of the Risk Note. But the question remains whether on the facts such wilful neglect is proved. The established facts are that the package must have been stolen on the Bengal and North Western Railway line between Itiathok and Gonda, and that it was probably stolen when the train was brought to a stop by an inter-station signal or when it was travelling slowly and that the wagon containing the consignment was only secured by a sealed label and by no lock. On these facts the lower Court found wilful negligence established and as a question of fact. On behalf of the appellant Railway Company it is not urged that the wagon door could not have been more securely fastened, but it is urged that the securing of wagons by locks is a practical impossibility for various reasons and has been proved such by trial. I will assume, (without admitting in the absence of evidence on the point) that the Railway could not introduce the use of locks universally without dislocation of their arrangements for transfer of packages or without incurring expense inconsistent with the present rules for carriage. But if this is so, I consider that this impossibility may furnish a case for alteration of the law or for variation of the terms of the Risk Note (used in this case), but it will furnish no defence to the present claim. Wilful neglect as used in the Risk Note may be taken to be failure of a person to take any reasonable measures that he was aware or should have been aware were likely to lessen the risk of loss of a consignment or a portion of it. see the remarks of Lord Coleridge in R. v. Downs (8). Now it may make all the difference what measures are reasonable whether we are considering the total body of consignments received by a Railway Company or only a particular consignment from a single individual. The argument of the impracticability of introducing a general system of locks is based on consideration of the former and not on the latter. It is obviously practicable to lock a single wagon, and it cannot be doubted that if the Railway Company were only concerned with a single wagon load it would secure the doors of the wagon by a safer method than a mere sealed label. I consider that s. 151 of the Contract Act read with s. 148 requires that the conduct of the Railway Company should be judged on the consideration, merely of the one consignment. Section 151 reads "In all cases of bailment the bailee is bound to take as much care of the goods bailed to him as a man of ordinary prudence would, under similar circumstances, take of his own goods of the same bulk, quality and value as the goods bailed". Section 148 defines a "bailment" as the "delivery of goods by one person to another for some purpose, upon a contract that they shall, when the purpose is accomplished, be returned or otherwise disposed of according to the directions of the person delivering them." The care, therefore, that the Railway Company has to take is the same care that a man of ordinary prudence would take of the single consignment. It cannot invoke considerations arising from the volume of the Railway business. Any man of ordinary prudence when carrying a single consignment of a goods worth Rs. 1,000 would secure the wagon by something more effectual than a sealed label. I hold that the lower Appellate Court was entitled to come to a finding that there was wilful neglect on the finding that the wagon was only secured by a sealed label. I prefer in this respect to follow the decision of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Bengal and North Western Railway Company v. Haji Mutsaddi (9) rather than the decision in Firm Bhagai Ram-Bhadur Ram v. Bengal North-Western Railway (10). I do not agree with the later decision so far as it holds that no finding of wilful neglect would be based on the failure of a Railway Company to secure a wagon by anything better than a sealed label on one side. In second appeal I hold that I am bound by the finding of fact of the lower Appellate Court that there was wilful neglect which finding does not appear to me to have been vitiated by any disregard of any rule of law or by any self-misdirection on the part of the Judge.

I would, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Misra, J.—I am of the same opinion. It appears to me that there are only three points involved in the appeal. They may be stated as follows:—

(1) Whether the Railway Company was guilty of wilful neglect?

(2) Whether the word "robbery" used in the Risk Note Form B includes "theft"?

(3) Whether the word "running train" would include a train stopped on the way while going from one destination to another?

I proceed to give my opinion with regard to each of these points.

Regarding the first point it appears to me that the burden of proving wilful neglect by the Railway Administration or its servants initially lies on the plaintiff, but the plaintiff is entitled to ask the Court to infer it from the fact that steps taken by the Company to secure goods against loss of theft were inadequate. It was contended before us on behalf of the Railway Company that it would be impossible for the Company to secure large number of wagons in a goods train by means of padlocks, still more so by means of padlocks which would not be liable to being tampered with. This may be correct to some extent. Indeed it has been held so in many cases, but I feel—if the liability of the Railway Company is that of an ordinary bailee as defined in s. 151 of the Contract Act, it being only modified to the extent stated in the Risk Note, the Railway Company must show that they did all that they could do in order to protect the goods bailed to them from loss or destruction. It appears to me that merely sealing the wagon is not affording sufficient protection to the goods conveyed by those wagons from being stolen. It may be that the securing of the wagons by padlocks cannot afford complete protection against theft or pilfering, but it must be admitted that it certainly affords greater protection than merely leaving those wagons unlocked. As stated by the learned District Judge it was brought to his notice by the representative of the Railway Company present in his Court that after having tried the patent locks they have now invented a system of locking which ensures immunity from theft. If at the time that such padlocks were introduced the Railway Company had taken all the care which it was their duty to take they should have given evidence to show that they did take that amount of care. For instance if they had shown that they kept a sufficient number of men ready to watch the train in case it was stopped either at the station or at any place between two stations, it could be said on behalf of the Railway Company that they had done all which was in their power to do.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the Railway Company in merely sealing the wagons but not fastening them in a way so as to protect them from being opened while on the way they were guilty of what is termed in the Risk Note as wilful neglect. I am supported in this opinion by the judgment of Kanhaiya Lal, J. C., in the case of Rohilkhand and Kumaon Railway Co., v. Baj Raj (11), in which the learned Judge followed the decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Bengal and North Western Railway Co. v. Haji Mutsaddi (9) quoted by my learned brother in his judgment.

Regarding the second question I entirely agree with the view taken by my learned brother who has discussed the entire aspect of the question in great detail. It is impossible to argue that the Legislature in using the word "robbery" intended to use it in the sense conveyed by the word "theft." It is needless to say that the word "robbery" implies violence while "theft" does not import any such notion. Reading the word "robbery" in the light of the context of the Risk Note in which the word occurs, it appears that the idea was to indicate the loss of goods in a manner in which it would be impossible for the Railway Company to avoid it. It could be too much to expect from the Railway Company to engage either on the road-side stations or on the running trains staff enough to protect the trains from violent attacks which one would expect in the case of a robbery. It, therefore, appears to me to be reasonable to infer that when the word "robbery" was used in the Risk Note it was intended to cover the case of a loss of goods which was due to violence.

(9) 7 Ind. Cas. 160; 7 A. L. J. 833.

Regarding the third point relating to the definition of the word "running train" I am of opinion that the term does not signify that the train must actually be in motion. If the train is on its journey from one destination to another that is from junction to junction, to use the common expression, it cannot be said that the train is not a running train simply because it stops either on the road-side station or at any place between the two road-side stations.

Under these circumstances, it appears to me that in the case which we have before us, the Railway Company did not take sufficient care of the goods as they were expected to take of them in law and they were, therefore, guilty of wilful neglect. They cannot protect themselves by alleging that the goods were lost in the way while the train was running, in other words to avail themselves of the clause entered in the Risk Note by virtue of which the Railway Company would be protected if there occurred a "robbery in the running train."

I, therefore, concur in the order proposed by my learned brother.

Regarding the cross-objection filed by the plaintiff relating to costs the learned District Judge has given cogent reasons in his judgment for disallowing the costs of the suit to the plaintiff and I am not prepared to interfere with his discretion in this matter in second appeal. I would, therefore, dismiss the plaintiff's cross-objection as well.

The appeal and the cross-objection both fail and are dismissed with costs.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed. The cross-objection is also dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXIV, r 5—Mortgage suit—Preliminary decree—Appeal—Final decree, when can be passed

Where an appeal has been preferred against a preliminary decree passed in a mortgage suit, a final decree can be passed only after the preliminary decree has been confirmed or varied by the Appellate Court and has become conclusive between the parties [p. 609, col 1]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 1st of June 1925.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary decree for sale of property was passed by the first Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mainpuri on the 15th of April 1921. The defendant mortgagor appealed against this decree to this Court on the 22nd of July 1921. While the appeal was pending the mortgagee applied under O. XXXIV, r 5 (2) of the C. P. C. for a final decree for sale and such a final decree was passed by the Subordinate Judge on the 19th of August 1922. The appeal to this Court was dismissed with costs on the 13th of February 1924.

The mortgagee applied to the Court of the Subordinate Judge for execution of the final decree dated the 19th of August 1922 and to the amount of that decree he added the amount of costs granted by this Court under its decree dated the 13th of February 1924. The lower Court directed execution to take place though the judgment-debtor objected on the ground that the final decree of the 19th of August 1922 was not one binding between the parties as it was obtained on the basis of a preliminary decree which had not become final between the parties.

This is an appeal from an order in the execution department passed by the Subordinate Judge for the sale of property. The first ground of appeal raises the objection that the final decree of the 19th of August 1922 had been obtained before the preliminary decree between the parties became conclusive and so no execution proceedings can be taken on the basis of that final decree. We think that this argument must prevail on the basis of the Full Bench decision of this Court in Gajadhar Singh v. Kishen Jivan Lal (1). It was held in that case by three learned Judges of this Court that the right of the plaintiff in a suit for sale to apply for a final decree accrued when the decree of the High Court was passed and not on the expiry of the six months allowed for payment by the Court of first instance. The learned Judge, Mr. Justice Banerji, who delivered the judgment of the Court reconsidered a decision he had previously delivered as a member of a Bench of two Judges in Madho Ram v. Nihal Singh (2). The learned Counsel for the respondent here desired the Court to hold that the Full Bench judgment only covered the question of limitation and that a mortgagee was at liberty to apply for a final decree either on the basis of the preliminary decree of the Trial Court or on the basis of the preliminary decree of the High Court in appeal. This argument is specifically negatived by the learned Judge, Mr. Justice Banerji. He said "It seems to me that O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the C. P. C. contemplates the passing of only one final decree in a suit for sale upon a mortgage. The essential condition to the making of a final decree is the existence of a preliminary decree which has become conclusive between the parties. When an appeal has been preferred, it is the decree of the Appellate Court which is the final decree in the cause". It is clear, therefore, that there can be only one final decree in a suit for sale and not more than one and that this final decree can be passed only after the preliminary decree has been confirmed or varied by this Court in appeal. The learned Counsel for the respondent further argued that though the mortgagee may not have the right to apply for a final decree there was an inherent jurisdiction in the Court to grant such a decree even wrongly. According to him, therefore, the final decree of the 19th of August 1922, is binding between the parties and the mortgagee is entitled to execute it. The simple answer to it is that the mortgagee does not come merely on the basis of that decree as having been passed in his favour rightly or wrongly. He includes in his application for execution the costs awarded to him by the High Court as well and it is clear that he has in contemplation the correct final decree which ought to be passed in the suit. Such a correct decree has not yet been passed so there can be no question of its execution.

The Bench ruling in the case of Dambar Singh v. Kallyan Singh (3) referred to by the respondent's learned Counsel does not apply here. In that case application was made for a final decree for sale after the preliminary decree had received final adjudication from this Court and the right had accrued to the decree-holder to apply for a final decree. Through some mistake the decree-holder did not include the costs of the two Appellate Courts in his application for a final decree and in substance the final decree embodied the terms of the preliminary decree of the Trial Court. In the present case, the final decree was obtained when the right had not accrued to the decree-holder to apply for one. Secondly, in the other case, execution had once before been taken out of the final decree to which the judgment-debtor had made no objection and had actually paid a portion of the decretal amount. Objection was taken when execution was taken out for a second time and the principle of res judicata was applied against the judgment-debtor, because, to quote the words of the learned Judges "when the first application for execution was made he did not raise this objection." In the case before us it is the first execution of the final decree which is objected to and stay of execution in the Trial Court at the request of the judgment-debtor did not imply an acceptance of the decree by him.

There will be no hardship to the respondent in applying for a final decree on foot of the preliminary decree of this Court of the 13th of February 1924 because the application will still be within limitation.

In the result we decree this appeal and reject the respondent's application for execution of the final decree of the 19th of August 1922. Having regard to the circumstances of the case we pass no orders as to costs.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, J.—The Tuticorin Municipal Council which through its Chairman preferred this revision petition, resolved to require wholesale dealers in grain to take out licenses under s. 249 of the Madras District Municipalities Act (V of 1920) and accordingly published a notification under s. 328 in the Tinnevely District Gazette. The respondent, who was one of such whole-sale dealers, paid the fees demanded of him under protest, and brought a suit in the Small Cause Court to recover what was illegally collected from him. He succeeded in obtaining a decree for a portion of his claim. The District Munsif held that he was not liable to take out licenses for godowns in which rice and broken rice, etc., were stored for the whole sale trade but only for grain stores. It is contended for the petitioner that the word “grain” in Sch. V (o) to the Act includes rice and broken rice.

The District Munsif observed:—“Paddy without husk is rice. Rice is not a seed and does not sprout out. Hence rice or broken rice cannot be called a grain”. If the District Munsif meant by this that the distinction between grain and rice depended on the existence or absence of the power of germination, I think he went near the mark without hitting it. The germ or seed is in the rice. The outer husk merely serves as a protection from water and other external agencies which would penetrate and destroy the germ.

In the English language “corn” which is derived from the same Latin word “granum” as “grain” is commonly used to mean the grain of certain cereals, especially wheat in England, and maize in America, while growing. Thus an Englishman would speak of a field of growing wheat as a field of corn, but he would never include other plants grown from seed such as turnips, clover, mustard etc., under the head of “corn.” After the wheat is harvested and threshed, it is still corn and it is sold in a corn market, but after it has gone through a mill and become flour or meal, the individual corns or grains cannot be distinguished and a substance is produced which is not corn or grain but something else. This meaning of the word “grain” was brought out in a case that went up to the House of Lords and is reported in Cotton v. Vogan (1) Lord Herschell in interpreting the meaning of the words which occur in the Metage on Grain Act of 1872, “In respect of all grain brought into the Port of London for sale”, observed “if the Legislature had intended to include what had always been regarded and treated as manufactured articles, such as flour and meal, as distinguished from the natural products of the earth—untreated except by gathering the language would have been altogether different.”

Using similar language I would say that if the Madras Legislature intended to include in Sch. V (o) rice and broken rice, which have gone through a certain process, as distinguished from the natural products of the earth untreated except by gathering, the storing of which without a license may be prohibited by any Municipal Council, they would have used more explicit language to denote their meaning. In cls. (b) and (g) (proviso) the word "paddy" occurs and in cl. 1 the word "flour" is used. There is, therefore, no reason to regard the word "grain" in cl. (o) as being used in the comprehensive sense of all articles of commerce into which grain can be turned by some process or other. The use of the Tamil word "danyam" in the translation of the notification as the equivalent of "grain" strengthens the respondent's case. A trader who sells rice may be called a grain merchant and his merchandise may in a loose sense be called grain when it includes both grain and rice, but rice is strictly not grain, and the separate entity of the grains by a process of disintegration disappears when they are converted into broken rice. For these reasons I consider that there is no occasion to interfere with the District Munsif's decree. The civil revision petition is dismissed with costs.

There is no substance in the objection taken in the memorandum of cross-objection, that the notification was not published full sixty days before it was enforced as required by s. 249 of the Act. There was evidence before the Court that the Gazette notice must have been published on January 30th to come into force on April 1st, and the District Munsif accepted that evidence. The memorandum of objections is dismissed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree. The main question for decision in this civil revision petition is whether "rice" i.e., paddy without husk and "broken rice" come within the meaning of the term "grain" found in cl. (o) of Sch. V of the District Municipalities Act. In the course of the argument we have been referred to well-known English Dictionaries, such as Murray's Oxford Dictionary, Chamber's Twentieth Century Dictionary, Webster's Dictionary, etc., wherein the word "grain" has been explained. According to Murray's Dictionary the word "grain" is derived from the root granum which means "seed." From this, the inference is sought to be drawn "that an article to be called grain" should have the power to germinate or sprout and since this power is absent in rice which is husked paddy, it is argued that rice cannot be called "grain" but I am not quite sure whether this distinction can be accepted as a safe test because it involves the assumption that the presence or absence of "husk" is the main determining factor in the matter of germination, whereas it is well-known that rice contains the seed which germinates or sprouts, while the husk present in paddy merely serves to protect it from destruction during germination.

In a case under the Metage on Grain (Port of London) Act of 1872 (c. c.) s. 4 the House of Lords had to consider whether maize and oats imported with a view of their being first subjected to a process of ginding or crushing before sale would be "grain" brought into the Port of London for sale within the meaning of s. 4 of the Act. By s. 2 of that Act, "grain is defined to mean corn, pulse and seeds, except the following seeds when brought into the Port of London in sacks or bags, that is to say, linseed, rapeseed, millet seed, etc." With reference to the argument of Mr. Dankwart's that maize and oats sold after being subjected to the process of grinding and crushing might come within the definition of "grain" contained in the Statute, Lord Herschell pointed out in his judgment that "if it (Legislature) had intended to include what had been always regarded and treated as manufactured articles, such as flour and meal, as distinguished from the natural products of the earth untreated except by gathering, the language would have been altogether different to that which is to be found in the Statute." From this it may be inferred that the meaning of the term "grain" should be confined to natural products of the earth untreated except by gathering. Lord Watson stated that "the result of that process was that the substances operated upon ceased to answer the statutory description of a dutiable article." Though the decision was given with reference to the definition of the word "grain" contained in a special Statute, I think the description of the term "grain" in Lord Herschell's judgment is sufficiently general and may well be used for the purposes of the present case also. Judged by this test "rice" which is paddy subjected to the process involving the removal of husk, and "broken rice" cannot strictly be called "grain," Mr. Sitarāma Rao for the petitioner invited our attention to the definition of the word "grain" contained in s. 456 of the Merchants Shipping Act, 57 & 58, Vict. C. 60,

That section defines "grain" to mean any corn, rice, paddy, pulse seed. etc. But the section itself makes it clear that this is a special definition applicable to provisions of the part of the Act specially dealing, with the "carriage of grain cargo." Obviously, this definition cannot be of much help in deciding the present case.

Under s. 209 of the District Municipalities Act, "Act V of 1920, the Council may publish a notification in the District Gazette and by beat of drum that no place within the Municipal limits or at a distance within three miles of such limits shall be used for any one or more of the purposes specified in Sch. V without the Chairman's license and except in accordance with the condition specified therein....." Section 328 states that "Every notification under this Act shall be published in the Official Gazette of the District in which the Municipality is situated both in English and in a vernacular language of the District." That the Legislature never intended to include "rice" and "broken rice" within the meaning of the term "grain" appears to be clear from the fact that in the notification in Tamil published by the Municipality in pursuance of the above provisions of the Act, the word dhanyam is used as the Tamil equivalent of the English word "grain." Dhanyam as generally understood in the Tamil language does not mean "rice" (see Winslow's Dictionary).

For the above reasons I am inclined to hold that "rice" and "broken rice" do not come within the meaning of the term "grain in cl. (o) the Sch. V of the District Municipalities Act. The decision of the District Munsif is right and the civil revision petition should be dismissed with costs.

I agree that the memorandum of objections should also be dismissed with costs.

Application dated 12th January 1923 to the effect that no money had been paid either to the decree-holder or to his Mukhtar Sant Prasad and that the proceedings and certificate of payment dated 6th January 1923 in satisfaction of the decree dated the 14th May 1921 to the amount of Rs. 8,946-14-10 were bogus. Hence enquiry be made in the matter.

Messrs. H. K. Ghosh, and A. P. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for Mr. Naimatullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the learned Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 23rd of December 1924 cancelling a certificate of payment, dated the 6th of January 1923, under which satisfaction of a decree to the amount of Rs. 8,496-14-10 had been recorded.

The facts of the case are as follows:—

On the 27th of February 1919 a preliminary decree for sale was passed on the basis of a compromise in favour of Maula Bakhsh Singh, the respondent, against Ganga Bakhsh Singh, the appellant and others for Rs. 9,904-6-3. Out of the total sum so decreed Rs. 7,478 8-3 was to be paid by one set of defendants consisting of Ganga Bakhsh Singh and Mahindra Bahadur Singh, the two appellants in this Court.

The remaining sum was to be paid by another set of defendants consisting of Jagannath Bakhsh Singh and others. The decree was made absolute on the 14th May 1921. Subsequently on an application by the decree holder the sale-decree was transferred to the Collector of the District. On the 6th of January 1923 the respondent-decree-holder's Mukhtar, Sant Prasad, applied to the lower Court that as he had been paid Rs. 8,496-14-10 out of Court by Ganga Bakhsh Singh, the judgment-debtor-appellant, the said payment should be certified in full satisfaction of the decree and that the share of one anna and four pies belonging to him be exempted from sale. This application contained an endorsement of identification of Sant Prasad, the general agent of the decree-holder, by one Ram Suchit Vakil of Bara Banki and it was presented and verified before the Court by the said agent of the decree-holder on the same date, namely, the 6th of January 1923. Although the payment was only of a part of the decree, yet it is surprising to find that the order recorded in the order-sheet on the same date was to the effect that full satisfaction of the decree be recorded and that the execution record be recalled from the Collector's Court. It is not possible for us to follow this order which was passed by the then Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki, M. Gokul Prasad. On the 12th of January 1923, that is, 6 days later Maula Bakhsh, the decree-holder, presented an application to the Court signed by him and his Mukhtar, Sant Prasad, to the effect that no money had been paid to either of them and that the previous proceedings under which satisfaction of the decree had been recorded were bogus and should be set aside. Another application to the same effect was presented by him and his agent Sant Prasad on the 15th of January 1923. This application was also signed by both of them. In this application he again clearly stated that no money had been received either by him or his agent, that the entire proceedings were bogus; that after an inquiry into the matter by the Court the satisfaction of the decree already recorded be cancelled, and that the proceedings in execution should be started and the property mortgaged, sold to realise the decretal amount. Both these applications were put up before the Court on the 15th of January 1923 and the Court ordered that notice of the application should go to the judgment-debtor, the general-agent Sant Prasad, and the Pleader who identified him and the case fixed for hearing on the 3rd of February 1923. Before the date fixed for hearing Sant Prasad, the agent of the decree-holder, filed an application declaring the correctness of the contents of the application made by him on the 6th of January 1923 and alleging that the money had been received from the judgment debtor through his general agent, Jagdeo Singh, out of Court and that on the subsequent application of the 15th of January 1923 his signature had been obtained by force (zabardasti). On the 3rd of February 1923 the case was not ready for hearing owing to the want of service on the judgment-debtors and after several adjournments it came up before the Court on the 12th of May 1923, on which date the Pleader for the judgment-debtors denied the allegations made by the decree-holder in his application and contended that the money had been paid to Sant Prasad, his general agent, who had authority to receive the amount. On that date the judgment-debtors also filed a receipt signed by Sant Prasad and attested by witnesses reciting the receipt of Rs. 8,496-14-10 from Ganga Bakhsh Singh through Jagdeo Bakhsh Singh his general-agent. This is marked as Ex.-A 9 and is denied by the decree-holder who said that it was a collusive and fraudulent receipt.

The learned Subordinate Judge framed an issue to the effect whether the application dated the 6th of January 1923 and the receipt, Ex. A 9 were farzi and fraudulent as alleged by the decree-holder and whether any payment had been made to him. A date was then fixed for taking evidence and such of the evidence as was produced by the parties was recorded either by the Court or on commission on that and subsequent dates. The Court then passed the order under appeal, that the certificate of payment dated the 6th of January 1923 in satisfaction of the decree to the extent of Rs. 8,496 14-10 under the receipt, Ex. A9, of the same date be cancelled as the certificate and the receipt both were bogus transactions.

On appeal it is now contended that the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge is not correct, that the money was actually paid by the judgment-debtors to the decree-holder, that the certificate of payment recorded by the general agent of the decree-holder was genuine and that the decree should be declared to have been satisfied to the extent of the amount paid.

It is clear that if no money was actually paid by the appellant to the agent of the decree-holder and if the said agent fraudulently and collusively on having been bribed by the judgment-debtor admitted in Court the receipt of the decretal amount, his action could not be binding upon his principal, the decree-holder. It is a well established rule of law that a principal is bound only by acts done by his agent on his behalf in good faith and not by his fraudulent actions when a third person who relies upon such actions is himself a party to the fraud, vide Shipway v. Broadwood (1), Smith v. Sorby (2) and Bowstend on Agency, sixth Edition, page 383, also Pollock and Mulla's Indian Contract Act, sixth Edition, page 748. If, therefore, no payment was actually made by the judgment-debtor and if as a result of the collusion between the agent and the judgment-debtor, a fraudulent application containing wrong facts was put by the agent in Court, the decree-holder cannot be deemed in law to be bound by such an application. We, therefore, proceed to decide the question whether the story of the alleged payment by the judgment-debtor through his agent Jagdeo Singh to Sant Prasad, the general agent of the decree-holder, is correct or not. In order to prove the payment the judgment-debtor filed Ex. A9 which is the receipt signed by Sant Prasad and which recites the receipt of the money by him. He also examined two out of three marginal witnesses to the receipt, namely, Chhedan (W. No 3) and Mangli Prasad (W. No. 6) as well as Pandit Ram Suchit Pleader who had identified Sant Prasad, Jagdeo Bakhsh Singh, his own agent through whom the money is alleged to have been paid and lastly his brother-in-law (sala) Kunwar Hazari Singh, who, it is stated, had advanced to the appellant the money which is said to have been paid to the agent of the decree-holder, Sant Prasad, the said agent of the decree-holder was also examined; he is witness No. 9. The evidence of this man was put before us at great length. We read it carefully but we feel that it is untrustworthy and cannot be relied upon. The surrounding circumstances, moreover, relating to the payment of this money are so suspicious that we do not think that the story of payment alleged by the judgment-debtor is a true one. It seems to us to be quite improbable that such a large sum of money should have been paid by the judgment-debtor to the decree-holder outside the Court. It is in evidence that a large number of decrees previously obtained against the appellant had not been paid off and that the appellant was living in a chronic state of indebtedness. The question which we, therefore, put to the learned Counsel for the appellant was, where the appellant had got all this money from? His reply was that the appellant had got the money from one Kunwar Hazari Singh, his brother-in-law (sala) living in Pilibhit District. We have read his evidence with great care and it appears to us that the learned Subordinate Judge was right in rejecting it. Kunwar Hazari Singh is a big landholder in the said district owing shares in no less than 69 villages. He was asked to file his account books and to show from them whether he had paid this amount of money. His reply was that he kept no accounts himself and the only account which was kept by his ziledars was the account of his income but not of his expenses. It is impossible to believe that a big landlord of the status of Kunwar Hazari Singh could have carried on the management of his estate without keeping accounts. The non-production of account books by him is a very suspicious circumstance and affords convincing proof that no payment was ever made. We might here refer to another unfortunate matter in connection with this witness. The appellant till a very late stage of the case did not suggest that the money had been obtained by him from Kunwar Hazari Singh but contented himself with the allegation that his financial position was sound, and he was in a position to pay the decretal amount himself. It, therefore, appears to us that the story of alleged loan from Hazari Singh was a pure afterthought.

Regarding the evidence of the witnesses examined by the appellant we find that their story is that the decretal money had been paid in currency notes eighty-five in number, each being of Rs. 100 face value. It is however very surprising to find that the receipt (Ex.-A9) does not mention that the money was paid in currency notes much less their number. Absence of any mention of this fact in the receipt put forward by the appellants as evidence of the payment of the decretal amount goes to show that the story of the witnesses produced by the appellants is a concocted one. We may also mention that although the decree-holder, Maula Bakhsh Singh, himself went into the witness-box and deposed that the story of the alleged payment by the judgment-debtor was false, yet it is remarkable that the appellant, Ganga Bakhsh Singh, did not see his way to give evidence. Sant Prasad whom the decree-holder examined as a witness on his behalf also stated on oath that he had not received the money, but the man is thoroughly untrustworthy and we can place no reliance on his statement one way or the other.

We, therefore, come to the conclusion that the story of the appellant regarding the alleged payment is false and no payment was ever made by him. The judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is correct, and we affirm it.

The appeal fails and is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise an order of the District Court, Godavari, at Rajahmundry, dated the 2nd April 1925, in C. M. A. No. 1 of 1925, preferred against an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Amalapur, dated 1st January 1925, in I. A. No. 808 of 1924 in O. S. No. 79 of 1924.

Mr. K. Ramamurthi, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. Kameswara Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for revising an order of the District Court of Godavari refusing to grant an injunction restraining the execution of a decree obtained by the defendant against the plaintiff's father. The Subordinate Judge held that he had no jurisdiction to grant such an injunction and this view was upheld by the District Judge.

It is now contended that such an injunction will come under O. XXXIX, either r. 1 or r. 2. It certainly cannot come within the language of r. 1, for there is no suggestion that the property of which delivery is to be given is in danger of being wasted, damaged or alienated. It is then argued that r. 2 would be applicable and that this is an injunction to restrain the defendant from committing "other injury of any kind." The alleged injury is the execution of a decree lawfully obtained. In order to hold that, that does constitute an injury, it is necessary to hold that, that decree is illegal, for, if the decree is legal, the defendant has every right to execute it and in doing so cannot be said to commit any injury.

It is then argued that s. 94, C. P. C., is wider than O. XXXIX and covers the present case, but I think that contention must be at once negatived in view of the language of the section which says "in order to prevent the ends of justice from being defeated the Court may, if it is so prescribed," that is to say, the Court is given power provided that the rules make provision for the exercise of that power. The section is clearly governed by O. XXXIX which contains the rules prescribed.

A further contention is put forward that the injunction may be granted under the inherent powers of the Court under s. 151, C. P. C., and the petitioner relies on a decision of the Lahore High Court, Kanshi Ram v. Sharaf Din (1). The reason for holding this view is not very clearly stated in that judgment and it appears to be opposed to the principles adopted by a Full Bench of this Court in Gadi Neelaveni v. Marappa-reddi Gari Narayana Reddi (2) followed in Krishnaswamy Naidu v. Chengalroya Naidu (3) and in the case of Joshi Sahib Prakash v. Jhinguria (4). The principle there laid down is that when the Code makes provision for a certain procedure the Code must be deemed to be exhaustive in that respect and the provisions of s. 151 cannot be invoked in opposition to these provisions. Here the Code lays down in s. 94 that the Court shall only have power if it is given by rules framed under the Code. It, therefore, seems to me impossible to hold that when rules have been framed to give the Court power, further power should be given by s. 151. If then the principle laid down in the Full Bench of this Court is correct and I see no reason to doubt its correctness, it is applicable to this case also, and the District Judge was right in his order.

I may add that from the facts put before me here, although they were not considered by the lower Courts, the petitioner does not seem to have much ground for his present complaint.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 4

—Abatement of suit—Rent suit—Joint tenants—Non joinder in appeal—Inconsistent decrees

Although a plaintiff landlord can sue any one of his joint tenants for the rent, where he does not do so, but makes all of them parties to the suit, he cannot, in case of his failure to join any of the defendants or his representatives as respondents to the appeal, contend that as he had the option to sue any of the joint tenants or his representatives, his appeal would not abate.

When the effect of not joining some of the defendants to a suit as respondents to the appeal would in case of the success of the appeal, be the passing of two inconsistent decrees, the appeal would abate.

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Noakhali, dated the 1st of August 1922, modifying that of the Officiating Munsif, Additional Court, Lakkhipur, dated the 21st of January 1921.

Dr. Radha Benode Pal, Babus Bhupendra Kishore Ghose and Hem Kumar Bose, for the Appellant.

Babu Jitendra Kumar Sen Gupta, for Babu Mahendra Kumar Ghose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for rent. The plaintiff brought a suit against 14 defendants claiming from them rent with interest on the arrears at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum. The plaintiff's case is that the tenancy was created in favour of two persons, Amanuddin and Mona Gazi who executed a kabuliyat and that the defendants had succeeded to the interest of these two persons by inheritance and purchase. One of the defendants died before the institution of the suit and the heirs of this defendant were not properly summoned. The suit was decreed in full against the remaining defendants by the Court of first instance. Against this decree an appeal was preferred by four of the defendants, the three sons and the widow of Mona Gazi. The appeal was decreed and the lower Appellate Court decided that the stipulation for payment of interest at 75 per cent. with damages and various other abwabs must be held to be hard and penal and that the plaintiff was entitled to get damages at 12 per cent. per annum instead of interest at the rate of 75 per cent. per annum on the arrears. Against this decision the plaintiff has appealed to this Court and has joined as respondents to this appeal only those four defendants who appealed to the lower Appellate Court.

A preliminary objection has been taken on behalf of these defendant-respondents that the appeal is not maintainable in the absence of the other defendants. On behalf of the appellant this objection is met by the contention that as the original kabuliyat was executed by the two tenants, Amanuddin and Mona Gazi, they were jointly and severally liable to the rent and it was open to the landlord to sue either and that he is entitled now to claim relief against the representatives of Mona Gazi alone. This contention fails on the ground that though it was optional with the plaintiff appellant to sue the representatives of either of the joint tenants he did not frame his suit in this form. Further on the pleading that the defendants are the representatives of the original tenants by inheritance and purchase it is not apparent that the defendants who are respondents in this appeal are all the representatives of Mona Gazi.

A further objection to the appellant's action in not joining the other defendants is that if this appeal is decreed there will be two inconsistent decrees, a decree for arrears of rent with damages at 12 per cent. against some of the tenants and a decree for arrears of rent with interest at 75 per cent per annum against the four respondents in this appeal.

We, therefore, hold that the objection of non-joinder is fatal to this appeal which is accordingly dismissed with costs.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s 74—Penalty, when arises—Ejectment suit—Compromise decree—Stipulation to pay enhanced rent after expiry of term, whether penal—Doctrine of penalty, whether applicable to stipulation contained in decree

A penalty under s 74 of the Contract Act can only follow some breach of contract or obligation [p 619, col 1]

The doctrine of penalties is not applicable to stipulations contained in decrees. Those who, with their eyes open, have made alternative engagements and invited alternative orders of the Court, must, if they fail to perform the one, perform the other, however greatly severe its terms may be. [p. 619, col. 2.]

An ejectment suit was compromised and the compromise decree provided that the defendants would be entitled to occupy the premises in suit for a period of eleven years on payment of a yearly rent of Rs 400 and that if they wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of the term, without taking a fresh settlement, they shall pay rent at Rs 100 per month.

Held, that the intention of the parties was that if the defendants wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of the term, they could either take a fresh settlement or remain in occupation without a fresh settlement on a rent of Rs 100 per month which the parties at that time thought would be a fair rent after the lapse of 11 years and that, therefore, no question of any penalty arose. [p 619, col 1]

Appeal against a decision of the District Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 27th July 1922, confirming that of the Subordinate Judge, Bhagalpur, dated the 28th May 1921.

JUDGMENT.

Adami, J.—The plaintiffs in this case sued the defendants for house rent at the rate of Rs. 100 per month with interest from January 1918 to December 1920.

It appears that some 11 or 12 years previous to the suit the predecessor of the plaintiffs had sued the defendants and sought to eject them from the premises which are within the Municipality of Bhagalpur. The suit was compromised and in April 1907 a decree was passed in terms of the compromise. Clauses 4, 5, 7 and 8 of the compromise included in the decree are to the following effect:—

“(4) That from January 1907 to December 1917 the defendants shall be entitled to occupy the premises mentioned in the plaint and pay rent at four hundred rupees per year (Rs. 400) payable in four instalments of Rs. 100 each from January 1907 to December 1917 and the plaintiff shall have no right to eject the defendants from the premises for that period, namely, before December 1917. The defendants will, however, be at liberty to vacate the said premises at any time within the said period of 11 years on giving six months' notice to the plaintiff.”

“(5) That if the defendants want to occupy the premises after the expiry of 1917, without taking a fresh settlement, they shall have to pay rent at Rs. 100 per month.”

“(7) That when the defendants give up the premises, they shall be bound to restore the premises to the condition in which it was at the time it was first settled with them."

"(8) That the plaintiff shall be bound to keep the premises in good repair during the period of said 11 years."

After 1917, the defendants continued to occupy the premises: they did not take a fresh settlement and held over until the date of the suit.

The defence to the suit was that cl. (5) was a covenant for renewal and the stipulation that defendants would have to pay Rs. 100 per month, if they wanted to occupy the premises without taking a fresh settlement, was by way of a penalty; they claimed the right to continue paying rent at the rate of Rs. 400 a year.

The question in the suit was whether cl. (5) was a renewal clause and whether the stipulation as to payment of rent at Rs. 100 per month was by way of penalty. The learned Subordinate Judge held that cl. (5) did not contain a covenant for renewal of the lease, but that a fresh lease with fresh terms and rent could be taken at the expiry of the term of the lease. He held that the defendants did not execute any fresh kabuliyat, nor did they give notice to the appellants of their intention of doing it. He decreed the plaintiff's suit.

The learned District Judge came to the same opinion; he held that there was no covenant for renewal and that cl. (5) was not a penalty clause. He allowed interest only from the 27th December 1920, when a notice was served on the defendants by the plaintiff.

Mr. Hasan Imam before us argues that cl. (5) contains a covenant for renewal and that the stipulation as to payment of a monthly rent of Rs. 100 is penal. He contends that cl. (5) means that the defendants have the right to a renewal of the lease on the same terms if they do not want to take a fresh settlement, and that the stipulation as to payment of the monthly rent of Rs. 100 is intended only to force them to take a fresh settlement. At least, if his contention is that the defendants have a right to renew the lease on the same terms, if they do not want a fresh settlement, it is difficult to understand what action the penalty would be attached to unless it is a failure to take a fresh settlement. He relies on the cases of Guru Prosanna Bhattacharjee v Madhusudan Chowdhury (1),

Secretary of State for India v. Forbes (2) and Lani Mia v. Muhammad Easin Mia (3) with regard to the question of renewal. In my opinion, none of these three decisions altogether meets this case.

In the first one the real question at issue was with regard to the meaning of the words dosra bundbust, that is to say, whether they meant a second settlement on the same terms or a different settlement. The words in the lease were: "On the expiry of the term I shall take a dosra bundbust;" the lease was in Bengali. It was held that where there is a covenant for renewal, if the option does not state the terms of the renewal the new lease would be for the same period and on the same terms as the original lease in respect of all the essential conditions thereof except as to the covenant for renewal itself.

In the second case the lease provided that after the expiry of the term the lessor would have power to re-settle the land with the lessee on a fair rent. It was held that the last clause was intended to be a covenant for renewal and that the Government was entitled only to alter the rent on renewal.

In the third case the lease contained a covenant that upon the expiry of the term the tenant would take a fresh settlement and that the landlord would grant him such settlement.

None of these cases, as I have said, meets the present case. It is clear from the clauses I have cited that the lessee was given three options, he could either leave the premises at the end of the term, or he could take a fresh settlement, meaning thereby a settlement on fresh terms as to rent, or he could hold on at a rent which was arranged to be at the rate of Rs. 100 a month.

The decree and the compromise were drafted in English and the meaning of a fresh settlement is clear. It meant that the parties would meet and agree to the terms on which the lease was to be renewed. The clauses taken as a whole show that the plaintiffs were indifferent whether the defendants left at the end of the 11 years or stayed on. It was agreed that if they did want to stay, they must either take a fresh settlement or remain on paying a rent which the parties evidently agreed would be a fair one after the lapse of 11 years, at the rate of Rs. 100 per month.

The case is almost exactly similar to the case of Gunpat Singh v. Josodhur Singh (4). There the kabuliyats stated that after the expiry of a term of five years the defendant would cease to have any right to retain possession, but in case he failed to execute a fresh kabuliyat, the landlords should have power to realise rent at Rs. 5 per bigha on the strength of the said kabuliyats and the defendants would have no objection to that. It was held that the plaintiffs were entitled to demand rent at the rate of Rs 5 a bigha and the stipulation of payment of rent at that rate was not a penalty by reason of the non-execution of fresh kabuliyats. It has been sought to compare this last cited case with the case of Abdul Aziz v. Karu (5), but the latter is quite a different case. It was there provided that the tenant should give up the land on the expiry of the term and, if upon the expiry of the term, he claimed a right of occupancy or caused a claim to be put up by any other person, he would be liable whilst holding over to pay a higher rent. It was held that the clause as regards the payment of higher rent being in the nature of a penalty was not enforceable. The penalty in that case was for the tenant's action in setting up a right of occupancy and claiming to be not liable to ejection. That case too does not affect the question of renewal but only that of penalty. In my mind it is quite clear that what the parties intended was that if the defendants wanted to occupy the premises after the expiry of 1917 they could either take a fresh settlement or remain in occupation without a fresh settlement on a rent of Rs. 100 per month which the parties at that time thought would be a fair rent after the lapse of 11 years.

With regard to the question of penalty, it is hard to understand how the clause as it is framed could be construed to intend a penalty. There was no obligation on the defendants to occupy the house or to take a fresh settlement and a penalty under s. 74 of the Contract Act will only follow some breach of contract or obligation. There is no obligation in the present case. Mr Hasan Imam has relied on the case of John Pierpont Morgan v. Ramjee Ram (6), where it was held that where a lease contains a stipulation that the lessee shall pay mesne profits at an unduly high rate on failure to give up the land, which formed the subject-matter of the lease on the expiry of the term, the Court has power to alter the rate agreed upon as being in the nature of a penalty, but in that case there was an obligation for the tenant to leave at the end of the term and the penalty was to cover any action of the raiyat in refusing to give up the land on the ground that he had an occupancy right.

However, in the present case it has to be remembered that cl. (5) forms part of a decree, and I need only refer to the case of Shirekuli Timapa Hegda v. Mahabliya (7). It was there held that the doctrine of penalties was not applicable to stipulations contained in decrees. In that judgment Birdwood, J., cited the following remarks made by West, J., in the case of Balprasad v. Dharnidhar Sakhamam (8):—"The principles which govern the enforcement of contracts and their modification, when justice requires it, do not apply to decrees which, as they are framed, embody and express such justice as the Court is capable of conceiving and administering. The admission of a power to vary the requirements of a decree once passed would introduce uncertainty and confusion. No one's rights would, at any stage, be so established that they could be depended on, and the Courts would be overwhelmed with applications for the modification, on equitable principles, of orders made on a full consideration of the cases which they were meant to terminate. It is obvious that such a state of things would not be far removed from a judicial chaos; and as ordinary decrees are thus unchangeable, so we think are those in which through a special provision for the convenience of parties, their own disposals of their disputes are embodied. The doctrine of penalties is not applicable to such a class of cases, and those who, with their eyes open have made alternative engagements and invited alternative orders of the Court, must, if they fail to perform the one, perform the other, however greatly severe its terms may be."

The defendants, therefore, cannot but forward the doctrine of penalties in the present case considering that they held their premises under the terms of the compromise embodied in the decree.

With regard to the question of interest which forms the subject of the cross-appeal, in my opinion, the learned District Judge was quite correct in disallowing interest previous to the 27th December 1920 not because the interest should be reckoned only from the date of notice but because the increase in the rent is so large that I think it is only fair that the defendants should not be called upon to pay more by way of interest.

I would dismiss the appeal and cross-appeal with costs.

Mr. G. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Plaintiffs.

Mr. N. Rajagopalan, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by the defendants, for bringing the decree into conformity with the judgment and for making the Official Assignee pay the costs of the action personally and for other relief. In my judgment * I held that the defendants were entitled to the costs of the action. Mr Rajagopalan, who appears for the defendants, contends that the decree is not in conformity with the judgment, inasmuch as the decree contains the words, "from and out of the estate of the first plaintiffs, adjudicated insolvents in his hands." It is urged that when the Official Assignee is a party to a suit, the proper order to make is to make him pay the costs personally. Mr Rajagopalan relies upon Borneman v. Wilson (1), London School Board v. Wall (2), Hill v. Cooke Hill (3) and also In re Suresh Chunder Gooyee (4). These cases do not support the contention of the defendants. It is in the discretion of the Court, which decides the case, to direct the Official Assignee, or the trustee in bankruptcy, to pay the costs personally. If the action is by the insolvents and the Official Assignee continues the action, knowing that the action is wholly unsustainable, or that in the conduct of the action he is guilty of any conduct, which a prudent man would not be a party to, then it would be open to the Court, to direct the Official Assignee, to pay the costs of the action personally. But where there is a bona fide dispute and where the facts are such that it would not be easy to decide, whether the bankrupt has a good case or not, the Official Assignee if he acts bona fide, should not be made to pay the costs personally, that is, out of his pocket; but he is entitled to have an order made, to pay the costs out of the estate. In this case, there was a bona fide dispute and the question was not free from difficulty. After a protracted argument, I came to the conclusion that the plaintiffs were not entitled to succeed in the action. That being so, I think the Official Assignee was well advised in continuing the suit, after the plaintiffs became insolvent; and this is not a fit case in which the Official Assignee should be directed to pay the costs of the action personally. In this connection, I may refer to a case reported in In re Williams & Co., Ex parte Official Receiver (5). When I delivered my judgment, I did not intend that the Official Assignee should pay the costs personally. The decree, as drawn up, is correct; but the costs of the defendants should be paid, out of the estate and they should not be asked to rank as

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss 39, 42, 46—Transfer of decree for execution—Court to which decree transferred, whether can issue precept

A Court to which a decree has been transferred for execution is not competent to issue a precept under s 46 of the C P C

Mr. Pahlajsing B. Advani, for the Applicant

ORDER.—This decree has been transferred by the Bombay High Court to this Court for execution. The judgment creditors have obtained attachment of certain debts and certain moveable property within the ordinary jurisdiction of this Court. They have upto now realized nothing. On November 27, 1924, they obtained a precept from this Court for attachment of certain immoveable properties at Shikarpur outside the ordinary jurisdiction of this Court. This order was passed under a misapprehension as to the nature of the decree and the effect of s. 46, C. P. C. The period for which the precept was in force has expired. The judgment-creditors have repeated their application for a fresh precept.

Section 46, C. P. C., enables a judgment-creditor to apply for a precept to "the Court which passed the decree" Admittedly this Court has not passed the decree. It is urged that this section is to be read with s. 42 of the Code which confers on this Court in executing this decree the same powers as the original Court and the issue of a precept is only a step in execution of the decree. I am not prepared to hold that s. 42 of the Code is intended to enlarge the scope of s. 46 or that sufficient reasons exist for deviating from the ordinary rules of construction of interpreting this section literally. The provisions of s. 46 have for the first time been introduced in the Code of 1908, and are intended to provide for interim attachment of the property of the judgment-debtor pending the transfer of the decree to the Court within whose jurisdiction such property is. The Bombay High Court which passed the decree and not this Court, is competent to order this decree to be transferred to the Shikarpur Court for execution. The fact that the decree has been transferred to this Court for execution has not deprived the Bombay High Court of its powers either to act under s. 46, C. P. C., or to issue simultaneous execution within its own jurisdiction or even to order the transfer of this decree to the Shikarpur Court for simultaneous execution. There is no prejudice to the judgment-creditors in being required to apply for a precept to the High Court of Bombay.

The literal meaning to be attached to the words "the Court which passed the decree" is not repugnant to the general purview of the Act and there is nothing to show that it was intended to be enlarged by reading into the section the words "or the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution." I must, therefore, reject this application as incompetent.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), s 28—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O VII, r 10—District Munsif exercising small cause jurisdiction, whether bound by judicial order of District Judge on appeal from Revenue Court—Order of District Judge holding suit as cognisable by Civil Court, effect of

A District Munsif acting as a Small Cause Court Judge is subject to the administrative control of the District Court under s 28 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but he is not bound by an order of the District Judge passed in his judicial capacity on an appeal from a Revenue Court.

Where, therefore, a District Judge on appeal from a Revenue Court holds that a suit is cognisable by the Civil Court, and in pursuance of such order the plaint is presented in the Court of a District Munsif on the small cause side, the latter is not bound by the order of the District Judge, and is at liberty to hold that the suit is not cognisable by a Civil Court [p. 622, col. 2.]

Case stated under rr. 1 and 6 of O. XLVI of Act V of 1908 by the District Munsif, Negapatam, in S. C. No. 159 of 1924 on his file for the orders of the High Court on the point whether said Small Cause Suit No. 109 of 1924 is triable by the District Munsif in pursuance of the order of the District Court, East Tanjore, at Negapatam, when that District Munsif's Court had already held that it had no jurisdiction to try the said suit.

Mr. R. Kuppusami Aiyar, for Plaintiffs Nos. 1, 3 and 7.

Mr. V. K. Srinivasa Aiyangar, for the Defendant.

JUDGMENT.—This is a reference by the District Munsif of Negapatam under O. XLVI, rr. 1 and 6 of the C. P. C., and the question referred is in these terms:—

"Is not this Court competent to proceed with the trial of this suit in pursuance of the order of the District Court in C. M. A. No. 101 of 1923 preferred against the order of the Revenue Divisional Officer when this Court on its small cause side had already held that it had no jurisdiction to try this suit."

The suit was brought in the District Munsif's Court on its small cause side by the trustees of Nagore Durga for rent. The defendant contended that the property in his possession formed part of an estate and that a Civil Court had no jurisdiction to try the case. The District Munsif held that he had no jurisdiction to try the case and directed that the plaint be returned to the plaintiffs for presentation to the proper Court. The plaint was presented to the Revenue Divisional Officer and he held that the defendant was not a raiyat under Act I of 1908 and directed the return of the plaint to the plaintiffs. Against this order of the Revenue Divisional Officer, the plaintiffs appealed to the District Court of Negapatam and the District Judge held that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction and that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try the case. The plaint was again presented to the District Munsif. The District Munsif was confronted with his previous order that the Civil Court had no jurisdiction and the order of the District Judge that the Revenue Court had no jurisdiction and that the Civil Court had jurisdiction to try the case. The order of the District Court on appeal from the Revenue Divisional Officer is not binding on the District Munsif. The District Munsif evidently was under the impression that he being subordinate to the District Judge was bound by his order. The District Munsif acting as a Small Cause Judge is subject to the administrative control of the District Court under s. 28 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act, but he is not bound by an order of the District Judge passed in his judicial capacity on an appeal from the Revenue Court. As we are of opinion that the order of the District Judge in C. M. A. No. 101 of 1923 is not binding upon the District Munsif he is at liberty to pass any order he likes, either party will be entitled to move this High Court against the order of the District Munsif and the decision of the High Court in revision against the order of the District Munsif will bind the District Munsif as well as the District Court. It is not necessary that the question referred to us should be answered at this stage. The papers will be returned to the District Munsif.

In a suit to recover compensation from a Railway Company for the non-delivery of articles of special value, consigned to the Company for carriage the latter can claim protection under s. 75 of the Railways Act only if it is proved that the articles have been lost. If the articles are still in the possession of the Railway Administration and it fails to deliver the articles, it cannot take advantage of the provisions of s. 75. [p. 623, cols. 1 & 2.]

Where, however, the suit is brought not against the Railway to which the goods were delivered, but against a Railway over whose system they had subsequently to be carried, the suit is maintainable, under s. 80 of the Railways Act, only on the assumption that the goods have been lost while in the custody of such Railway, and the latter is, therefore, entitled to claim the protection of s. 75 of the Act, without any further proof of the loss of the goods [p 623, col. 2, p. 624, col 1]

When goods delivered to a Railway Company for carriage are not forthcoming for delivery at the destination and their whereabouts are not known, it must be assumed that they have been lost [p 624, col. 1]

Civil revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Agra, dated the 14th of March 1925.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Applicant.

Mr. Ladli Prasad Zutshi, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision by a plaintiff firm whose suit against the East Indian Railway Company has been dismissed by a learned Judge of the Small Cause Court.

It appears that a consignment of glass bangles consisting of six bundles was sent to the address of the plaintiff from Wadi Bunder in Bombay for delivery at Ferozabad. Out of the six bundles only four were delivered. It was with respect to the two bundles not delivered that the suit was brought for compensation.

The learned Judge found that at the Tundla Railway Station, the goods had been handed over to the East Indian Railway Company and that, therefore, the East Indian Railway Company would be responsible for the compensation. He, however, held that glass bangles of the value consigned were, under the law liable to be insured for their safe conveyance and that there being no insurance and there being no declaration of the value and the contents of the bundles the defendants were not liable.

No evidence has been adduced by the respondents to prove that the two bundles out of six were actually lost by them. That being the case, the learned Counsel for the applicants contends that it is quite possible that the two bundles are still in the custody and possession of the respondents and that unless and until they prove that the bundles have been lost, they cannot take advantage of the rule that they are not responsible for the loss of those articles which should have been insured, but which have not been insured. There can be no doubt that if the articles be still in the possession of the Railway Administration and if they have failed to deliver the articles in their possession they cannot take advantage of s. 75 of the Railways Act. It is only when the articles have been lost by them that the respondents can claim protection under s. 75 of the Railways Act.

In answer to this contention the learned Counsel for the respondents has pointed out that it must be taken that the goods have been lost while in transit on the Railway of the defendants as otherwise he contends, the suit would not at all be maintainable against the respondents. It is conceded on behalf of the applicant that the plaint was wrong in the statements it contained, viz., the goods had been handed over to the East Indian Railway Administration at Bombay. As a matter of fact, the Railway Administration to whom the goods were handed over was the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. East Indian Railway were, therefore, not a contracting party with the plaintiff firm. Under s. 80 of the Railways Act a suit can be brought for compensation for loss of goods against either the party to whom they were delivered for conveyance or the party on whose Railway the loss occurred. East Indian Railway not being the contracting party can be held responsible only on the ground that it was on their Railway that the loss of the goods occurred. It is urged that if the respondents are to be held liable they can be held liable only on the assumption that the goods were lost while on their Railway. The case of G. I. P. Railway v. Sham Manohar (1) has been cited in support of this view.

In my opinion, the contention of the learned Counsel for the respondents is sound. On behalf of the applicants it has been urged that supposing there was a misdelivery of the goods by the East Indian Railway at Ferozabad, that Administration could be held liable under s. 80 of the Railways Act. I am not prepared to express any opinion on the hypothetical case put before me by the learned Counsel for the applicants. It may be that misdelivery of property by East Indian Railway would make them liable under s. 80 of the Railways Act. But even then the loss would be loss by the Railway Company although it would also be a loss to the owner. To give the word "loss" its plain meaning, when a certain article delivered to the Railway Company is not forthcoming for delivery at the destination and its whereabouts are not known one would say that the article has been lost. In order to make East Indian Railway Company liable the plaintiffs must allege that the goods were lost by something done by or by some neglect of the East Indian Railway Administration. If that be so, the loss is equally a loss within the meaning of s. 75 of the Railways Act. The loss was of a part of goods of the value of over Rs. 100 and of a kind which was liable to be insured. The result is that non-insurance makes the claim unmaintainable.

I hold that the revision has no substance and must fail and is hereby dismissed with costs which will include Counsel's fees in this Court on the higher scale.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7, (ix), Sch. I, Art 1—Suit for redemption of kanom—Decree for possession on payment of mortgage amount and value of improvements—Appeal re value of improvements—Court-fee payable

The principle of the Court Fees Act is that the plaintiff should pay a Court-fee in proportion to the value of the relief he seeks. That value if possible, is determined in money but where there is no money value or the money value is uncertain, the Act provides rules according to which the valuation shall be made. [p. 625, col. 1]

The value of an appeal is not in all cases the value of the suit as originally filed, but may be the value of the relief granted by the decree which the appellant wishes to get rid of. [p. 625, col. 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Phillips, J.—This is a reference under s. 5 of the Court Fees Act. The plaintiff filed a suit for redemption of a kanom. He obtained a decree for recovery of possession of property, subject to payment of the kanom amount and the value of improvements. In appeal, there is no dispute as to plaintiff's right to redeem but he appeals against the value allowed for improvements. The question is:—What is the proper Court-fee payable on the memorandum of appeal?

The reference has been made, because as a matter of practice, the Taxing Officer has been following the decision in Reference under Court Fees Act s. 5, (1) where it was held that the claim for improvements being merely incidental to the decree for possession, the Court-fees payable was that prescribed by s. 7, cl. ix of the Court Fees Act, viz., on the principal amount of the mortgage. It appears, on a reference to the papers in that case, which was an ejectment suit that the right to eject was in dispute in appeal as well as the claim for improvements; but in answering the reference, this Court held that even where the question raised is as to the value of the improvements, the appellant should not be called upon to pay any fee other than that payable in a suit for possession of land. This dictum is obiter and has not been followed in later cases. We have now to determine whether the practice in accordance with this dictum is correct. The payment of compensation for improvements under the Malabar Tenants' Compensation Act is similar in nature to the payment of money due under a mortgage, for, until such a payment is made, the landlord or mortgagor, as the case may be, cannot recover possession. This case, therefore, is similar to a redemption suit where the amount of mortgage money payable is in dispute. The principle of the Court Fees Act is that the plaintiff should pay a Court-fee in proportion to the value of the relief he seeks. That value, if possible, is determined in money but where there is no money value or the money value is uncertain, the Act provides rules according to which the valuation shall be made. Section 7 deals with the valuation of suits only, except in cl. (iv) where the valuation of an appeal is also provided for, that clause deals with cases where the money value of the relief cannot be ascertained.

The general provision in respect of appeals is Art. 1, Sch I which provides that the fee shall be paid in accordance with the amount or value of the subject-matter in dispute and it is clear from the language that the words "in dispute" must relate to the dispute in appeal and not in the original suit. It would thus appear that the word "suits" mentioned in s. 7 does not include appeals and this was pointed out in Reference under Court Fees Act, 1870 (2), where a case similar to the present one was considered. It was there held that, when an appeal in a redemption suit related only to the amount of mortgage money payable, the fee must be calculated with reference to the amount in dispute in appeal. This case exactly covers the present reference and it is not quite clear why it has not been followed by the Taxing Officer. It purports to follow a case in Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (3) and dissents from a contrary decision in Pirbhu Narain Singh v. Sita Ram (4). The view in Nepal Rai v. Debi Prasad (3) was also followed in Baji Lal v. Gobardhan Singh (5) and Raghubir Prasad v. Shanker Bux Singh (6). There are cases in this Court which seem to support Reference under Court Fees Act, s 5 (1), Zamorin of Calicut v. Surya Narayana Bhatta (7), Reference under Court Fees Act, s 5 (8) and

Sekharan Nair v Kongot Eachoran Nair (9).

In all these cases as well as in Reference under Court Fees Act, s 5 (1), the question of the right to redeem or the right to eject was in issue. The decision in Zamorin of Calicut v Narayana Bhatta (7) has reference to a suit and not to an appeal and consequently s 7, cl (ix) is directly applicable. In Reference under Court Fees Act s. 5 (8) the reference was made in connection with an appeal but the judgment deals only with the question of suits. In Sekharan Nair v. Kongot Eachoran Nair (9) the right to redeem was in issue and it was held that, where the only question raised in appeal is as to the amount payable, the memorandum of appeal would come under Art 1 of Sch. I for the purpose of computing the Court-fee. In In re Garapati Butchi Seethayamma, (10) the right to recover land was in issue in the suit but the learned Judge in his judgment recognised that the current of authority is clearly in favour of the view that the value of an appeal is not in all cases the value of the suit as originally filed, but the value of the relief granted by the decree which the party wishes to get rid of. That this is the correct view is clear from the frame of the Court Fees Act which provides means for determining the value of the relief sought, such value cannot always be accurately determined by the plaintiff, when he files the suit, but can in many cases be definitely fixed in appeal, after the decree has been passed, the value being the difference between the amount stated in the decree and the amount sought by the plaintiff. It is only in very rare cases that an appeal cannot be definitely valued and such cases are provided for in s. 7 cl. (iv). There may be other instances and then, one would naturally look to the provisions of the Act relating to suits in order to ascertain the value of the appeal.

The principle laid down in Reference under Court Fees Act 1870 (2) has been adopted in In re Porkodi Achi (11) and also by the Allahabad High Court as mentioned above, and by the Lahore High Court in Lekh Ram v. Ramji Das (12).

(12) 57 Ind. Cas. 215; 1 L. 234.

We, therefore, accept the ruling in Reference under Court Fees Act, 1870 (2) and find that the Court-fee payable in the present instance must be determined in accordance with the value of improvements which the appellant seeks to avoid. Time for paying the additional Court-fee is extended to 28th August, 1925.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), ss. 5, 12—Court-fee payable on memorandum of appeal—Taxing Officer, order of—High Court, interference by—Refund of excess fee levied

The High Court has no power or jurisdiction to interfere with an order passed by the Taxing Officer settling the amount of Court-fee payable on a memorandum of appeal, which order is final and against which there is no power of appeal, review or revision. Even if the Court is of opinion that the Court-fee levied is in excess of that payable under the law, it has no power to order a refund of the excess amount levied.

Application for refund of excess Court-fees paid on the memorandum of appeal in Appeal No. 206 of 1920.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick and L. K. Jha, for the Petitioners.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed, Government Advocate, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition for the issue of a certificate by the Court for the refund of Rs. 2,427-8, paid as Court-fee on a memorandum of appeal filed before this Court.

The petitioners filed a suit on the 24th July 1918 paying a Court-fee of Rs. 572-8. They lost the case in the Trial Court and appealed to this Court, paying again the same Court-fee as had been paid on the plaint. The matter was reported by the Stamp Reporter to the Taxing Officer and the Taxing Officer decided that the Court-fee due on the memorandum of appeal was

Rs. 3,000 and the petitioners accordingly paid the deficit.

When the appeal came before a Bench of this Court the matter of the Court-fee payable on the plaint was considered and it was decided that the Court-fee of Rs. 572-8 was sufficient.

It is now claimed that by reason of the decision of a Bench of the Court the petitioners are entitled to a refund of Rs. 2,427-8.

It has been settled by this Court in a series of decisions, namely, Ram Sekhar Prasad Singh v. Sheonandan Dubey (1) and Sheopujan Rai v. Kesho Prasad Singh (2) as well as in the case of Ram Sumran Prasad v. Gobind Das (3) that in a case like this, this Court has no power or jurisdiction to interfere with the order passed by the Taxing Officer which is final and against which there is no power of appeal, review or revision. These cases conclude the matter and prevent us from interfering or in any way holding that the decision of the Taxing Officer was incorrect, and his decision must stand. We have, therefore, no power to order a refund of the Rs. 2,427-8.

The petitioners are entitled to some sympathy owing to the difference in the decision between the two authorities and the best that they can do is to move the Board of Revenue to grant a refund or some alleviation in the matter.

The application is rejected.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Kistna at Masulipatam, in A S. No. 122 of 1918, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in O S No 83 of 1916

Mr. K. Krishnamachariar, for the Appellants

Mr. K. Venkataswami Naidu, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this second appeal is whether the suit is barred by limitation. The plaintiffs are the sons of Venkayya Garu and sue the defendants who are the members of the Committee called Sri Kannika Parameswari Visyam Chetty Venkataratnam Hindu High School Committee for a certain sum alleged to be due to the plaintiffs. The Subordinate Judge gave a decree in favour of the plaintiffs. On appeal the District Judge at Masulipatam dismissed the suit on the ground that it was barred by limitation

The defendants who are the members of the Sri Kannika Parameswari Visyam Chetty Venkataratnam Hindu High School Committee, took over the management of the Hindu High School at Bezwada with all its assets and liabilities from another Committee called Sri Kannika Parameswari Hindu High School Committee in November 1915. Both the Committees were registered under the Registration of Societies Act, 1860 Venkayya advanced considerable sums of money for the upkeep of the school and for certain buildings connected with the school and the committee of the school authorised two of its members to execute a promissory-note in his favour for the amount due. Exhibit E was executed on 18th November 1913. The suit was filed on 14th November 1916. The promissory note was found to be invalid as it was made payable to bearer. The plaintiffs rely upon s. 19 of the Limitation Act and wish to treat Ex. E as an acknowledgment in writing and signed by the agent of the debtors duly authorised in their behalf. The contention of Mr. Varadachariar for the respondents is that the executants of Ex. E were not authorised to make an acknowledgment under s. 19 of the Limitation Act. Exhibit D-3 which is dated 17th November 1917, he contends is not an acknowledgment, for it only authorises two members of the Committee to execute a promissory-note. D-3 is the resolution of the Committee authorising the President and the Secretary and a member of the Committee (Gopal Rao) to execute a promissory-note for the sum of Rs 3,500 to Venkayya Pantulu. D-3 is not an acknowledgment of liability. In pursuance of the authority Ex. E was executed on 18th November 1913. Exhibit E, therefore, is an acknowledgment of liability of the Committee to the extent of Rs 3,500 to Venkayya. It is not necessary that in the promissory-note itself the fact that it is an acknowledgment should be recited, the execution of the note itself is in acknowledgment of the liability. When a person borrows a certain sum of money and executes a promissory-note he executes it for the consideration received by him and when it is executed in respect of a consideration already passed it is an acknowledgment of the liability to pay the amount mentioned in the note. It was held in Nachimuthu Chetty v Andriappa Pillar (1) that though a promissory note cannot be enforced as offending against s 26 of the Paper Currency Act, it can nevertheless be used as evidence of an acknowledgment of liability. This case was followed in Natarajulu Naicker v. Subramaniam Chettyar (2). Exhibit E mentions the proceedings of the Committee and recites the fact that it is executed on behalf of the Committee. Exhibit E, therefore, is an acknowledgment of liability within the meaning of s. 19 of the Limitation Act and the suit filed within 3 years of it is not barred by limitation

The appeal is allowed and the lower Court will try the other issues in the case. The appellants will be entitled to the costs of the second appeal.

Registration Act (XVI of 1908), s. 28—Place of registration—Portion of property included in deed within jurisdiction of Sub-Registrar—Intention to re-convey such portion, effect of—Registration, validity of—Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act (XVII of 1879), s. 3—Suit to set aside sale—Relief, whether can be granted.

Where a portion of the property comprised in a deed of transfer is within the jurisdiction of a sub-Registrar, he has jurisdiction to register the deed, and evidence cannot subsequently be led to show that the intention of the parties was to re-convey such portion to the transferor after registration of the deed had been effected. Even on proof of such intention the registration of the deed would not be rendered invalid [p 628, col. 2, p 629, col. 1].

The Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act gives extraordinary reliefs in certain cases which are specified in the Act. These include a suit for redemption but not a suit to set aside a sale-deed. In a suit of the latter kind, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to take advantage of the provisions of the Act [p 629, col. 2].

Second appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge at Dharwar, in Appeal No. 71 of 1921, reversing that of the Sub-ordinate Judge, at Hubli, in Suit No. 117 of 1919.

Mr. S. R. Parulekar, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nilkant Atmaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the decision of the Assistant Judge of Dharwar, who, reversing the decree of the Trial Court, dismissed the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout. The suit was one to recover possession of the plaintiff land with costs and future mesne profits, on the ground that the plaintiff land belonged to the plaintiff. His mother during his minority purporting to act as his guardian had sold the land to one Ningappa, the deceased father of defendants, on August 2, 1905. The sale was sought to be set aside on three grounds: (1) that the sale-deed was a fraud on registration; (2) that the sale was not for the benefit of the plaintiff; and (3) that the sale was of the nature of a mortgage and the amount of consideration had already been paid off from the profits of the land.

The fraud on registration set up by the plaintiff is based on the fact that only a portion of the land in the sale-deed was within the jurisdiction of the Sub Registrar of Navalgund, who registered the sale-deed, and it is alleged that that land was inserted in the deed merely for the purpose of giving jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar, the intention of the parties being that it should be re-conveyed to the vendor. The Judge in the Trial Court said:

"The circumstances in which the two sale-deeds seem to have been passed lend support to the allegation that the insertion of the plot of ground in the sale-deed now in suit was merely with a view to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar of Navalgund to register the deed. Besides Chidambarbhat, who is examined by the defendants, swears that the object of the insertion of the plot in the deed was merely to give jurisdiction to the Sub-Registrar of Navalgund, and that the parties to the sale-deed in suit had no intention to alienate the said plot by the deed, and that the sale to him by Ningappa of the plot was benami for Bhagirthibai."

Exhibit 84 is the deed which transferred the plot to Chidambarbhat, the benamidar for plaintiff's mother.

The appellant relies for his argument that there was a fraud on registration on two cases Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhri v. Haridas Deb (1) in which it was held that none of the properties appearing in the document to be registered was within the jurisdiction of the Registrar, and, therefore, registration was invalid; and Biswanath Prasad v. Chandra Narayan Chowdhuri (2), in which it was proved that the transferor had no title to the property mentioned in the transfer-deed which would bring it within the jurisdiction of the Registrar. Neither of those cases is applicable to the facts in the present case. But the appellant wishes us to extend those decisions to the facts before us. We are concerned at present with the registration of the sale-deed. The Registrar had jurisdiction to register that document, because a portion of the property mentioned in the deed was within his jurisdiction. Clearly, if no property belonging to the transferor appearing in the document to be registered is within the jurisdiction of the Registrar, registration by such Registrar of that document would be invalid. But we are not prepared to go further and say that evidence can be led with regard to the intention of the parties at the time the principal document was registered, to deal again with the portion of the property which was within the jurisdiction of the Registrar and which rendered its registration valid.

The next question is whether the sale was for the benefit of the plaintiff. It has been found that the plaintiff's mother sold the property in order to pay off a mortgage and, from the facts found, it was certainly desirable in the interests of the plaintiff that the mortgage should be paid off, as the profits of the land mortgaged were more than the interest on the mortgage, provided they could be realized.

The appellant, however, objects to the payment made by his mother as being excessive. There is no evidence that it was excessive, as the appellant took no steps to prove that on a proper mortgage account being taken the amount paid by the plaintiff's mother was too much. Evidence was called to show that certain tenants had paid full rent to the mortgagee between 1902 and 1905. As the Judge remarks, they could not produce the receipts of such payment. However, that may be, the onus would certainly lie on the appellant, if he seeks to dispute his mother's action to prove that she had over-paid the mortgagee. But even then that would not affect the position of a bona fide purchaser for value. It would be sufficient for him to inquire whether there was, as a matter of fact a mortgage to be paid off. He would not be bound to follow the purchase money, and ascertain that it was properly disposed of by the plaintiff's guardian.

The last point urged by the plaintiff was that the sale by his mother was of the nature of a mortgage. That question was ruled out by the Trial Judge on the ground that the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act did not apply at the date of the sale-deed, relying on the decision in Chanbasayya v Chennappagavda (3). Since the decision of the Appellate Court in this case, the decision in Chanbasayya v. Chennappagavda (3) was overruled by a decision of the Full Bench. Therefore, there was no objection to the plaintiff's contention that he should be allowed to prove that the sale was in reality a mortgage transaction between his mother and the purchaser if the suit was one in which the question could be raised. But this is not a suit for redemption. This is a suit to set aside a sale-deed. Therefore, this is not a suit falling within the class of suits specified in the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act, and the plaintiff is not entitled to take advantage of its provisions. As pointed out in Bachu v. Bickchand Jomal (4) the Dekkhan Agriculturists' Relief Act gives extraordinary reliefs in certain cases which are specified in the Act. These include a suit for redemption. As this is not a suit for redemption, any relief granted by the Act is not open to the plaintiff. The appeal, therefore, fails and must be dismissed with costs.

Mesne profits, decree for—Ascertainment of mesne profits, application for, nature of—Dismissal of application, legality of—Limitation

An application for the ascertainment of mesne profits is an application in the suit itself and the law of limitation has no application to it, so long as the suit is a pending suit [p. 631, col. 1].

Where a claim for mesne profits has been decreed, an application for ascertainment of mesne profits cannot be dismissed, inasmuch as the dismissal of the application would amount to a dismissal of the suit which has already been decreed [ibid].

Appeal against a decision of the Subordinate Judge, Hazaribagh, dated the 21st January 1922.

Messrs. Sultan Ahmed and S. N. Dutt, for the Appellants.

Messrs S. M. Mullick and B. C. De, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Das, J.—On the 25th August 1915 the Ramgarh Raj obtained a decree for possession of certain properties, for mesne profits up to the date of the decree "at the rate of the rent fixed in the lease with interest thereon at the rate specified in the said lease" and for subsequent profits "at the full rate recoverable under the law." The Ramgarh Raj obtained possession of the properties on the 22nd February 1916 and it, therefore, became entitled to mesne profits at the rate of rent up to the 25th August 1915 and at the full rate from the 25th August 1915 to the 22nd February 1916.

On the 23rd December 1915 the Raj presented an application for execution claiming Rs. 2,866 14-0 mesne profits for eleven years up to the date of the decree and Rs. 1,069-11-9 as mesne profits from the date of the decree up to the 23rd December, 1915. The application was presented as a simple application for execution of the decree, the Raj and its legal advisers having overlooked the fact that under the C. P. C. of 1908 ascertainment of mesne profits was a proceeding in the suit itself. Certain proceedings were taken and certain properties of the judgment-debtors were sold in this execution, but an objection having been taken the sale was set aside on the 8th December 1917 and the decree-holder was directed to file fresh execution. On the 13th August 1919 another execution case was started by the Raj. On the 11th November 1919 this was rejected as infructuous, because certain substitutions had not been effected. On the 7th March 1920 the third execution case was started. The judgment-debtors now for the first time raised the objection that mesne profits could not be ascertained in execution and that there was no application for ascertainment of mesne profits and that the application for execution could not be converted into an application for ascertainment of mesne profits. On the 17th April 1920 the Court dismissed this application as barred by limitation. The Court also held that the proceeding could not continue, as mesne profits had not been ascertained which must be ascertained in a proceeding in the suit itself. The decision of the Court on the question of limitation, was subsequently set aside by that Court on review and that decision was upheld by this Court. Having regard to this decision Fogal Ram who meanwhile had purchased the decree from the Raj instituted the present proceedings on the 29th April 1920 for the ascertainment of mesne profits. His application has succeeded and the judgment-debtors appeal to this Court and they contend that having regard to the previous orders, namely, those passed on the 8th December 1917, 11th November 1919 and the 17th April 1920 the present application was not maintainable. The matter was heard before my learned brother and myself on the 5th May 1925 when we delivered judgment agreeing with the contention of the appellants. Mr. B. C. De thereafter appeared before us before we had signed the judgment and he asked for permission to argue the matter again before us. We acceded to the request and we have heard the parties fully to-day. In my opinion having regard to the arguments which have been advanced before us to-day, we must affirm the decision of the lower Court and dismiss this appeal.

The short point which falls to be considered is whether there is any power in a Court to dismiss an application for ascertainment of mesne profits. It is contended before us by Mr. Susil Madhab Mullick that a decree having been passed for ascertainment of mesne profits it was not competent to the Court at any stage to dismiss those proceedings, it being beyond the power of a Court to dismiss a claim which had already been decreed, and it was contended that if the previous applications be regarded as applications for the ascertainment of mesne profits, then the dismissal of those applications were from one point of view illegal and that in any case they could not prevent the decree-holder from inviting the Court to carry into effect the decree of the High Court dated the 25th August 1915. This view is supported by the decision of the Judicial Committee in Lachmi Narayan Marwary v. Bal-mukund Marwary (1). That decision was pronounced in suit for partition. A preliminary decree for partition was made and all that remained to be done was to carry the partition into effect. The Subordinate Judge accordingly fixed a date for hearing the parties as to how the partition was to be effected and gave them notice, but the plaintiff did not appear on the date fixed and thereupon the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit for want of further proceedings. With reference to what was done by the Subordinate Judge their Lordships said as follows:—"After a decree has once been made in a suit, the suit cannot be dismissed unless the decree is reversed on appeal. The parties have, on the making of the decree, acquired rights or incurred liabilities which are fixed, unless or until the decree is varied or set aside. After a decree any party can apply to have it enforced," and then their Lordships said this—"If, for instance, the Subordinate Judge had made an order adjourning the proceedings sine die, with liberty to the plaintiff to restore the suit to the list on payment of all costs and Court-fees thrown away, it would have been a perfectly proper order."

Now it seems to me that this case decides the present controversy between the parties. The decree of the 25th August 1915 in terms gave a decree to the plaintiff for mesne profits. There was, therefore, a valid decree which was operative and which the Court had to carry into effect. That decree was not set aside and it seems to me that the proceedings for the ascertainment of mesne profits could not be dismissed, for the dismissal of those proceedings would operate as a dismissal of the suit which had already been decreed by the Calcutta High Court.

The question only arises as it is contended before us that although in form the previous applications may have been applications for execution of the decree, in substance they were applications for ascertainment of mesne profits. I hold that if they were applications for the ascertainment of mesne profits, their dismissal was ultra vires and that it was open to the plaintiff to ask the Court to ascertain the mesne profits. It is well-established that an application for mesne profits is an application in the suit itself and that the law of limitation has no application to it so long as the suit is a pending suit.

Mr. Sultan Ahmed ingeniously argued before us that a distinction should be drawn between a suit and a claim which may be involved in the suit. He admits that the suit having been decreed it was not in the power of the learned Subordinate Judge to dismiss the suit, but he contended before us that the claim for mesne profits stood on a different footing. I am unable to agree with this contention. The only part of the suit that remained was that dealing with the question of mesne profits payable to the plaintiff; and in any view the claim for mesne profits had in distinct terms been decreed by the Calcutta High Court and that being so, that claim could not be dismissed by the learned Subordinate Judge.

I would accordingly dismiss this appeal. There will be no order as to costs.

It was brought to our notice that the lease does not provide for the payment of any interest. That being so, the plaintiff will be only entitled to mesne profits at the rate of rent fixed in the lease up to the date of the decree.

Adami, J.—I agree.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Myaungmya, in C. M. No 79 of 1916.

Mr. Anklesaria, for the Appellant.

Mr. Oehme, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—One P. V. D. V. Muthiah Chetty filed a mortgage suit against L. A. R. Arunachellam Chetty. He applied for and obtained an order for the appointment of a Receiver of the mortgaged properties. U Po Lu, a Pleader, was appointed Receiver. A mortgage-decree was passed by the District Court, but that decree was set aside in appeal by the Chief Court, which dismissed plaintiff's suit. The mortgagor applied for and obtained, by way of restitution, delivery of some of the properties but he could not, naturally, obtain delivery of a launch which had sunk. Another launch was delivered to him in such a condition that it was of little value. On the 16th of November, 1922, the Receiver was asked to file a full report. He took time to file his report and when he did file it, his report was found unsatisfactory. On the 15th of December, 1922, he was asked to file full accounts. He filed his accounts on the 5th of January 1923, and after many adjournments, Mr. Ghose, on behalf of the mortgagor on the 9th of June 1923, filed his written objections to the Receiver's accounts. In that statement of objections, he drew attention to various items in respect of which the Receiver was liable to him and also challenged his accounts. He ended up his statement with a prayer that either the Receiver be ordered to pay all losses or sanction be granted to the objector to sue the Receiver for damages. The learned District Judge held an enquiry and on the 28th April 1924, he passed an order directing the Receiver to pay within a month the sum of Rs. 4,760.

Against this order the mortgagor, L. A. R. Arunachallem appeals. The Receiver has also filed a memorandum of objections. The question to consider is whether such an appeal lies. An appeal is a creature of Statute and unless specially given by some law no one has a right to appeal. Order XLIII, r. 1, deals with appeals from orders and cl. (s) makes orders under r. 1 or r. 4 of O. XL appealable. Thus all orders passed in respect of the appointment of a Receiver would be appealable and also orders under r. 4 of O. XL. Rule 4 of O. XL, provides that when a Receiver fails to submit his accounts or fails to pay an amount ordered or causes loss to the property, the Court may direct his property to be attached and sold. No such order for the attachment of the Receiver's property has been made in this case. Mr. Anklesaria for the appellant argues that on default being made in any of the acts enumerated as (a), (b) and (c) of r. 4 of O. XL there is a default within the meaning of that rule and an appeal lies. This argument is obviously unsound. The operative part of r. 4 is the part which enables the Court to attach and sell the Receiver's property and cls. (a), (b) and (c) give only the ground on which such an order can be made. It is, therefore, idle to argue that an appeal would lie when no order is made under the operative part of the section.

It is not necessary to deal with the authorities on this point at length and we will draw attention only to the recent cases. In Ganesh Lal v. Kumar Satya Narayan Singh (1), a Receiver was found liable for a certain amount and he filed an appeal against the order containing that finding. The learned Judges held that no appeal lay since the finding was not accompanied by an order under r. 4 of O. XL. This, it is true, was an appeal by the Receiver, but in a later case of the same High Court, Samhutta v. Bhagwati Singh (2), the appeal was instituted by the party seeking to hold the Receiver liable. The Court of the District Munsif had held that the Receiver was liable only to account for the year 1916 but in appeal the Subordinate Court enlarged the order by directing that the Receiver should furnish accounts for 1917 and 1918 also. The Patna High Court in revision set aside the order of the lower Appellate Court on the ground that no appeal lay to it. In a recent case, Palaniappa Chetty v. Palaniappa Chetty (3) a Bench of the Madras High Court took the same view as the Patna High Court following the two cases above cited. In the Madras case, also, the Receiver was ordered to pay a certain sum of money into Court and he appealed against that order. The appeal was an appeal by the Receiver but the reasoning in the case shows that no appeal would lie even when the party challenging the Receiver's account is the appellant. In Shrinivas Kuppuswami Mudaliar v. Waz (4) the facts of the case are different. There are some passages in it which may be used as supporting the position that an appeal would lie when relief is refused against the Receiver, but these remarks are obiter and were merely what the learned Judges thought to be an application of the principle in the decision of Zipru v. Hari (5) which deals, however, with an entirely different point.

It is not for us to speculate as to the reason why the Legislature has thought fit not to give a right of appeal in such cases. Possibly it is because the aggrieved

In a pending suit a Court has no power to refer to arbitration any questions between the parties to the suit other than those in question in the suit, or any questions in which any one not a party to the suit is concerned. [p 635, col 2]

It is incumbent upon arbitrators acting under an order of reference made under paras 1 and 2 of Sch. II, C P C, to comply strictly with its terms. The Court does not by making the order of reference, part with its duty to supervise the proceedings of the arbitrators acting under the order [p 636, col 1]

JUDGMENT.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This appeal is from an order of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, exercising appellate jurisdiction and in effect affirming an order made by Mr Justice Greaves, sitting in the exercise of the ordinary original civil jurisdiction of the Court. Both were orders propounded in a suit for the dissolution of a partnership, and their result was to set aside an award of arbitrators so far as that award affected to deal with matters in question in the suit. The appellant upholds the award and asks that the orders setting it aside be discharged.

The circumstances are somewhat involved and, in detail, elaborate. It will be possible, however, as their Lordships hope, to state the facts in a summary form without endangering such accuracy as is requisite for the purposes of their judgment.

The disputants are descendants of one Nandram Chamria, and their disputes are to a large extent, although not altogether, traceable to questions concerning the division of the estate of one of his sons—Hardatroy Chamria—whose position in the family with his relationship to the parties before the Board appears in the following pedigree, taken from the judgment of Mr. Justice Mookerjee in the Appeal Court.

The suit, No. 120 of 1922, related to a business of brokers and bankers carried on under the style of Hardatroy Chamria and Company. The business originally had been started by Hardatroy alone. Some years later he took into it, first as an assistant, then as a partner, his nephew, the plaintiff and present appellant, Ram Protap Chamria. The appellant's share as a partner was, in its origin, two annas, subsequently, it became one of five annas. Later still, the appellant's brother, Amlokchand, was admitted a partner with a two annas share. He died, however, in 1911, and after his death the business was carried on by Hardatroy and the appellant together, Hardatroy being treated as possessed of an eleven annas' share and the appellant of the remaining share of five annas. By an indenture, dated the 1st October 1916, and made between Hardatroy and the appellant, it was agreed that this partnership should continue for 20 years. There is no further reference in the appellant's plaint to the two annas' share which belonged to Amlokchand at the time of his death. The appellant appears to treat it as merged in the shares of himself and Hardatroy. This position, however, is not accepted by the representative of Amlokchand's estate, as will later appear.

Amlokchand left no issue but he was survived by his wife the respondent, Musammatt Surji, and on her expressing a desire to adopt as a son to her deceased husband, Hardatroy's youngest son Motilal, Hardatroy, so it was alleged by the appellant, agreed, with the appellant's consent, to admit Motilal to the firm setting aside for his benefit a two annas' share out of his own share of eleven annas. This arrangement, however, if it became effective at all, was almost immediately superseded by an agreement in writing, dated the 16th November, 1916, to which Hardatroy, his three sons, the appellant and Musammatt Surji were privy or parties and under which in effect Hardatroy retired from the firm and it was agreed that the business should, as from 1st January, 1917, belong in stated shares to the appellant, to the son to be taken in adoption by Musammatt Surji, and to the three sons of Hardatroy, viz, Durga Prosad, Radhakissen and Motilal—with a variation in interest as between these three, if Motilal proved to be the son to be taken in adoption to Amlokchand as contemplated.

By an agreement of even date entered into by Musammatt Annardeyi, Hardatroy's wife, and his three sons, but to which the appellant was not a party, an arrangement was embodied with reference to the division of his property on the death of Hardatroy, an event then apparently regarded as imminent. The property dealt with by this agreement in terms extends to Hardatroy's interest in the partnership, although that interest appears to have been disposed of, and differently, by the agreement already set forth. It is stated in this second agreement that it had become necessary in order to settle the disputes which had arisen regarding the rights of Durga Prosad who, unlike each of his younger brothers, was an adopted son and not a natural son of Hardatroy.

In the following month Hardatroy died. The appellant's case, as set forth in his plaint, then was that the business since the date when the first agreement of the 16th November, 1916, became operative, had been carried on upon the basis of that agreement but that Musammatt Surji had not adopted Motilal. On the contrary, she had put forward Keshabdeo, a son of Durga Prosad, as the son whom she had adopted to her late husband. The appellant disputed both the factum and the validity of such adoption, further alleging that Durga Prosad had drawn out of the firm about twenty-one lacs without the knowledge of any of the parties, that he had taken forcible possession and refused inspection of the partnership books, that he was making unauthorised entries therein to suit his own purposes and that he had been guilty of gross misconduct in the affairs of the partnership and towards the partners. Accordingly, the appellant claimed dissolution of the partnership, accounts and a Receiver. He cited as defendants to the suit, Durga Prosad, Radhakissen and Motilal, Musammatt Surji and Keshabdeo. It will be noted that Annardeyi, Hardatroy's widow, is not a party to the proceedings.

The plaint was filed on 12th January 1922. No written statements have ever been put in, but it may, their Lordships think, be fairly gathered from his plaint that the only questions which the appellant, at all events, desired to raise in the suit were, first: whether the adoption of the infant defendant Keshabdeo had ever taken place; whether it was valid if it had; and who, on either view, were the persons interested and in what shares in the partnership, which was treated as one constituted by the agreement of the 16th November 1916; and secondly: whether the allegations made by the appellant against Durga Prosad were, if established, sufficient to entitle the appellant to the decree of dissolution which he sought.

But these did not comprise all the matters of difference then existent in the family of Nandram Chamria. First of all, in the appellant's own immediate branch of it, there was apparently a serious dispute between him and Musammatt Surji upon the question whether the appellant and Amlokchand were joint or separate in estate, there was another as to the rights of each brother in the ancestral or self-acquired property of their father Gorakhram; there was a third as to the claim of Musammatt Surji to certain Company shares standing in the name of the appellant. Next there was a question with Amlokchand's representatives in which not only the appellant but the estate of Hardatrov was concerned namely, whether Amlokchand's estate was entitled to his two annas or some other share in the partnership as carried on prior to the 1st January 1917, and at whose expense. In Hardatrov's branch of the family again there were further serious questions, as to the validity of the second agreement of the 16th November 1916, as to the extent of his widow Annardeyi's property, and as to the rights and interests in the property of Hardatrov, both of his widow and his three sons respectively.

The most striking feature of this second and third sets of disputes in relation to the question now before the Board is the interest in them of Annardeyi who, as has been pointed out, was not a party to the suit at all. Nor can it fairly be gathered from its terms, as their Lordships think, that any of these questions are either raised or foreshadowed in the appellant's plaint. It may well be that some of them would have been mooted in one or other of the written statements of the defendants when put in. But this must still remain in the region of conjecture. It suffices to say that none of them have so far become matters in question in the suit.

After the plaint was filed the adult members of the family appear to have come to the conclusion that all the questions in difference amongst them should be referred to arbitration, and on the 11th May 1922, Annardeyi, Ram Protap, Durga Prasad, Radhakissen, Motilal, together with Keshabdeo, by Musammatt Surji on his behalf, executed a document addressed to Rai Sew Prasadji Toolsan Bahadur, Rai Narang Raiji Khaitan Bahadur, Bansidharji Khaitan, Jugal Kissorsaji Birla and Sew Prasadji Gorodiya, appointing them arbitrators "for the settlement of all matters in dispute amongst ourselves" agreeing to accept whatever the arbitrators might decide with reference to the said disputes and in "respect of the proceedings taken in Court with regard to this matter before this day" agreeing that the "proper parties would make in accordance with the directions of the arbitrators such applications as the arbitrators might think necessary.

The terms in which this document is couched suggest very cogently to their Lordships' minds that it was so far, at all events, the intention of all the parties to it that the proceedings in the suit should become merely ancillary to the arbitration, if indeed they were not thereby to be entirely superseded. And if the application made to the Court had been that all proceedings in the suit should be stayed and an order in these terms had been made thereon, that doubtless would have been the result. But the application actually made to the Court was not of that nature. It took the form of a petition presented in the suit by the appellant purporting to act with the approval of all parties and referring to the agreement of the 11th May 1922, as "an agreement to refer all matters in dispute between them", and it prayed, in effect, that the matters alluded to in the agreement should all be remitted to arbitration in accordance with its terms.

But whatever may have then been the desire of the parties, including it may well be even Annardeyi, and whatever may have been the belief of the arbitrators as to the terms of the order actually made, the Court had on that application no power to refer to arbitration any questions between the parties to the suit other than those in question in the suit or any questions in which was concerned any one not a party to the suit. Nor did it exceed its powers in this matter for by its order made on the 23rd May 1922, although not actually drawn up until the following month, what the Court did was to refer all matters in difference in the suit between the parties to the suit to the final decision of the arbitrators named in the agreement of the 11th May, 1922, in terms of that agreement, with consequential directions applicable to such a reference, the minor defendant, Keshabdeo, being given liberty to appear in the proceedings through his attorney.

In their Lordships' judgment the decision of this appeal really turns upon the effect of that order properly interpreted. It was an order made in pursuance of paras 1 and 3 of the Second Schedule to the C. P. C., and in the exercise of a power thereby given to the Court to refer to arbitration matters in difference in a suit defined by itself in the order of reference. It is incumbent upon arbitrators acting under such an order strictly to comply with its terms. The Court does not thereby part with its duty to supervise the proceedings of the arbitrators acting under the order. An award made otherwise than in accordance with the authority by the order conferred upon them is, their Lordships cannot doubt, an award which is "otherwise invalid" and which may accordingly be set aside by the Court under para. 15 of the same Schedule.

The difficulties in this case have all arisen from the fact that the arbitrators (misled it may well be by the attitude of the parties at the time of their appointment) have not fully appreciated the importance of the fact that some of the questions consensually submitted to them were already the subject-matter of a pending suit to which one of the persons appointing them was not even a party.

The arbitrators did not wait for the Court's formal order on the application of the 23rd May. They proceeded at once with the arbitration, and on the 27th May 1922, they published their award. That award not only dealt with all the disputes above detailed but it is clear on its face that the arbitrators in no way discriminated between those disputes which were at issue in the suit and those which were not. The order of the 23rd May is recited as one:—

"By which all matters in dispute between the parties were referred to our arbitration provided that the arbitration is to be in terms of the said agreement, dated the 11th May 1922, and that the attorney for the guardian ad litem of the infant defendant be allowed to represent him."

And it is clear to their Lordships from the terms of the award itself—and there is extrinsic evidence to the same effect—that in reaching their conclusions the arbitrators took a comprehensive view of the family situation and made an award which doubtless they regarded as just on the whole and as a whole, but which probably they would not, in any of its parts, have themselves made precisely in the same terms, if the dispute thereby dealt with had alone or separately been submitted to them for adjudication.

To illustrate by a striking example what their Lordships mean, they would point to the shares to be taken in the new partnership provided for by the award. These precise shares have apparently no counterpart in the shares taken in the dissolved partnership according to either of the agreements with reference thereto which the arbitrators themselves find to be binding on the parties.

The award, an elaborate document, has been carefully analysed by the learned Judges in the Courts in India. It is not necessary that their Lordships should again go through it in detail. It finds both of the agreements of the 16th November 1916 to be binding: it declares that the appellant and Amlokchand were not joint but separate in estate and—a finding which vitally concerns the estate of Hardatroy—that they are respectively entitled to a five-annas and a two-annas share in the partnership business up to the 31st December 1916: that the adoption of Keshabdeo was valid: while, with special reference to the partnership business, the award declares that the partnership is to be dissolved with effect from the 30th June 1922: it provides for a new firm being constituted as from the 1st July, 1922: it prescribes the shares in which the old partners are to be interested therein, and with reference to that partnership declares that in case any of the partners do not agree to the prescribed conditions he shall inform the firm in writing, whereupon his capital will be returned to him and his connection with the firm shall cease and his share be taken up equally by the remaining partners. This last is the only provision in the award for the satisfaction of the claims against the property and assets of the dissolved partnership of any partner who does not choose to come into the new partnership. The award contains elaborate further provisions for the adjustment of the other disputes above referred to.

In their Lordships' judgment such an award is in no true sense one made in obedience to the order of the 23rd May, 1922. While it would not be easy to segregate the findings with reference to the matters in question in the suit from those not so in question—the findings in which Annardeyi was interested from those in which she was not—it is, their Lordships think, impossible to uphold an award in relation to a suit the conclusions of which were plainly coloured, if not dictated, by the view taken by the arbitrators of other questions between the parties or some of them to which the suit had no reference.

Taking even a narrower view of the matter the award so far as it purported to constitute a new partnership, giving to a party who refused to come into it only rights which were far below those to which as a member of a dissolved partnership he was entitled was not in their Lordship's judgment an award in any way contemplated or authorised by the order of reference.

To the award when published Musammam Surji as guardian ad litem of Keshabdeo, took strong exception, and on the 5th July 1922, gave notice to the other parties to the suit of an application by her for an order that the award should be set aside or modified or corrected by expunging therefrom all passages relating to matters that were not in question in the suit. On that application Mr Justice Greaves by order, dated the 24th July 1922, set aside the award in so far as it purported to deal with matters referred to in the suit. His order, as above stated, was affirmed by the Appellate Court by an order, dated the 19th of July 1923. Mr. Justice Greaves based his decision primarily upon the view that the provisions of the award relating to the new partnership were quite unauthorised and invalid. The Appellate Court based their decision upon the ground that it was really impossible according to the Statute Law of India that one and the same arbitration should be held as Rankin, J., expresses it.—

"As to the matters within the jurisdiction of the Court and matters without the jurisdiction of the Court between the parties to the suit and between them and other persons under the Code provided by the Indian Arbitration Act and under the Code provided by the Second Schedule under the superintendence and control of the Judge who has seized of the suit and of the Judge disposing of business under the Indian Arbitration Act. partly upon an order of reference and partly under an agreement."

Their Lordships desire to reserve their opinion upon the question whether there may not be exceptions to that comprehensive statement.

They are satisfied, however, for the reasons they have given, that the order actually made by one Court and affirmed by the other was, in this case, the proper order to be made.

They will accordingly humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal therefrom should be dismissed and with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Ashworth, J.—This second appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants against the defendants-respondents for possession of, and mesne profits in respect of, certain property. The plaintiffs have been unsuccessful in both the lower Courts.

The origin of the estate in question was a grant by the Maharaja of Ajudhia on the 22nd January 1864 of the land in question to one Halbal Singh. The grant was in consideration of the death of the father of the grantee in the service of the Maharaja, and is called a marwat grant. Such a grant has been held to be hereditary (i. e., not resumable) but non-transferable: see Kalka Bukhsh Singh v. Sheo Ratan (1) and Siya Ram v. Salik (2). On the death of Halbal Singh his widow Musammatt Baijnath Kuer obtained possession of the property. The Ajudhia estate on the 11th April 1913 sued the widow for resumption but compromised the suit after the present defendants, Lal Bahadur Singh and Rampal Singh, had, at their own request and with the consent of the widow, been joined as defendants on the allegation that their father Balkaran Singh had been adopted as a son by Halbal Singh. The compromise was that the widow and these alleged sons of the adopted son of Halbal Singh should hold the property in under-proprietary right in consideration of a rent. It was dated 28th August 1913. A decree was passed in accordance with the compromise. It declared, (in virtue of the power to do so, conferred on the Court in a resumption suit of this nature by s. 107-H of the Oudh Rent Act XXII of 1886) the title of the widow and of these two persons to hold the land as under-proprietors on a stated rent. On the 20th July 1914 the widow and these two persons (as they were minors they were represented by their natural mother as guardian) executed a usufructuary mortgage of the property in favour of one Jagatpal Singh, a real brother of the widow. He has died issueless and the two male defendants claim to have succeeded to his mortgagee rights as his nearest relations. The lower Courts have held that by virtue of the compromise decree dated the 28th August 1913 the widow Musammatt Baijnath Kuer and the two defendants acquired a new and independent title to the property which could not be held to be an accretion to the original estate of Halbal Singh. For the appellants it was contended, and is contended in this appeal, that the effect of that compromise decree was merely to enlarge the estate left by Halbal Singh which was held at the time by Musammatt Baijnath Kuer as his widow, that in the circumstance that there was no adoption of the father of the defendants Balkaran Singh by Halbal Singh, the defendants can get no advantage from the compromise decree, and that the plaintiffs as reversioners of Halbal Singh were entitled to succeed to his estate on the death of the widow, whose mortgage to her brother was invalid for want of proof of necessity. In this appeal we are bound by the finding of fact that the plaintiffs are reversioners of Halbal Singh. No attempt also having been made to prove that the mortgage by Musammatt Baijnath Kuer to her brother was for necessity, we must hold that mortgage invalid so far as it was one made by the widow. Only two questions arise. The first is whether the compromise decree gave the lady Baijnath Kuer a new and independent title in the property. I hold that it did not do so. On the death of Halbal Singh the widow must be held to have obtained or retained possession of the property as his widow. There is a presumption in law that a person takes possession under title rather than as a trespasser. Here it would appear that she had a title to retain the property of the grant on the ground that it was a heritable grant. Even if the heritability of the grant to Halbal Singh could be called in question, it is clear from Musammatt Baijnath Kuer's pleadings in the resumption case brought by the Ajudhia estate that she set up a title derived from her deceased husband. Her possession (and possession alone is a title available against all but the rightful owner) was possession as a Hindu widow. It was only by reason of her title to the property as Hindu widow that she obtained the fuller estate of an under-proprietor under the compromise decree of the 28th August 1913. This fuller title was clearly an accretion to her estate as widow and cannot be regarded as her stridhan. We may note that even if it were her stridhan the plaintiffs might have claimed that it devolved on her husband's heirs, but they have not claimed on this ground. It is established by law that accretions made by a Hindu widow to her husband's estate partake of the nature of that estate. It is of little moment whether this rule of law is one of Hindu Law (see para. 267 of Gour's Hindu Code, 2nd Edition) or is based on s. 90 of the Indian Trusts Act. The rule has been ascribed to the doctrine of graft as enunciated in the leading English case of Keech v. Sandford (3) and in the case of Kashi Prasad v. Inda Kunwar (4). I hold, therefore, that the lower Courts were wrong in their decision of this question which must be answered in the negative.

The second question is whether the inclusion of the two defendants as parties to the compromise decree vested in them a title independent of the widow. They were made parties to that suit and decree on the allegation that by reason of the adoption of their father by Halbal Singh they were grandsons of Halbal Singh and his reversioners. The present plaintiffs were no parties to the suit and the decree. As against them the defendants have failed to prove the adoption or their position as successors of the estate of Halbal Singh. This being so, the plaintiffs can treat the joinder of the defendants as parties to the resumption suit and to the compromise decree as an unlawful and voidable act on the part of the widow designed to alter the succession. It was only owing to the consent and admission of widow that the defendants were so joined as parties. A Hindu widow cannot make an admission in derogation of the rights of the reversioners which has or may have the effect of destroying the estate of the reversioners. This is governed by the same rule as applies to wrongful alienation. A decree of a Court based (without contest) on such an admission is as void or voidable as the admission. A title decree resulting in these circumstances from an illegal admission of a Hindu widow can obviously possess no higher validity than a sale by a Court in execution of a decree procured by an illegal confession of judgment on the part of a Hindu widow, where the purchaser is aware of the illegality of the confession of judgment. It could not be maintained that the latter could be upheld, nor can the former. The second question is, therefore, also decided against the respondents.

I, therefore, hold that the suit of the plaintiffs-appellants should have been decreed.

Misra, J.—I agree with the order which my learned brother proposes to pass in the case. I wish to add a few remarks. It was contended on behalf of the respondents that the deed of grant (Ex. 2) did not confer heritable rights on the grantee and if the widow, Baijnath Kuer, took possession of the property after the death of her husband Halbal Singh she cannot be deemed to have succeeded to the grant by right of inheritance. The argument was to the effect that if the lady took possession adversely and not by right of inheritance she could not be considered to have taken it for the benefit of the reversioners. The words used in the grant were relied upon to show that the rights conferred under it were not heritable. If the rights conferred under it were not heritable and if the widow did not succeed by virtue of inheritance and if she could not in that case be considered to have taken the property for the benefit of the reversioners, any interest that she acquired must be deemed to have been acquired for her own benefit and could not be considered to be an accretion to the estate available to the reversioners. I have considered this argument but it appears to me that there is no substance in it. The marwat grant in Oudh always implies the idea of its being a heritable grant. Mr. Sykes in his introduction, appended to his learned work The compendium of Oudh Taluqdari Law, states on page 186 that at the time of the regular settlement in the Province "marwat" grant was always understood to be a grant which could not be resumed and was always to be inherited by the heirs of the grantee. That such a grant is heritable was held in a decision of the Board of Revenue in Kalka Bakhsh Singh v. Sheo Ratan (1) and in a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported as Siya Ram v. Salik (2).

The deed of grant specifies the nature of that grant by calling it expressly by the name of marwat. It, therefore, appears to me to be clear that the marwat grant which was in possession of her husband, Halbal Singh, by right of inheritance after his death and it is not correct to say that she succeeded to the property in any other capacity than that of a Hindu widow. It is also clear from the written statement filed by her in the redemption suit wherein she definitely stated that she had succeeded to the property in suit in the capacity of the widow of Halbal Singh after his death. If, therefore, Musammatt Baijnath Kuer succeeded to the grant by right of inheritance and if by virtue of her being in possession of that grant as a Hindu widow she acquired by compromise with the Ajudhia estate complete under-proprietary rights, those rights must be deemed to have been acquired by her for the benefit of the reversioners of her husband.

This is founded on the principle enunciated in the English cases, Keech v. Sandford (3) and Yem v. Edwards (5). Apart from the decision of the Allahabad High Court reported as Kashi Prasad v. Inda Kunwar (4) quoted in the judgment of my learned brother, there are a number of decisions of the Madras High Court on this point in which the same view of law has been taken, I would only mention a few of them, Narasimha Charlu v. Srinivasa Charlu (6), Gunnaiyan v. Kamakchi Ayyar (7), Vangala Dikshatulu v. Vangala Gavaramma (8) and Subbaraya Chetty v. Aiyaswami Aiyar (9).

It was also contended that because the respondents were impleaded in the resumption suit and because they were parties to the compromise by virtue of which under-proprietary rights were conferred by the Ajudhia estate it should not be held that those rights were acquired by the defendants for the benefit of the reversioners. I examined this point carefully and on doing so I find that the contention has no force as will appear from the facts which I proceed to give.

On the 11th of April 1913, the Ajudhia estate brought a suit for resumption (vide Ex. 7) against Baijnath Kuer. On the 30th of May 1913, she filed a written statement (vide Ex. 8). On the 12th July she filed an application alleging that the father of the defendants-respondents had been adopted by her husband Halbal Singh and on the same date the Court passed an order impleading the present defendants as parties in that case (vide Exs. 14 and 9). On the 28th August 1913 a compromise was arrived at between all the defendants including Baijnath Kuer on one side and the Ajudhia estate on the other (vide Ex. 12) and the Court then passed a decree granting under-proprietary rights to the defendants (vide Ex. 11). In all these proceedings Musammatt Baijnath Kuer continued to remain a party in the case. Her name was never struck out from the record. If, therefore, by her allegations the defendants were added as a party and if any benefit accrued by virtue of a compromise entered into by them with the Ajudhia estate, Musammatt Baijnath Kuer continuing a party to the suit, the benefit must be deemed to have accrued for the benefit of the estate represented at the time by Baijnath Kuer and the defendants. The defendants were not impleaded in any other capacity but as representing the adopted son of Halbal Singh and if they acquired any benefit by virtue of such a possession they must be prepared to give up that benefit to the reversioners of Halbal Singh who have now been found entitled to this estate, the defendants having failed to establish the title of their father an adopted son of Halbal Singh. I am, therefore, of opinion that the under-proprietary rights acquired by the defendant must inure to the benefit of the reversioners of Halbal Singh and the plaintiffs having now established the said title are now entitled to that benefit.

I, therefore, agree that this appeal should be decreed and the decree of the Courts below dismissing the suit should be set aside and that the plaintiffs' suit decreed with costs in all the Courts.

By the Court.—The appeal is allowed and the suit of the plaintiffs is decreed with costs throughout.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Amraoti, dated the 8th July 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 23 of 1924.

Sir B. K. Bose, Messrs. R. N. Rudra, A. V. Khare and W. B. Pendharkar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant Gopilal Bhawaniram sued some 31 defendants including the present defendants-respondents Pandurang Govind and Bapu Lingappa in the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Darwha, under the following circumstances.

In 1903, the plaintiff and 29 other persons mentioned in schedule A attached to the plaint had formed themselves into a Company or Association for the purpose of carrying on a cotton ginning business and had established a factory for the purpose. The shares of the Company were of Rs. 250 each, and plaintiff held four such shares. The Company was not duly registered, but, in spite of this, it carried on its business for some time. In schedule C attached to the plaint, the alleged assets of the business were stated. The present suit was brought for dissolution of the partnership and for recovery by the plaintiff of his proportionate share from the assets of the business. The 4th, 5th and 6th defendants stated that they also wanted dissolution, but other contesting defendants raised a preliminary objection that as the Company was not registered the suit was not maintainable at law. The Judge of the first Court accordingly framed two issues dealing with the preliminary objection. These were as follows:—

(1) Whether the suit was or was not maintainable under s. 4 of the Indian Companies Act, 1913?

(2) Whether para. 4-D (2) of the plaint entitled the plaintiff to sue for the reliefs mentioned in para. 10 thereof in spite of the above specified section of the Companies Act.

Paragraph 4-D (2) of the plaint may be stated as follows:—

"Besides this the plaintiff begs to state as follows, even if the Court holds, for any reasons whatsoever, that the partnership having been found to be illegal, cannot be dissolved:—The plaintiff and the other partners have engaged their moneys in the partnership, and the partners have transformed the said moneys into the moveable and immoveable property mentioned in schedule C, and the estate thus transformed belongs to the partners, and it was on behalf of the partners that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 took the same into their possession in their capacity as managers on 25th September 1919. It is the right of the plaintiff to get the partnership business discontinued and to recover the amount invested by him in the partnership from the sale-proceeds of the property mentioned in schedule C, proportionately to his share. On 26th August 1922 the plaintiff asked the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, by a written notice, to act accordingly, but as they gave no reply, the plaintiff has brought this suit praying that the property mentioned in schedule C be sold, and that the amount of his share be given to him, or that the partnership be dissolved in the aforesaid manner. The cause of action arose at place Darwha, on 26th August 1922 and often subsequently."

The Subordinate Judge held that the Indian Companies Act of 1882 was applicable to Berar in 1903, and that an association like the one we are concerned with was compulsorily registrable with the Registrar of the Joint Stock Companies at Amraoti, as the said association consisted of more than 20 persons. He accordingly held that s. 23 of the Contract Act applied to the case, the initial contract bringing the association into existence being illegal and opposed to public policy. Relying on the decision of Stanyon, A. J. C., in Akola Gin Combination v. Northcote Ginning Factory (1), he held that, whether the suit was regarded as one for dissolution of partnership or for a proportionate part of the profits and assets of the association corresponding to plaintiff's interest therein, it did not therefore, lie as the partnership was ab initio illegal. He further held that the present suit could not be regarded as one for contribution or for the recovery of subscription for a common fund. In any event as regards this latter point be held that the fact of plaintiff having delayed bringing this suit for some twenty years deprived him both in law and equity of any claim to relief. The plaintiff's suit was accordingly dismissed on these preliminary points.

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the District Judge, East Berar. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court relying on a decision of the Allahabad High Court in Ram Kumar v. Nem Chand (2) reported in an unauthorised publication, confirmed the decision of the first Court and dismissed the appeal. The plaintiff has now come up on second appeal to this Court.

It has been candidly admitted by the learned Counsel for the appellant that the present association became illegal in consequence of its non-registration under the Indian Companies Act. What has been urged, however, on behalf of the appellant is that what the law prohibits is the carrying on of the business but that it is nevertheless open to the plaintiff to press for liquidation and re-distribution of funds. I have been referred in this connection by Counsel for the appellant to remarks which appear in the 9th Edition of Lindley on Partnership at pages 144-145. These remarks are as follows:—

"If money is paid by A to B to be applied by him for some illegal purpose, it is competent for A to require B to hand back the money if he, B, has not already parted with it and the illegal purpose has not been carried out either wholly or in part. Although, therefore, the subscribers to an illegal Company have not a right to an account of the dealings and transactions of the Company and of the profits made thereby, they have a right to have their subscriptions returned; and even though the moneys subscribed have been laid out in the purchase of land and other things for the purpose of the Company the subscribers are entitled to have that land and those things re-converted into money, and to have it applied as far as it will go in payment of the debts and liabilities of the concern, and then in re-payment of the subscriptions. In such cases no illegal contract is sought to be enforced; on the contrary the continuance of what is illegal is sought to be prevented."

It is urged that on the remarks stated in the passage quoted, the present suit is maintainable and there should be a remand of the case. In this connection I have also been referred to the following statement made by plaintiff's Pleader on 20th August 1923, which is as follows:—

"The plaintiff maintains that s. 4 of the Companies Act is no bar to the present suit. Even if it is held to be barred under s. 4 of the Act plaintiff has stated in the plaint that his money has been converted into moveable and immovable property now in possession of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 on behalf of other partners. The plaintiff claims that he is entitled to the proceeds of the properties according to his share."

It has also been suggested that the principle underlying the decision of Prideaux, A. J. C., in Narayan v. Motisa (3) is applicable to the present case. It has been alleged that the plaintiff should not be penalised because the managers of the Company had failed to do their duty in having the Company registered, cf., Harnath Kuar v. Indar Bahadur Singh (4).

As regards the time from which limitation would run in the event of the suit being maintainable, it has been contended on behalf of the appellant that time would run from when the contract was discovered to be void, cf., Srinivasa Aiyar v. Seshu Iyer (5) and Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ram Kumar Saha and Chittagang District Board (6).

On behalf of the respondents it has been urged that the present association must be deemed to have had no existence in the eye of the law. The various members of the association, it is said, combined together and formed the so-called Company with their eyes open contributed money, bought land and set up a factory in which a cotton ginning business was carried on for some time. It is suggested that the members of the association did this with their eyes open and yet failed to register the Company. By so doing the members of the association as a whole deliberately disobeyed or ignored the law and in these circumstances no relief can be granted. In support of this position a decision in In re Padstow Total Loss and Collusion Assurance Association (7) is relied on. That decision was to the effect that where an association of more than twenty persons had been formed and was not registered, its formation was forbidden by the Companies Act, 1862, and that the Courts, therefore, could not recognise it as having any legal existence and the order for winding it up must be discharged.

For my own part I am unable to see that the remarks quoted above in Lindley on Partnership, supported as they are by the English cases quoted therein, can give any help to the present appellant. In the present instance the partnership was for a considerable time carried on in defiance of the law. The money subscribed was utilized for the purposes of the factory and the objects of the Company were fulfilled to the utmost. It seems to me utterly impossible in the circumstances of the present case to assume that the plaintiff was, as he now alleges, in utter ignorance of the illegality of the association upto the 25th August 1922 when he gave formal notice for the winding up of the Company. The plaintiff cannot be presumed to be ignorant of the law and he is as much responsible as the respondents for the breach of the law which has occurred. In Ananda Mohan Roy v Gour Mohan Mullick (8) their Lordships of the Privy Council laid down that the time at which an agreement is discovered to be void so that a cause of action to recover the consideration may arise under s 65 of the Indian Contract Act, in the absence of special circumstances, is the date of the agreement, cf. Bar Diwali v. Umedbhai Bhulabhai Patel (9) and Javerbhai Jorabhai v Gordhan Narsi (10). From this point of view also the plaintiff's suit which at the best would have lain under

Art. 62 of First Schedule of the Limitation Act, is, in my opinion, long since barred. There can be no question but that the present association if regarded as a Company was illegal from the first and that the contract was, therefore, ab initio void. It is utterly impossible in the circumstances of the present case to attempt to saddle the responsibility for the illegality only on the managers of the Company. All the so-called partners must be considered as responsible therefor.

Nor can I see that the attempt to disguise the relief which the plaintiff really claims by calling it instead of a suit for dissolution of partnership one for return of subscriptions, for contribution, can possibly make any difference in the legal aspect of the case. This different description of the relief claimed is only a different way of asking for what is in effect a dissolution of partnership. It has been suggested that Art 96, Limitation Act, applies to the case, and that the present suit even if regarded as one for contribution or the like would still be within time as the plaintiff only came to know of the mistake in 1922. In my opinion the plaintiff must be presumed to have had actual or constructive notice of the illegality from the first and there can be no question of holding that the plaintiff as against the present respondents or any of them is innocent in this matter. From both points of view, therefore, the present suit cannot be maintained. As a suit for dissolution of partnership it was clearly bound to fail, because of the illegal nature of the association. If the suit could be regarded as one for contribution and for return of subscription, plaintiff's remedy is long since barred by limitation. The judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court are, therefore, correct and the present appeal is dismissed. Appellant must bear the respondents' costs. Costs in the lower Courts as already ordered.

Under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., an Executing Court is bound to notify in the sale proclamation all incumbrances which prima facie exist on the property which is ordered to be sold. Where a person claiming to be a mortgagee of such property intimates his claim to the Court and the Court directs that the claim should be notified in the sale proclamation, the order is not open to appeal and cannot be challenged in revision. [p 644, col. 2; p. 645, col. 1]

An order passed by an Execution Court under O. XXI, r. 66, C. P. C., prescribing the manner in which a proclamation of sale should be drawn up on application made, is not open to appeal under the provisions of O. XLIII of the Code [p 644, col. 2]

Section 47, C. P. C., must be read with s 2 of the Code and the effect of reading both the sections together is not to make every order passed by the Execution Court appealable but only such orders appealable as determine the rights of the parties to the execution with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in suit. [p 645, col. 1]

Execution first appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Agra, dated the 6th of July 1925.

Mr. G. N. Kunzru, for the Appellant.Messrs. S. K. Dar and N. P. Asthana, for the Respondents.JUDGMENT.

Sulaiman, J.—This purports to be an execution first appeal from an order dated the 6th of July 1925 passed by the Execution Court. It appears that a mortgage-decree for sale was in execution and a proclamation of sale was prepared and issued in the first instance under O. XXI, r. 66. The date for the sale was fixed as the 9th of July 1925. Three days before this date the respondent Muhammad Hafiz who was till then no party to the execution proceedings filed an application in the Execution Court praying that a certain mortgage-deed dated the 14th of September 1910 in his favour be notified. In his application he set forth the fact that on a previous occasion he had instituted a suit for the recovery of the principal amount due on his deed but that suit was ultimately dismissed. He then recited a passage from the judgment of Mr. Justice Walsh who was one of the learned Judges who disposed of the appeal in the High Court, to the effect that 'it by no means follows from the decision (dismissing the suit) that there is no subsidiary liability from the defendant to the plaintiff to pay interest so long as the principal is outstanding', and then after referring to the judgment passed by their Lordships of the Privy Council referred to the covenant in the mortgage-deed under which there was a liability on the mortgagor to pay interest. He then prayed 'as ordered by the Hon-ble High Court the condition mentioned above may be notified at the time of the sale'. An objection was raised on behalf of the judgment-debtor but the learned Subordinate Judge without deciding as to whether there was or was not any existing liability ordered that 'the notification asked for be allowed subject to the amendment that the claim for principal under the bond of the 14th of September 1910 is no longer recoverable by suit'.

The report of the amin does not expressly mention in what language he made the notification, but it may be assumed for the purpose of this revision that the notice was given as ordered by the learned Subordinate Judge.

The judgment-debtor has appealed from this order.

A preliminary objection has been taken that no appeal lies. I am of opinion that this objection is well-founded. Muhammad Hafiz was not a party to the execution proceedings. Neither the decree-holder nor the judgment-debtor admitted the validity of this prior mortgage. The contesting respondent intimated to the Court that his mortgage should be notified. The order passed by the Court was obviously under O. XXI, r. 66 with a view to include in the proclamation sale an incumbrance to the property. The validity of the mortgage was not considered by the Court or decided by it. Any order passed by the Court under r. 66 directing the way in which a proclamation of sale should be drawn up on application made, is not made appealable under O. XLIII of the Code. Prima facie, therefore, no appeal would lie. The learned Vakil for the appellant, however, has urged before us that inasmuch as this order was passed by an Execution Court and related to the execution of a decree it is appealable within the meaning of s. 47. Section 47 must be read with s. 2 and the effect of reading both the sections is not to make every order passed by the Execution Court appealable but only such orders appealable as determine the rights of the parties to the execution with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in suit. By this order neither the rights of the judgment-debtor nor of the decree-holder were determined by the Execution Court. No appeal, therefore, lies.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has asked us to treat this appeal as an application in revision and interfere with the order.

Two objections have been raised. The first is that the Court below should not have entertained an application from a person who was no party to the execution proceedings, and the second is that it was entertained at such a late stage as to prejudice the judgment-debtor. The application of the contesting respondent was made by way of an intimation to the Court and the Court was under O XXI, r. 66 bound to show all incumbrances which prima facie existed on the property which was ordered to be sold. It is, therefore, impossible to hold that the Court had no jurisdiction to take note of an alleged claim. If the notification merely informed the auction-purchasers that there was a claim being put forward on behalf of Muhammad Hafiz on the basis of this old mortgage, which claim, however, was not admitted by the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor then there was no harm in the notification. On the other hand if the notification amounted to any mis-statement or misrepresentation, that may be a good ground for setting aside the sale, under O. XXI, r. 90, as it would then amount to an irregularity.

Similarly the fact that this amendment was made only a few days before the sale may be a ground for setting aside the sale if the judgment-debtor succeeds in establishing that substantial injury has been caused in consequence of the lateness of the order. That too is a matter which can be disposed of in the proceedings under O. XXI, r. 90.

It is to be noted that pending this appeal the sale has actually taken place and any directions now made with regard to making the notification clear would be altogether useless and futile. I am, therefore, of opinion that it is impossible to interfere in revision at this stage.

I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

Mukerji, J.—I entirely agree that no appeal lies and that in the circumstances of this case I am not prepared to entertain the appeal as a revision from the order of the learned Subordinate Judge dated the 6th of July 1925.

Briefly, the matter stands thus. Kishun Narain held a mortgage-decree against Zakaria and others. In execution of the decree a sale notification was issued fixing the 9th of July 1925 for sale. On the 25th of May 1925, certain persons Muhammad Hafiz and others, came in with a petition that certain terms contained in a prior mortgage held by them should be notified. The decree-holder and the judgment-debtor both objected but the learned Judge allowed the application subject to a certain modification. It appears that Muhammad Hafiz and others held a prior mortgage dated the 14th of September 1910 over some at least of the properties which were going to be sold at the instance of Kishun Narain. They had obtained a decree for interest which had accrued under the mortgage. Subsequently they brought a suit for the recovery of the principal amount and the interest which subsequently accrued. This second suit of theirs failed in this Court and also in the Privy Council on the ground that O. II, r. 2 of the C. P. C. barred the suit. Certain observations had been made by one of the learned Judges who heard the appeal in this Court indicating that Muhammad Hafiz and others might still have some remedy. The Privy Council expressed no opinion. Muhammad Hafiz and others, however, still entertain a hope to recover something on foot of the mortgage and they accordingly made their prayer. The learned Subordinate Judge, after hearing the parties, made the order as already indicated.

Now the question is whether an appeal is entertainable. As pointed out by my learned brother, it is not every question that arises between a decree-holder and a judgment-debtor that is appealable. In order that it may be appealable, it must be a decree and must come in s. 2 of the C. P. C. Be that, however, as it may in this particular case, the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor were at one in attempting to defeat the claim of Muhammad Hafiz and others. It is clear, therefore that, by no stretch of imagination, can the case be brought within the purview of s. 2 and s. 47 of the C. P. C. No appeal, therefore, lies.

Coming to the question of revision I fail to see what irregularity has the Judge committed. The Judge was bound, in the interest of intending purchasers, to give them as much information as possible about the property which he was going to sell. If Muhammad Hafiz and others had a bona fide claim, it did not matter whether it was going to succeed or going to fail. The Judge could not enter into that intricate question. He was, in my opinion, bound to tell the intending purchasers, that there was such a claim and that they might beware of it. The order, therefore, was perfectly correct and it is not open to question by way of revision.

It has been urged upon us that the order was passed very late and that it was likely to frighten the intending purchasers. As may be guessed, the sale proclamation was issued long before the 6th of July, for the 9th of July had already been fixed for sale. If it be a fact that owing to the late notification of the claim, any intending purchaser has been frightened, not knowing clearly what was the matter, it would be a matter for the Subordinate Judge to enquire in a proceeding, if any, has been taken, under O. XXI, r. 90 of the C. P. C. That has nothing to do with the case before us, at present.

I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be dismissed and there is no good ground for treating the appeal as a petition of revision.

By the Court.—The appeal is dismissed with costs. We allow Rs. 50 as Counsel's fees for the respondents Muhammad Hafiz and others.

In a suit by the reversioners of a deceased Hindu to challenge an alienation made by the widow of the deceased, brought after the lapse of many years from the date of the alienation, it is incumbent on the Court, in weighing the evidence on either side, to remember the difficulty under which the respective parties labour, particularly as regards the ascertainment and production of evidence on the matters dealt with in the case. [p 648, col 2]

If an alienee from a Hindu widow before embarking on the transaction has made reasonable and bona fide enquiry and has satisfied himself to the best of his knowledge and belief that legal necessity exists, the real existence of such legal necessity in point of fact is not a condition precedent to his success in a suit brought by the reversioners of the widow's deceased husband to challenge the alienation [p 649, col 1]

Appeal against the decision of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 20th October 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 20 of 1923.

Sir Dr. H. S. Gour and Mr. Bobde, for the Appellants

Messrs. M. Gupta and V. D. Kale, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The twelve plaintiffs-respondents filed the present suit in the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, under the following circumstances. They claimed to be the nearest reversioners of one Sakharam Kolte who died in 1873. Sakharam left no issue, his widow Radhabai alone surviving him. She inherited from her husband a 16 annas share in Mauzas Deoli and Khapri (Nagpur). On 30th March 1892, she sold 8-annas share in each of these villages to the defendant-appellant No. 1's elder brother. A fortnight later, she mortgaged the remaining 8-annas share in both the villages for Rs. 700 to the same vendee, and eventually sold him the latter shares also on 30th September 1895 for Rs. 1,435. Under a private arrangement 1-anna share of the second 8 annas share was taken back by Radhabai nearly a year after the sale of 1895. The plaintiffs thus sued for possession of 15-annas share in two villages named, both now having been amalgamated into a single village named Mauza Deoli Peth.

The plaintiffs' allegations were that the above mentioned sale and transaction were executed without legal necessity and were not binding on them as nearest reversioners. At a partition between defendant No. 1 and his elder brother, the property fell to the former's share; hence the defendant No. 1 and his minor son were sued as being in joint possession of the property. Apart from preliminary objections about the value of the Court-fee payable and the like, the defendants' position was that the plaintiffs were not the nearest reversioners. They further pleaded that both the sale and mortgage of 1892 and the sale of 1895 were for legal necessity, and further that the sale and mortgage transactions of 1892 were consented to by one Gopal Govind Kolte who represented himself then as being the nearest reversioner. Other incidental pleadings were raised on behalf of the defendants, and these will be referred to later as far as may be necessary.

On the issues which arise on these pleadings the Additional District Judge came to the following findings:—

(a) that the plaintiffs were the nearest reversioners of Sakham;

(b) that neither the sale or mortgage of 1892 were for legal necessity,

(c) that Gopal Govind Kolte had consented to the two transactions of 1892, but he was not then the nearest reversioner and his consent is not binding on the present plaintiffs-respondents;

(d) that the sale of 1895 was not for legal necessity;

(e) that the plaint was properly stamped;

(f) that the plaintiffs can only claim an account of the profits for the period following the date of the suit being filed;

(g) that the defendants have not been proved to have made any improvements in the property.

A decree was accordingly passed in favour of the plaintiffs subject to their paying Rs. 160-1-4 to the defendants in respect of the alleged losses incurred by defendant No. 1's brother during three years he had managed the villages on Radhabai's behalf.

The defendants have now appealed to this Court. On the appeal coming on for hearing, ground No. 7 which was to the effect that the consent of Gopal Govind to the sale and mortgage of 1892 was effectual was not pressed. Similarly also as regards the 9th ground, in which it was urged that, even if the two sales and mortgage attacked in this suit were held not to be binding on the plaintiffs, they were entitled to a refund of the amount of the consideration paid by them in the transactions mentioned. There thus in effect remain four points for consideration in this appeal. The four positions taken upon on the appellants' part may be summarised as follows:—

(1) that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that they are the nearest reversioners of Sakham;

(2) that for some 30 years the plaintiffs have lain low and taken no action in the present matter; although this may not amount to technical acquiescence on their part, a less rigid standard of proof should be demanded of the defendants in view of the time which elapsed, and the difficulty of now procuring apposite evidence in support of their defence;

(3) that even if legal necessity has not been categorically proved, there has been ample proof that the defendants' predecessors in-title, before embarking on the transactions now sought to be attacked, made reasonable bona fide enquiry and that this was in the circumstances sufficient,

(4) that there was legal necessity for the transactions in question.

We will deal first with the allegations that the plaintiffs have failed to establish that they are Sakham's nearest reversioners. It has been urged on behalf of the appellants that, as the plaintiffs' claim as collateral heirs, it was incumbent on them to show who the common ancestor was, cf., Kedarnath Doss v. Protap Chunder Doss (1). In the present case Keshao is alleged to be the common ancestor, and it has been urged that the plaintiffs have failed to prove their relationship to him. The relevant evidence in this connection is that of the first four witnesses for the plaintiffs, while the connected genealogical table is given in para. 2 of the plaint. As regards P. W. No. 1 Sitaram, our attention has been drawn to the fact that he described Sakham as the son of Keshao, whereas he was really his grandson, Jagannath his father having intervened. That the witness erred in this respect is perfectly clear and he very naturally made the consequent mistake that Chimnaji and Sakham were real brothers, whereas the real fact was that Chimnaji and Jagannath were real brothers. The witness apparently erred also in showing Damodar as the descendant of Ramchand. On the whole we are of opinion that steps of the kind mentioned made by a man of 60 years, who is talking to events and circumstances which for the most part he must have learnt from his father or others when he was a very young man, cannot be too seriously regarded when made in an exhaustive examination such as this witness underwent. The main point urged against P. W. No. 2 Yado is that, being a plaintiff, his evidence should be regarded as interested. For our own part, we consider that his explanation of how he knew that Chimnaji and Jagannath were brothers, viz., from the fact that his father used to offer pindas and oblations to them, makes his evidence particularly cogent. We cannot regard his explanation of how he prepared the genealogical tree partly from information which came to him from Bapurao and partly from his own knowledge as unsatisfactory. It is particularly significant that in cross-examination he definitely averred that his father Balaji used to take the names of his father, grandfather and great-grandfather, while offering pindas. As regards P. W. No. 3, Bapurao, he says he had prepared a genealogical table in about 1903 or 1904, as it was required for the purposes of a suit he was engaged in, and he gives a plausible and satisfactory explanation that he had been able to find a helpful genealogical tree bearing on the matter in question in a revenue case relating to Mauza Takarghat. We look on the evidence of this witness as particularly valuable and we see no reason why he should be disbelieved. The 4th witness on the point is Balkrishna (P. W. No. 4) who is the priest of the Kolte family. The father of the witness also before him occupied a similar position. It is suggested that, because the witness says that in Hindu marriages only the names of three immediate ancestors of each party to the marriage are recited, his personal knowledge cannot carry the genealogical tree back to Keshu. But if his evidence be read as a whole, it is clear that he has had an intimate knowledge of the greater number of persons in the family tree for many years back. When the evidence of these four witnesses is read as a whole, it seems to us that the lower Court, for the reasons given by it, was amply justified in holding that the plaintiffs have established that they are the nearest rever-sioners of Sakharam. It is notable that the appellants have not only not given any rebutting evidence, but they have not offered even any definite allegation as to any other particular person being the nearest reversioner rather than the plaintiffs. So far as this ground of appeal is concerned, therefore, we see no reason for interference.

We now pass to the next point which has been urged on behalf of the appellants, viz., that although there may be no question of technical acquiescence in the present suit, the fact that the plaintiffs have delayed so long in filing it should have considerable weight attached to it in weighing the evidence on record because of the great difficulties the defendants now labour under in proving legal necessity and the like. Their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonwerree (2) alluded to a similar matter. It seems to us, however, that this consideration cuts both ways. Just as it may be comparatively difficult for the defendants now to procure convincing and specific evidence on a question like that of legal necessity or enquiry, so also the plaintiffs labour under a similar difficulty. We are quite willing, however, to admit that, in a case like the present, in weighing the evidence on either side, it is incumbent on us to remember the difficulty under which the respective parties labour particularly as regards ascertainment and production of evidence on the matters dealt with in the case. Beyond this, we do not find it possible to go. There is admittedly no question of estoppel in the present case nor even of technical acquiescence. The plaintiffs were in the line of reversioners, but had only a spes successionis. Musammatt Radhabai died on 21st October 1920 and the present suit was filed within some 15 months of that date. It was clearly not incumbent on them to file the suit during Musammatt Radhabai's lifetime and, from their point of view, there might have been great difficulties and disadvantages in doing so.

We pass, therefore, to the next position taken up on appeal, viz., that it would be sufficient for the defendants to show that they have made reasonable enquiries as to the existence of the legal necessity, and that if this were established that they were entitled to be absolved, even if, it should afterwards be ascertained that the result of the reasonable and bona fide enquiry was a mistaken one. We accept the principle that if a creditor, before embarking on transactions such as we are concerned with here, has made reasonable and bona fide enquiry and has satisfied himself to the best of his knowledge and belief that legal necessity exists, the real existence of such legal necessity in point of fact is not a condition precedent to the success of the defendants. That principle is clearly laid down in s. 38 of the Transfer of Property Act and the illustration thereto.

We proceed, therefore, to discuss whether there has been proof of such reasonable bona fide and thorough enquiry as the circumstances of this case would have demanded of D. W. No. 7 Sir Gangadar Rao Chitnavis. We may say at once that the high position and attainments of this gentleman as revealed in his evidence would not make us regard the evidence as anything but unimpeachable. It is happily, however, not necessary for us to have to offer any criticism of his evidence in this connection. Not unnaturally a gentleman like D. W. No. 7 cannot remember all the details connected with the transactions. He says when he was approached by Radhabai and others, he had enquiries made by some of three persons, viz., Annaji Chitnavis, Vasudeopant both his servants and one Narayanrao Vele, a head clerk of Deosthan estate which was in his charge. According to the witness the enquiry was to be on three points, the condition of the villages, their price and the necessity of selling the property. As regards the last point it was reported to the witness that the sale had to take place to satisfy a debt due to Hajarin. As regards the latter purchase the witness says that Radhabai had herself told him that she was indebted to Kukday and others and had also incurred losses in managing the villages. In cross-examination, however, the witness candidly admitted that he could give little or no details of the result of the enquiries made. He could not say whether any written report was submitted or not, and he seems to have no correct recollection of the amount of debt in which Radhabai was involved. The evidence of D. W. No. 8 (Harba) the kamdar of the last witness does not seem to us to carry the question of enquiry much further. According to him

Anna Sahib had made notes of the enquiries, but none such were produced. Indeed the evidence of this witness strongly suggests that at that time he was a mere underling and cannot have taken a leading part in the enquiry. Taking the evidence of these witnesses as a whole, there is an irresistible conclusion we are led to, viz., that only a cursory and superficial enquiry was made both as to Radhabai's debt and the necessity for alienation and also as to who the nearest reversioners were. The enquiring parties seem to have stumbled early upon Gopal Govind Kolte, and to have assumed that he was the nearest reversioner, whereas we feel convinced that a more thorough and searching enquiry would have shown that there were others still nearer. We may point also an all important point in the evidence of D. W. No. 7 Sir Gangadhar Rao Chitnavis. He seems to have been under the impression that the debt due to Hajarin dated from her (Radhabai's) husband's time. That was not so. The mortgage-deed (Ex. 1 D-3) shows that the debt was a fresh one and D. W. No. 1 (Bajirao) so far confirms this view. This only goes to show the superficiality of the enquiries made both on the question of legal necessity and as to who the nearest reversioners were. Our own belief is that the central point of the enquiry was as to the value of the villages and the likelihood of the transactions being a profitable one or not from the point of view of the future creditor, and we are convinced that the lower Court's finding in this connection is a correct one. We do not think there is any proof whatever of such reasonable and bona fide enquiry as would discharge the burden of proof which rested on the defendants in this connection.

We now pass to the next point for decision in this appeal, viz., as to whether there was actual legal necessity for the transactions in suit or not. It has been urged in this connection on behalf of the appellants that there are indications on record that Sakharam was not too well off himself. We have been referred to the fact that D. W. No. 2 Madho says that Sakharam worked as Dewanji of Rajaram thekadar of Wardgaon. Again D. W. No. 4 Balaji says that Sakharam, while he was on Rajaram's properties, acquired village Deori and had asked this witness to lend him Rs. 500 or Rs. 600 for the said purchase. We think pieces of evidence like this are not necessarily indicative of a theory that Sakharam was badly off. On the contrary, his taking up work as Dewanji and his acquiring Mouza Deori would be equally consistent with the theory that he was a pushing business-man anxious to make money in as many ways as he could. It has been suggested that the villages in suit were petty ones and were a losing concern; that they have proved a losing concern since Sakharam's death is sufficiently obvious. But we are far from being convinced that this was the case in Sakharam's lifetime. It has been suggested that Ex. P-5 the Jamabandi for Mouza Khapri for 1893 only shows some 21 acres of sir and khudkasht, but if Ex. P-7 be examined, it would be seen that the actual area of sir and khudkasht was very much more. A glance at the totals given in Ex. 1-D-1, the sale-deed, of 30th March 1892 leads to the same conclusion. There are other indications that Musammatt Radhabai, after her husband's death, was comfortably off at first for sometime. The evidence of P. W. No. 6 Lahanu suggests that he used to lend money and had acquired two fields in another village (Takalghat). P. W. No. 7 Sitaram's evidence is to the same effect, viz., that Sakharam had a grain pit and was apparently fairly well-to-do. Even, therefore, if the property in suit were not very large or a profitable one, the indications all are that during Sakharam's lifetime, things went well and probably continued to go well for some little time after his death. In this connection, it is pertinent to observe that, even if the property did not yield a large income, Musammatt Radhabai had only herself to maintain. She seems thereafter to have brought in both her brothers to manage the property—a somewhat extravagant measure—it would appear in view of its comparative smallness. It is not part of our business to trace out the precise reason why Radhabai went down into the morass of financial difficulties. But apart from the very common circumstances that a property like the present deteriorates when, under the circumstance prevailing in this country it is managed by a woman, we opine to the view that one specific cause for embarrassment was that she incurred a lot of expense in connection with the marriage of her brother. This was needless, and was utterly an unjustifiable expense. The sale deed (Ex. 1-D-1) of 1892 contains no recital whatever as to for what the consideration of Rs. 1,200 was required for.

We have already said that there is no proof that Sakharam left any debt at his death in 1873. It is in 1888 for the first time that we find Musammatt Radhabai executing the possessory mortgage-deed in favour of Musammatt Krishnabai for Rs 900 cash borrowed. There is not a bit of evidence to show that this amount was borrowed for legal necessity, and we may remark here incidentally that we would have expected Sir Gangadhar Rao Chitnavis or his agents to have carefully examined this transaction and the necessity therefor. On the contrary they do not seem even to have demanded a sight of the mortgage-deed of 1888. So far as the mortgage-deed of 1888 is concerned, there is a total absence of evidence as to the purpose for which the money was borrowed, or to which it was applied. The evidence of D. W. No 2 Madho far from proving legal necessity in this connection, rather goes to show that Sakharam died well off. For 15 years after Sakharam's death there is no evidence that the widow was involved in financial difficulties, but the indications all are that owing to unwise or unscrupulous management as well as to extravagance she gradually went down the hill, and the 1888 mortgage-deed marks the first prominent mile stone in this connection. We find ourselves in complete agreement with the finding of the Additional District Judge that no legal necessity for the sale deed of 1892 has been made out.

There is another aspect of this matter which demands consideration. As soon as the sale-deed of 1892 had been executed, the vendee paid up the Rs. 1,450 due on Krishnabai's mortgage-deed of 1888. Even had this debt been regarded as falling within the category of legal necessity, is it possible for one moment to regard the method of satisfying the debt as a prudent one on the part of a widow like Radhabai? If she had sold a 10 annas share out and out, it would have been possible to satisfy the debt wholly. Instead of this what was done was that on 30th March 1892 a 8 annas share was sold out and out. Only a fortnight later, the remainder of the property was mortgaged, and three years later as a result of this mortgage Radhabai lost everything except the 1-anna share already referred to which was returned to her. Meanwhile it is significant to observe that the defendants' predecessors-in-title for 3 years after 1892 managed the property. In those cir-circumstances, we find it difficult to imagine that the sale of 30th March 1892 and the mortgage of 13th April 1892 only a fortnight later were isolated transactions. We do not regard this case as one of a prudent and careful woman who mortgaged only a half first and was driven by force of circumstances to encumber the balance a few days later and eventually to sell the balance.

The sale-deed of 1895 was made up of the following items:—

Rupees 1,055	7	9	due on the 1892 mortgage;
„ 180	0	0	cash of Vishnu Daji,
„ 160	1	4	lost in managing the villages during three years; and
„ 40	0	0	expenses of the stamp and registration, etc.

The great part of it went to the old mortgage and, as we have already seen, legal necessity has not been established with reference thereof. No copy of the decree of Vishnu Daji has been filed, and it is impossible to say what its nature was. From this point of view, therefore, we are unable to disturb the findings arrived at by the lower Court on the question of legal necessity. The weight of the evidence and all the probabilities of the case go to show that Musammât Radhabai sometime after her husband's death either mismanaged the estate or allowed it to be mismanaged by others and probably also fell into extravagant ways and incurred expenditure which was in the circumstances not permissible. It is equally clear that the defendants' predecessors-in-title made no proper enquiry into the existence of legal necessity for the transactions entered into with Musammât Radhabai. The plaintiffs are, in our opinion, entitled to succeed in the suit and the lower Court's judgment is confirmed in this connection. The appeal accordingly fails and is dismissed with costs. Appellants must bear respondents' costs.

A cross-objection has been filed by the respondents to the effect that they should not have been ordered to pay, as a condition precedent to their acquiring possession of the subject in suit, Rs. 160 1-4 said to have been lost during Sir Gangadhar Rao Chitnavis's management of the village from 1892 to 1895. We are not satisfied that there has been any sufficient proof with regard to this item. Apparently for a good many years after Sakharam's death, the widow and her brothers between them managed to carry on the management of the villages with comparative success. From the account entries we have no sufficient details regarding this alleged item of loss and it must be remembered that the village was managed, as it was, apparently as a result of a private understanding. The mortgage of 1892 was not a possessory one. In those circumstances we do not think the defendants are entitled to a refund of Rs. 160-1-4 in question and the following phrase will be deleted from the judgment of the lower Court —

“The possession of 7-annas share in Mouza Deoli is subject to payment by the plaintiffs to the defendants of Rs. 160-1-4 with interest thereon at Rs. 12 per cent. per annum from the date of suit till payment”

The cross-objection filed by the respondents will succeed in appeal, and the appellants will also bear the costs of the respondents' cross-objection.

Pre-emption—Custom. Instances in neighbouring mohallas, value of—Mohalla Serai Mangal Sam, Jhelum City

Instances of the exercise of the right of pre-emption in neighbouring mohallas are not sufficient to prove that the custom of pre-emption exists in the locality in which the property in suit is situate [p 652, col 2]

The custom of pre-emption does not exist generally throughout the town of Jhelum, nor does it exist in the block known as Mohalla Serai Mangal Sam which is a part of the old Chakla Mohalla [p 653, col 1]

First appeal from the decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Jhelum, dated the 25th October 1920.

Dr Nand Lal, and Messrs. A. R. Kapur and Hemi J. Rustomji, for the Appellants.

Mr Mukand Lal Puri and Lala Amar Nath Chona, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case sued for possession, by right of pre-emption, of a house in the town of Jhelum which was sold in 1919 by defendant No. 1 and the husband of defendant No. 2 to defendant No. 3 and the predecessor-in-title of defendants Nos. 4 to 7. They claim pre-emption by virtue of their ownership of a serai called Serai Mangal Sain, which is contiguous to the house sold and allege that the custom of pre-emption prevails throughout the town. The defendants contend that there is a sub-division of the town called Mohalla Serai Mangal Sain in which the house in suit is situate and they deny that the custom of pre-emption exists therein or in any part of the town. The Subordinate Judge has found that the town is not subdivided and that the custom of pre-emption exists generally in the town, including the locality in which the house is situate and he has accordingly given the plaintiffs a decree. The vendees have appealed and there are cross-objections by the plaintiffs in regard to the amount of the Pleader's fee awarded to them.

There is no force in an argument which has been put forward as to the plaint not having been properly presented. The important question is whether the custom of pre-emption has been proved to exist in the locality in which the house is situate.

We cannot accept the statements of some of the plaintiffs' witnesses as to the house in suit, being in the Bagh Mohalla. This house, the plaintiffs' serai, and a few other houses and shops form a block which is bounded on all sides by roads. There is a road between this block and the Bagh Mohalla on the north, and we think that the learned Subordinate Judge is right in regarding the serai block as a portion separate from the Bagh Mohalla. The evidence of the special Kanungo shows that it is a part, not of the Bagh Mohalla, but of an area which was known in 1860 as the Chakla Mohalla. That area is no longer known as a separate mohalla, but now comprises, in addition to Serai Mangal Sain, several bazars with distinctive names, and according to the defendants' witnesses the serai block alone is now called the Chakla Mohalla. The serai block appears to be too small an area to constitute a sub-division of the town, although it is not really material for the decision of the case whether it is a sub-division or not. Jhelum is, as the learned Subordinate Judge has observed, a town of recent growth. There has not been a single instance of the exercise of the right of pre-emption in the particular block in which the house is situate, nor is there even any evidence to show that the custom existed in any part of the old Chakla Mohalla in which this block was included. The plaintiffs must, therefore, in order to succeed, prove that the custom prevails generally throughout the town, for instances which have been adduced of the exercise of the right of pre-emption in the neighbouring Bagh Mohalla and Naya Bazar are not sufficient to prove that the custom exist in the locality in which the house in suit is situate. We proceed then to examine the judicial decisions relied upon as proof of the generality of the custom. These are mentioned as Nos. 20, 24, 25, 27, 28, 30, 31 and 33 in the lower Court's judgment No. 20. The Munsif who decided this case said in his judgment (page 46, line 3 of the paper-book) that the custom of pre-emption generally obtained in Jhelum City, but the point was not in issue, as the existence of the custom in the locality in which the house in suit was situate was not denied, and the dispute was whether the plaintiffs' right was superior to that of the vendee. The Munsif's expression of opinion that the custom prevailed generally in the city does not appear to have been based on any evidence and was superfluous.

No. 24.—In this case, although reference was made to certain judgments which the Munsif said (pages 62 and 63 of the paper-book) disclosed that the custom of pre-emption prevailed generally in Jhelum City, the finding was merely that the custom was proved to exist in the mohalla (Mohalla Ramzan Bakhsh) in which the house in suit was situate, and this was really the point in issue, and not whether the custom prevailed throughout the town.

No. 25.—Here also the issue was whether the custom prevailed in the Mohalla Mad-rassawala in which the house was situate, and the finding (page 59) was that it prevailed "in" the town and in the Mad-rassawala Mohalla. There was no finding that the custom prevailed "throughout" the town, and that point did not arise. The evidence given also appears to have been of instances in only three mohallas in the town.

No. 27.—This is similar to No. 26. The issue was merely whether the custom existed in the Naya Bazar, and the finding (page 71) was that the custom existed in Jhelum City and, therefore, could be presumed to exist in the Naya Bazar.

No. 28.—This case related to a house which was in either Ramzan Mohalla or the Madrassa Mohalla. The First Court had decided that no custom of pre-emption existed in the sub-division in which the house was situate. In the appeal Mr. Prenter held (page 85) that there were no recognised sub-divisions in Jhelum City at all, and said that he was inclined to think that the rulings of the Courts during the last 50 or 60 years made it almost impossible for the custom now to be denied in any quarter of the city. We cannot attach weight to that observation, as Mr. Prenter did not refer specifically to any particular rulings, and the question whether the custom of pre-emption existed in all parts of the city did not arise for decision.

No. 30.—It was decided in this case that the custom of pre-emption existed in the Naya Mohalla which was an extension of the city of Jhelum on the north. The Subordinate Judge said in his judgment (page 90) that the existence of the custom in the city of Jhelum was an uncontested fact, but this cannot be taken to mean that the existence of the custom in all parts of the city was admitted.

No. 31.—In this case, as in Nos. 25 and 26, the Court found (page 80) that the right of pre-emption existed "in" Jhelum, but not that it existed in every part of the town, and the instances of which evidence was given all related to Mohalla Mallahan, in which the house in suit was situate.

No. 33.—The judgment of the first Court in this case is printed at page 66 of the paper-book and that of the Appellate Court on page 73. Here again there was no finding that the custom existed throughout the town and the question in dispute was only whether it prevailed in the Toya Mohalla.

There are, on the other hand, certain decisions against the existence of the custom. In one (page 99) it was found by the Additional Divisional Judge that there was no proof of the existence of the custom in Jhelum City, and in another (page 96) the Divisional Judge found that the custom was not proved to exist in the Naya Bazar.

Our conclusion is that the plaintiffs have failed to prove that the custom of pre-emption exists either throughout the town of Jhelum or in the particular locality in which the house in suit is situate. We accordingly accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the lower Court and dismiss the suit with costs throughout.

The cross-objections are dismissed.

So long as a partnership continues, it is a part of the ordinary course of partnership business to pay partnership debts, and, therefore, it would ordinarily be sufficient to prove that a debt paid was a partnership debt and that the person who paid the interest on it or part of the principal was a partner, in order to give an extended period of limitation under s 20 of the Limitation Act [p 655, col. 1.]

But even after a partnership has become dissolved, so far as strangers are concerned a partnership dissolved is a partnership in being, unless and until they receive notice of dissolution, and, in the case of old customers with the partnership, express notice of the same is necessary and in the absence of it an acknowledgment by one partner is binding on the other partners [ibid]

JUDGMENT.

Odgers, J.—In this case the plaintiffs are the sons of one S. V. Manavala Reddiar who died about 1915 and they sue the defendants who are, as to defendants Nos. 2 to 4, the undivided sons of defendant No. 1 and as to defendants Nos. 6 and 7, the undivided sons of defendant No. 5. Defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 5 carried on business in partnership in cotton and money-lending under the style of "P. K. N." Firm. Defendant No. 1 borrowed from Manavala

Reddy Rs. 10,000 from his family funds, in his (defendant No. 1's) capacity as managing partner on 26th August 1914. The suit is brought on the promissory note executed thereupon (Ex. A.) Defendant No 1 is also alleged to have made and endorsed a payment of Rs. 1,000 for interest on 16th August 1917 thus saving limitation. The defence is that the partnership between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 5 had ceased to the knowledge of plaintiffs long before 16th August 1917 and had been dissolved by a decree in a suit for dissolution (O. S. No. 7 of 1918) brought by defendant No. 5, the capitalist partner, against defendant No 1. The decree decided that the partnership was dissolved as from 11th March 1915. Consequently defendant No. 1 had no authority to bind his former partner in 1917 by an endorsement of part payment in order to save limitation. It is, no doubt, clear law that after dissolution no ex-partner has power to do any act to bind another ex-partner, cf., Watson v. Woodman (1), where the Vice-Chancellor held that it was not there proved that the two parties concerned had so intended that they should for the purposes of that suit be deemed to have continued partners. In Rajagopala Pillai v. Krishnasami Chetti (2) it was held that the fact that a partnership is being wound up is by itself insufficient to authorise a surviving partner to bind the representatives of a deceased partner. But in the present case it is clear that as regards third parties (in the position of the plaintiffs) there was no notice, express or constructive, given of dissolution and s. 264 of the Contract Act is clear that in the absence of such notice, persons dealing with a firm are entitled to assume that the partnership still continues [Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (3), Giovani Gorio & Co. v. Vallabh Das Kalianji (4).] Therefore plaintiffs were still entitled even after 1915 to regard the partnership between defendant No. 1 and defendant No. 5 with whom they have dealt for 15 years as subsisting. The question then arises, had defendant No. 1 authority to bind his firm by making this payment. My own opinion is that as, in the case of a mercantile firm as here, each partner is entrusted by his co-partners with a general authority to do any act necessary for or usually done in carrying on the business of such partnership, a partner's authority extends to making an acknowledgment by part-payment so as to bind his partners. I am fortified in this opinion by that of Kumaraswami Sastri, J., in his referring judgment in Pandiri Veeranna v. Grandhi Veerabhadraswami (5). However a question has been raised on limitation with regard to the provisions of s. 21 (2) of the Limitation Act which runs as follows:—

"Nothing in the said sections renders one of several joint contractors, partners, executors or mortgagees chargeable by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed or of a payment made by, or by the agent of, any other or others of them."

These words have been construed in Pandiri Veeranna v. Grandhi Veerabhadraswami (5) by the Full Bench of this Court. There the learned Judges say "It is important to notice the exact wording of s. 21 (2) of the Limitation Act. The section does not say that a person shall not be liable on an acknowledgment signed by the partner by reason only of his being a partner but by reason only of a written acknowledgment signed by his partner; and it amounts to saying that if you have no more than written acknowledgment signed by one defendant the fact that the other defendant is his partner cannot affect the latter's liability. You would obviously have a case where one partner signed an acknowledgment in respect of a gambling debt of his own; but for the sub-section, proof of the acknowledgment would be sufficient to fix the other partner with liability, a conclusion manifestly repugnant both to sense and justice." (Page 434*) Here there is no question that the part payment was in respect of a partnership debt (Ex. A). There is also ample evidence from the surrounding circumstances which we are entitled to look at [Pandiri Veeranna v. Grandhi Veerabhadraswami (5)] for the conclusion that there was express authority for defendant No. 1 to make the acknowledgment to rebut the possible validity of the contention that from the wording of s. 21 (2), Limitation Act, there is no presumption in India, that a partner has power to acknowledge, though the validity of this contention is at least doubtful after the exposition of the sub-section by the Full Bench Plaintiff witness No. 3 a clerk of appellants' (defendants') firm swears that the entry in Ex. E (1) showing the payment of Rs 1,000 on 16th August 1917 was made under the orders of defendants Nos. 1 and 5, he also states that the partnership has not been wound up or the account settled. Defendant No. 5 himself applied for a loan to the South Indian Bank in 1915 (Ex. G) in which he sets out the present loan. Exhibit H is the defendant No. 5's plaint in the dissolution suit against respondent No. 1. He says that since his (defendant No. 5's) father's death in 1907, defendant No. 1 and another assistant partner, conducted the entire business. Defendant No. 5 was obliged to rely on defendant No. 1 for the conduct by him of all matters connected with the partnership and all such things as the collection of outstandings, etc. In Ex. F dated 6th February 1918 the present appellant admits that defendant No. 1 has to pay a share of the debt due to Manavala Reddi. There is also a correspondence between the Receiver in the dissolution suit and the Vakil of Manavala Reddi's sons which shows that at first at any rate the appellants were willing to discharge their half of the suit debt and did not question their liability to do so. There is no doubt on the evidence, which there is no reason to discredit, that never until this suit was brought did appellants dispute their liability nor suggest that defendant No. 1 was not authorised to make the acknowledgment. The proviso of s. 21 (2) of the Limitation Act as construed by the Full Bench can, therefore, have no application to the present case. I am, therefore, of opinion, that the Subordinate Judge was correct in the conclusion he came to and I would dismiss this appeal with costs of plaintiffs (respondents Nos. 1 to 3). Costs not to come out of partnership assets.

Spencer, J.—I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs and I will give my reasons in my own language. Defendants Nos. 6 and 7 sons of 5th defendant, who died during the suit, appeal and 10th defendant is the Receiver in O. S. No. 7 of 1918.

From the terms of the reference in Pandiri Veeranna v. Grandhi Veerabhadraswami (5) it appears that the Full Bench had not to consider the effect of s. 21 (2) of the Limitation Act upon acknowledgments of debts and payments saving limitation by partners with express reference to the circumstance of the partnership being a continuing one or one that had been dissolved at the time of acknowledgment or payment. The learned Judges observed that they saw nothing in the sub-section to make it necessary to suppose that it was intended to apply to transactions conducted in the ordinary course of partnership. They overruled Valasubramania Pillai v. Ramanathan Chettiar (6). So long as a partnership continues, it is a part of the ordinary course of partnership business to pay partnership debts, and, therefore, it would ordinarily be sufficient to prove that the debt in question was a partnership debt and that the person who paid the interest on it or part of the principal was a partner in order to give an extended period of limitation calculated from the date of payment as against all the other partners. Even after dissolution, s. 263 of the Contract Act provides that the rights and obligations of the partners continue in all things necessary for winding up the business, and from s. 265 it appears that payment of the firm's debts is part of the business of winding up. But after a partnership has become dissolved, it may not be the particular duty of every person who has been a partner to pay and acknowledge debts of the firm, as by arrangement that may be done by the Court, or by a Receiver or by one of the ex-partners acting as agent for the others. So far as strangers are concerned, a partnership dissolved is a partnership in being, unless and until they receive notice of dissolution. In the case of old customers, like the plaintiffs in this case, express notice is necessary [vide Chundee Churn Dutt v. Eduljee Cowasjee Bijnee (3) and Pollock and Mulla's Commentary on s. 264]. It has not been proved by the evidence in this case that the plaintiffs received any notice of the partnership of defendants Nos. 1 and 5 having become dissolved on 11th March 1915 or indeed on any date before 16th August 1917 when the payment of Rs. 1,000 was made by 1st defendant to 2nd plaintiff according to his evidence as P. W. No. 4 and the ledger Ex. E (1). For some unaccountable reason no issue as to limitation was directly raised in the lower Court. Plaintiff witness No. 3 who was clerk of the firm, says that the firm's business was closed on 14th Thai, Rakshasa, corresponding to January 27th 1916, but the defendant who as authorised agent of his father, 5th defendant, brought O. S. No. 7 of 1918 on the file of the Sub-Court of Ramnad against 1st defendant to obtain a declaration that the partnership terminated on 11th March 1915 did not present the plaint in that suit to the Court before 1st February 1918 (see Ex. H). In para. 11 of the plaint the 5th defendant states that he was dependent on the 1st defendant for all matters connected with the business of the firm such as the collection of outstandings even after 10th March 1925 pending the settlement of the accounts.

Fifth defendant in Ex. G a loan application made to the South Indian Bank, and 7th defendant in his affidavit (Ex. F) and in his letter (Ex. D-2) to the Receiver admitted that the debt due to the plaintiffs was a partnership debt of the P. K. N. firm, and P. Ws. Nos. 3 and 4 deposed, without being contradicted or shaken in cross-examination, that the payment of Rs. 1,000 was a joint payment by both 1st and 5th defendants and that the entry in the accounts was made under the authority of both of them. This is quite enough to fix all the appellants with liability and to save limitation. I agree in the proposed order for costs.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 132—Mortgage-deed—Mortgagor at liberty to pay at any time—Commencement of limitation for mortgagee

Where, according to the terms of the mortgage-deed the mortgagor is at liberty to pay at any time, the mortgagee is equally at liberty to foreclose and his limitation under Art. 132 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act begins to run at once. [p. 657, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Shahpur at Sargodha, dated the 31st May 1921.

Mr. Zafrulla Khan, for the Appellants.

Messrs. Nanak Chand and C. L. Mathur, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The ancestor of the defendants in this case charged the land in suit by several mortgage-deeds. The defendants made an application under the Redemption of Mortgages Act and obtained an order for possession on payment of Rs. 700 only, this being the principal sum charged by the first mortgage. The plaintiff-mortgagee thereupon brought this suit for a declaration that the amount payable under the various deeds was Rs. 13,620 and the land could only be redeemed on payment of this amount. The decree given by the Sub-Judge was that the total charges amounted to Rs. 12,235, two small items having been disallowed on account of improvements to a well and a third so called mortgage.

The defendants appeal, urging that the whole of the suit except so far as it relates to the first mortgage is barred by time. The first mortgage is usufructuary, or almost entirely usufructuary, that is to say, the amount secured was Rs. 700; out of this interest was payable on Rs. 50, and the rent and profits of the land were to be taken as equivalent to the interest on the balance of Rs. 650. Counsel for the appellant now admits that the whole of the interest claimed as well as the principal is due on this mortgage, or a total of Rs. 1,873 and urges that nothing should have been allowed on the second mortgage, the date of which was the 11th of August 1894, the first mortgage having been executed in May 1892 and the period therein fixed being 10 years, that is to say, up till 1902.

On the first mortgage limitation has been saved at regular intervals by the appropriation of the profits and rents towards the greater part of the interest, and the contention of Counsel for the respondent is that the words "all the conditions laid down in the previous mortgage-deed shall also apply to the present mortgage-deed"—saved limitation in the second also. The clause in the second mortgage runs as follows:—"All the conditions laid down in the previous mortgage-deed shall also apply to the present mortgage-deed. The mortgaged property shall be redeemed only when I pay up to the mortgagees the present mortgage-money with interest along with the mortgage charges due under the previous deeds as stipulated therein. I shall have no authority whatsoever to redeem the mortgaged property or to alienate it in any way without paying up the mortgage-deed along with those of the previous ones. I shall be at liberty to pay at any time the money due under the present mortgage-deed. I shall have no authority to transfer in any way, the mortgaged property to any other person unless the money due under the present mortgage-deed is paid. The mortgagees shall also be competent to realise the mortgage-money due under the present deed along with those of the previous ones recited therein from the mortgaged property, other property of mine from my person."

Had the deed concluded with the first sentence of this clause, or even with the first three sentences, there would have been great force in the respondent's contention. This portion of the deed, however, is wholly negatived by what follows "I shall be at liberty to pay at any time the money due under the present mortgage-deed." But Counsel contends, the concluding portion which runs: "The mortgagees shall also be competent to realise the mortgage-money due under the present mortgage-deed along with those of the previous ones recited therein from the mortgaged property, etc.," restores the status quo ante and makes the first portion of the clause operative and conclusive. In our opinion, the words "along with those of the previous ones" are only used to indicate that the money reliable on the second mortgage is a charge on the property just as much as the money secured by the first mortgage, and the words do not mean that the mortgagee is debarred from realising his money on the second mortgage unless he sues at the same time to realise on the first.

The all important words are to the effect that the mortgagor is at liberty to pay at any time. The mortgagee was also, therefore, equally at liberty to foreclose and his limitation under Art. 132 began to run at once. Counsel's argument that inasmuch as he was forced to bring this suit by the proceedings before the Revenue Officer he should be treated as a defendant while he is a plaintiff has no force in our opinion.

The total charge, therefore, amounts to Rs. 1,873 and we accept the appeal in so far as to give the plaintiff a decree to the effect that the mortgage charges on the land in suit amount to this sum. Under the circumstances of the case we leave the parties to bear their own costs.

The cross-objections have not been pressed and are dismissed.

DEFENDANT—RESPONDENT.

Custom, proof of—Wajib-ul-arz, entry in, value of—Succession—"Malik", meaning of—Widow, estate taken by—Kayasthas of village Khanpur Khabura, District Rae Bareilly.

A Settlement Officer in recording custom in a wajib-ul-arz has to perform duties which the Government orders him to perform. One of these duties is to record customs as the Settlement Officer finds them and not as he might think they ought to be. When, therefore, it is not shown by reliable evidence that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty or was misled in recording a custom, and it does not appear that the statement of the custom is ambiguous, the record in a wajib-ul-arz of a custom is most valuable evidence of the custom, much more reliable evidence than subsequent oral evidence given after a dispute as to the custom has arisen. [p 659, cols. 1 & 2]

Where a devisee or a donee is described as a "malik," he has a full right of alienation unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. [p 660, col. 2]

A clause in a wajib-ul-arz relating to the succession to the estate of a deceased proprietor ran as follows—"If included amongst the wives one wife has sons and the others have none then such wives as have no sons shall take shares for the period of their lives, and after the deaths of such wives the sons of the other wives shall be malik of such shares and if there be no wife with sons, then the wives of the deceased shall become malik over the inheritance of the deceased in equal shares".

Held, that the meaning of the concluding portion of the clause was that where a proprietor had left only one wife without a son, that wife would become absolute owner with right of transfer over the whole of his property [p 661, col. 1]

Among Kayasthas of village Khanpur Khabura, in the Rae Bareilly District, a widow, in the absence of sons, succeeds to the estate of her deceased husband as an absolute owner with full powers of alienation, [ibid.]

First appeal against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Rae Bareilly, dated the 1st September 1924.

Messrs. M. Wasim and Rajeswari Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. A. P. Sen, Bishambhar Nath Sirivastava and Har Gobind Dayal, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The plaintiff Sartaj Kuar is the daughter of a certain Gurprasad Kayastha who died in 1893 in proprietary possession of the whole of the village of Mubarakpur and Khandepur and a 1 anna 4 pies share in the village of Khanpur Khabura. He died without male issue leaving a widow Batasa Kuar and two daughters, the plaintiff-appellant Sartaj Kuar and Sukhdei. Sukhdei who was married to a man called Debi Bakhsh had four sons one of whom was Mahadeo Bakhsh. Batasa Kuar succeeded to her husband's interests. Under a compromise made by her prior to 1905 she gave up a full proprietary share of 2-annas in Mubarakpur and Khandepur to a certain Mahu Narain a collateral relative of her deceased husband. This left her with a 14-annas share in Mubarakpur and a 14-annas share in Khandepur. On the 13th October 1905 she executed a deed of gift of the 14-annas share in Mubarakpur and 14-annas share in Khandepur, the 1 anna 4 pies share in Khanpur Khabura and a house in Mubarakpur in favour of her grandson Mahadeo Bakhsh. Batasa Kuar died on the 23rd April 1923. Mahadeo Bakhsh obtained possession over the property the subject of the deed of gift (according to his assertion) prior to the death of his grand-mother. In 1923 Sartaj Kuar instituted the suit out of which the present appeal arises for possession of the property which was the subject of the deed of gift. The suit was against Mahadeo Bakhsh. Her suit was dismissed by the Subordinate Judge of Rae Bareilly on the 27th August 1924 upon two main findings. The first was that Batasa Kuar had executed the deed of gift in question fully understanding what she was doing. The second finding was that under a family custom Batasa Kuar had full proprietary title to the property transferred. The appeal contests the validity of these two findings.

In respect of the first finding we have it established upon the evidence that the deed of gift of the 13th October 1905 was executed by Batasa Kuar. The deed is on the record as defendant's Ex. A 23. Its translation is printed on Part III, page 78, of the Printed Book. It was properly stamped and registered. The evidence in support of its execution is the evidence of Mahadeo Bakhsh defendant respondent which is contained in Part I, page 27, of the Printed Book. His evidence is as follows:—

"Musammam Batasa Kuar executed the deed of gift in my favour. I was present at the time of execution of the deed. Ram Adhin, Sheo Sakat Rai and Randhir Singh attested the deed. Girja Prasad was the scribe of the deed. Musammam Batasa put her mark on the deed in the presence of myself, the scribe and the attesting witnesses. The three attesting witnesses signed the deed in my presence and in the presence of Batasa Kuar. The three attesting witnesses and the scribe are dead. The deed was registered in my presence, and she said to Sub-Registrar in my presence that she had executed the deed. Ganga Prasad Brahman was the Mukhtiar of Batasa Kuar. He wrote Batasa Kuar's name on the deed of gift with her permission. The deed was read out to Batasa Kuar by Girja Prasad who explained it to her before she was asked to sign the deed. Sheikh Shahabuddin Sahib, the late Pleader of this Court, prepared the draft of the deed of gift.

"(Exhibit A-23 shown). This is the deed executed by Batasa Kuar. She put her mark on the deed at two places (witness points them out). The three attesting witnesses signed it in my presence. (Witness identifies them).

"I got this deed of gift back from the Registration Office for Batasa Kuar said that the deed should be returned to me. I have been in possession of the property from the time of gift."

Musammam Batasa Kuar gave evidence in a suit on the 5th of August 1909. Her deposition is defendant's Ex. A-11 and will be found on Part III, pages 88 and 89, of the Printed Book. While this deposition contains some slight divergences from the conditions of the deed of gift it supports absolutely the contention of the defendant-respondent that the lady had with full knowledge of what she was doing made a deed of gift in his favour and put him in possession. We accept the finding of the learned Subordinate Judge as correct to the effect that Musammam Batasa Kuar executed the deed of gift and executed it with full knowledge as to what she was doing. We further find that Mahadeo Bakhsh was put in possession during the lady's life time

We now come to the contention which is to the effect that Batasa Kuar had no power of transfer and that the deed of gift is accordingly now invalid. In the absence of the custom set forward by the defendant-respondent Batasa Kuar as a widow of a Hindu governed by the Mitakshara Law would not ordinarily have had the power of transferring the property by gift for a period beyond her life time. The defendant-respondent has met this plea by asserting the family custom and in the opinion of the learned Subordinate Judge he has established its existence. The first point that we have to consider is whether the evidence established the existence of any custom in derogation of the ordinary Hindu Law and the next point which we have to consider is even if a custom is established whether it justifies the transfer by gift. In respect of the question as to proof of custom the evidence is contained almost entirely in the wajib-ul-arz of the village of Khanpur Khabura (plaintiff's Ex. 5) a translation of which will be found at Part III, pages 23 and 24, of the Printed Book. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that the Court would not be justified in finding upon the basis of this wajib-ul-arz alone that a custom exists. The principles which should guide us in arriving at decision on this point have been laid down very clearly by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Balgobind v. Badri Prasad (1). This is a decision of the 10th May 1923, and it, in our opinion, gives a final pronouncement upon the point, on which there was formerly some difference of opinion, as to the method by which the value of the evidence afforded by an entry as to custom in a wajib-ul-arz in Oudh should be determined. This appeal related to an alleged custom in a village in Gonda in the Province of Oudh. Its existence depended upon an entry in one wajib-ul-arz. At page 201* their Lordships stated:—

"It is quite true that a custom is not established by an ambiguous statement of it in a wajib-ul-arz." They continued later;

"Settlement Officers in recording customs in wajib-ul-araz have to perform duties which the Government orders them to perform.

"One of these duties was to record customs as the Settlement Officer found them, and not as he might think they ought to be. When it is not shown by reliable evidence that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty or was misled in recording a custom, and it does not appear that the statement of the custom is ambiguous, the record in a wajib-ul-arz of a custom is most valuable evidence of the custom, much more reliable evidence than subsequent oral evidence given after a dispute as to the custom has arisen.

"There was no evidence to prove or even to suggest that the Settlement Officer in stating the custom as he did in the wajib-ul-arz had in any way neglected his duty in ascertaining what the custom was, or was misled as to the custom; nor was there any evidence given in this suit in denial of or at variance with the custom.

"Their Lordships find that the custom excluding daughters and their issue from inheritance was proved."

We now proceed to examine the wajib-ul-arz which has relation to the matter before us. It was drawn up on the 19th July 1865 at the time of Settlement. The first paragraph gives the history of the village. Khanpur Khabura which was the principal village of the family, to which Gur Prasad belonged, had been in the possession of this family from the beginning of the 17th century. This family held the hereditary office of qanungo. The family had received certain special privileges in holding the village revenue free. The first paragraph states these privileges and states how the village had remained with the family for 250 years. The wajib-ul-arz was verified by 20 members of the family including Gur Prasad himself. It continued to lay down in the fourth paragraph a custom of succession. We shall interpret the custom of succession later but we find here that there is nothing to show that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty in recording the custom as he found it. There is nothing to show that he recorded what he thought ought to be the custom instead of what was the custom. There is nothing to show that he was misled in recording the custom. We shall consider later whether the custom was or was not ambiguous.

The words which we have to interpret have been translated in part by the learned Subordinate Judge and translated completely by a translator of this Court. The translator's translation is inaccurate. The translation of the Subordinate Judge is fairly accurate but only gives a portion of the relevant matter. We prefer to translate these words ourselves. This is our translation :

(1) 74 Ind. Cas 449, 50 I A 196.

"If there are in existence several wedded wives of the deceased co-sharer and, there have been sons from each wife in varying numbers then the inheritance shall be divided with reference to the number of wives on the principle of jurabant as follows :—

"Where there is in existence a wife with only one son and where the remaining wife has more than one son the sons of the first named, and the sons of the second named shall severally take possession of one moiety of the estate of the deceased" (a more literal translation of the last passage would be "where a wife has only one son he will take possession of one-half share of the deceased's inheritance and where the remaining wife has more than one son all such sons will take possession of the remaining half of the inheritance of the deceased" "if included amongst the wives one wife has sons and the others have none then such wives as have no sons shall take shares for the period of their lives, and after the deaths of such wives the sons of the other wives shall be malik of such shares and if there be no wife with sons, then the wives of the deceased shall become malik over the inheritance of the deceased in equal shares."

We have advisedly left the word malik for the present in vernacular as the most important question for decision in this appeal is its interpretation. The interpretation of this word has been before the Courts on many occasions. We consider, however, that the meaning which should be given to it in judicial proceedings has now been established beyond doubt by two decisions of their Lordships of the Privy Council of the year 1921. The first of these will be found in the report of Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2). There the word malik was used in a Will made in the Gujrati language. There would appear to be no difference in the meaning of the words as used in Gujrati and as used in the wajib-ul-arz under consideration. Lord Buckmaster on page 6* of the decision said :—

"There is no dispute that the word that was used in cl. 3 as the original word of gift was the word 'malik' which could be appropriately used to constitute the wife absolute owner. It is not that the word is a 'term of art', it does not necessarily define the quality of the estate taken but the ownership of whatever that estate may be ; and in the context of the present Will their Lordships think the estate was absolute."

In the subsequent decision of Sasimon Chowdurain v. Shib Narayan Chowdhury (3) their Lordships were interpreting a Will made by a Hindu of Behar in Urdu. The Urdu used in the Will was Urdu similar to that used in the wajib-ul-arz under consideration. This decision reviewed all the most important decisions in which the word 'malik' had been interpreted, commencing with the decision of their Lordships themselves in Moulvie Mahomed Shumsool Hooda v. Shawukram (4). At page 35* the decision states :—

"It appears from some of the decisions to which their Lordships have referred and from the judgment of the Board in Bhaidas Shivdas v. Bai Gulab (2) that the term 'malik', when used in a Will or other document as descriptive of the position which a devisee or donee is intended to hold, has been held apt to describe an owner possessed of full proprietary rights, including a full right of alienation, unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred, but the meaning of every word in an Indian Will must always depend upon the setting in which it is placed, the subject to which it is related, and the locality of the testator from which it may receive its true shade of meaning, and their Lordships can find nothing in the quoted decisions contrary to this view"

According to this decision, which settles the matter finally, a devisee or donee described as a "malik" has a full right of alienation unless there is something in the context or in the surrounding circumstances to indicate that such full proprietary rights were not intended to be conferred. The learned Counsel for the appellant has argued that nowhere have their Lordships of the Privy Council considered the meaning of the word malik in a wajib-ul-arz in Qadhi. That is so, but the portion of a wajib-ul-arz in Oudh which contains a custom of succession is clearly a document of the same nature as the documents to which their Lordships were referring. There is much force in the remark of the learned Subordinate Judge that the parties who dictated the custom were literary Kayasthas and it was not likely that the words were used loosely. He has further rightly laid great stress upon the fact that the position of the sons of a deceased co-sharer is described as that of "malik" and that the position of the widows of a deceased co-sharer who has no sons is also described as that of "malik." We agree with him that it is impossible to construe the wajib-ul-arz in such a manner as to make the position of the sons other than that of the position of absolute owners with a right to transfer, and this being the case, it seems to us impossible to hold that the position of widows, when there are no sons, is other than the position of absolute owners with a right of transfer. The learned Counsel for the appellant has further argued that, even if this view be accepted, there is nothing in the wajib ul-arz which would give to the widow of a deceased co-sharer in a case, such as the present, in which he left only one widow an absolute estate. Here we are against him. We can only interpret the words which we translate if there be no wife with sons then the "wives of the deceased shall become absolute owners with a right of transfer over the inheritance of the deceased in equal shares" as containing a statement that where the deceased co-sharer has left only one wife without a son, that wife became an absolute owner with right of transfer over the whole property. This is not an inference. The plural includes the singular, and it would be contrary to all right rules of interpretation, in our opinion, to hold that the custom did not affect a single wife without a son.

We are now in a position to consider the point which we have left over. Is the custom so asserted ambiguous? We do not find any ambiguity. The custom contained in this wajib-ul-arz is a custom which lays down a succession which in many ways is not the succession provided by the Mitakshara Law. The principle of jurabant is contrary to the principle of succession under the Mitakshara Law. The creation of an absolute estate in the widow is also contrary to the Mitakshara Law. But there is no ambiguity. The meaning is perfectly clear. We can now conclude our decision.

We find that the custom asserted by the defendant-respondent was recorded by the Settlement Officer, there being no reliable evidence in fact there being no evidence of any kind that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty or recorded what he thought ought to be the custom or was misled in recording the custom, that there is no evidence in rebuttal of the custom so recorded, and that the words not being ambiguous the evidence in the wajib-ul-arz alone is sufficient to establish the custom. This custom governed not only the property of the family in the village of Khanpur Khabura but the property of the family situated in other villages. Under this custom Batasa Kuar had the right to transfer by deed of gift the property which she did so transfer by the deed of 13th October 1905. The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Where an Appellate Court has relied for its decision upon a document which is inadmissible in evidence, a Court of second appeal would be justified in remanding the case for decision to the Appellate Court with a direction to exclude that document from its consideration. But where an Appellate Court although it admitted as additional evidence certain documents in appeal did not base its finding upon them, a finding of fact arrived at by that Court will not be interfered with by the High Court in second appeal. [p. 662, col 2, p 663, col 1.]

Second appeal against a decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Ellore, in A. S. No. 181 of 1921, preferred against a decree of the Court of the Additional District Munsif, Ellore, in O. S. No. 262 of 1920.

Mr. P. Bapuraju, for the Appellants.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the decree of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Ellore in A. S. No. 181 of 1921 preferred against the decree in O. S. No. 262 of 1920 on the file of the Additional District Munsif of Ellore.

The lower Appellate Court decreed the suit and defendants Nos. 1 and 2 appeal.

The plaintiffs sue for recovery of possession of certain properties and for mesne profits alleging that the properties fell to the share of the 1st plaintiff's husband in a partition held in 1911, and the question whether there was such a partition (Issue No. 1) has been decided in the affirmative by the lower Appellate Court. It is a question of fact which ordinarily cannot be raised in second appeal but the appellants contend that the lower Appellate Court wrongfully admitted as evidence the documents Exs. P, P (1) and P (2) and was influenced by these documents without giving the appellants an opportunity of showing that they were forged. The District Munsif in his 4th paragraph rejected these documents with the following remarks: "It is said that subsequent to his death partition lists were drawn up setting forth the properties which had been allotted to each of the brothers. These partition lists were sought to be exhibited in the case but as they purported to be deeds of partition and not mere partition lists and as they were unstamped and unregistered they were not allowed to be filed in the case". In his 7th paragraph the learned Subordinate Judge settles the question of rejection of these lists thus: "On going through the lists, I find that the language used does not amount to a deed of partition declaring a divided status and allotting properties to the several co-parceners. And the evidence shows that the actual partition took place a year before the lists were prepared and these lists were simply notes as regards the property that fell to each share. I do not think the lower Court is right in rejecting these documents". Accordingly he admitted them as being simply notes as regards the properties which fell to each share. If they are nothing more than that, the documents can have no evidentiary value. Prosecution Witness No. 1, 1st plaintiff's next friend, merely states that partition lists were prepared and there is no evidence as to who wrote or signed Ex-P series. I am asked to find that the learned Subordinate Judge assumed, when he admitted these documents that they were signed by the persons by whom they purported to be signed and treated them as important admissions by the defendants that there had been a partition. Of course, if he had made any such assumption without taking any evidence in the matter, this case would obviously have to be remanded. But I do not think that he did anything of the sort. I gather that he said the documents might be filed as mere notes and then considered whether apart from these documents there was sufficient evidence of partition. He refers to the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 and Exs. A and A (1). He considers the discrepancies in the evidence of P. Ws. Nos. 1 and 2 but notes that the kist has been paid separately as appears from Exs. C and D series. He finds ample evidence as regards the separate enjoyment of the property and he observes that the evidence of defendants' was discredited by the lower Court.

In his summary of the evidence he makes no mention of Exs. P, P (1) and P (2) or of any admission contained therein. I find that he admitted them for what they are worth and as in that stage of the proceedings they were worth nothing at all he dismissed them from his mind. Therefore, I do not find that the lower Court considered Exs. P, P (1) and P (2) or was in any way influenced by them. The finding of fact cannot be assailed on that ground.

The cases cited by the appellants are distinguishable. In Govindan Nair v. Govindan Nair (1) it was held that the Judge did not refer to two documents of importance and, therefore, the case was returned for a fresh finding; but in the present case the Judge referred, if at all, to documents of no importance. In Sumitra Kuerv v. Ram Kair Chowbey (2) it was held that "Where an Appellate Court has relied for its decision upon a document which is inadmissible in evidence, a Court of second appeal would be justified in remanding the case for decision to the Appellate Court with a direction to exclude that document from its consideration". But here the Ex. P series are clearly admissible in evidence if they are treated simply as notes and as I have observed above the Court, as a matter of fact, did not rely upon them in coming to the decision. Araya Muthu Pillai v. Sennaya Pillai (3). Here the Court had proceeded very largely on a consideration of evidence admitted during the hearing of the appeal in contravention of O. XLI, r. 27, of the C. P. C., which again has no application to a case where the Court has properly admitted evidence, and as a matter of fact, has not proceeded on the consideration of it.

In Ujir Ali Sirdar v. Shadhak Behara (4) it is laid down "The High Court cannot, on second appeal, look at the evidence to decide if the remaining evidence in a case after that which has been improperly admitted, is rejected, is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court below".

This principle will apply if agreed with the appellant's assumption that the Court below had been materially influenced by Ex P series and had regarded them as containing important admissions by the defendants. But since I hold that the Court below paid no attention to Ex. P series and certainly did not regard them as containing admissions, there is no need to decide whether the remaining evidence is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court.

On all the questions raised the second appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

The failure in a mortgage suit to bring on record the heirs of one of the joint executants of the mortgage-deed, who has died during the pendency of the suit, does not result in the abatement of the suit as a whole, but only as regards the share of the deceased whose heirs would not be bound by the decree passed in the suit [p. 661, col 2].

Where a Hindu co-parcener has mortgaged his share in the family property the birth of a son to him after a final foreclosure decree has been passed against him at the suit of the mortgagee does not operate retrospectively and cannot reduce the share of the co-parcener, the whole of which would pass to the mortgagee-decree-holder [p. 665, col 1].

The purchaser of an unascertained share of joint family property must bring a suit for partition in which the whole of the joint family property should be included and all necessary parties joined. In a suit of that nature, the Court in making the partition would endeavour to give effect to the alienation and so to marshal the family property among the co-parceners as to allot that portion of the family property or so much of it as may be just to the purchaser. Appeal against a decree of the Sub-Judge, Yeotmal, dated the 31st October 1923, in Civil Suit No. 22 of 1922.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Appellants.

Mr. B. R. Pendharkar and R. R. Jaywant, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises several points of law. Defendants Nos. 4 and 5, Tukaram and Govind, are brothers. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 are sons of defendant No. 4 and defendants Nos. 3 and 6 are sons of defendant No. 5.

Defendants Nos. 4 and 5 and Laxman, son of defendant No. 4, mortgaged their shares of the joint family property to plaintiff's father Hiralal in 1912. Hiralal brought a suit on the mortgage and obtained a preliminary decree on 11th November 1915. Two days before the passing of this decree, defendant Laxman died and no application was made for bringing his heirs on record. Subsequently Hiralal died and the plaintiff, who is his heir, was brought on record. A final decree for foreclosure was passed on 6th August 1918.

Defendants Nos. 1 and 2, who are sons of defendant No. 4, and defendant No. 3, who is son of defendant No. 5, filed Suit No. 16 of 1918 against plaintiff on the allegation, that the decree in the mortgage suit was obtained by fraud and was not binding on them, and were successful, their shares in the property being held not subject to the decree in the mortgage suit.

The plaintiff being obstructed in getting possession of the property foreclosed, brought the present suit for partition and possession of the property mortgaged by the original mortgagors.

It was contended on behalf of the defendants that the heirs of Laxman not having been brought on record within time in the mortgage suit, the whole suit should have abated and must in any case abate as regards Laxman's share which was 2 annas, and that the share of defendant No. 5 Govind was lessened by the birth of a son to him on 13th November 1919. This son is Wasudeo, defendant No. 6 in the suit.

Defendants admitted the plaintiff's claim to the extent of the share of Tukaram which is 2 annas and of Govind which is 2 annas 8 pies.

The First Class Subordinate Judge, Yeotmal, held that the decree in the mortgage suit No. 14 of 1915 was not a nullity because Laxman's heirs were not brought on record and that it abated to the extent of Laxman's share only, and that plaintiff got 6 annas share by the said decree, viz. 4 annas in the share of defendant No. 5 Govind and 2 annas in the share of defendant No. 4 Tukaram, and that she should be put in possession of her share, preferably out of the property mentioned in Sch. A, by partition.

Defendants appeal against this decree.

The principal contention raised by the appellants is that the whole mortgage suit should have abated as Laxman's heirs were not brought on record.

They rely on Subramania Aiyar v. Vaithinatha Aiyar (1). That is a case of a sole defendant and will not apply to the present case.

It is contended that when the rights of parties are joint and indivisible, the absence of one of such parties will vitiate the whole trial. When a defendant dies and his rights survive to his legal representative the absence of his legal representative will vitiate the suit.

Reference is made to Raj Chunder Sen v. Ganga Das Seal (2), this was a partnership suit and so the cause of action did not survive against the remaining respondents alone, and to Imam-ud-Din v. Sadarat Rai (3). In that case it was admitted that the cause of action did not survive against the other respondents.

On behalf of respondent it is contended that Laxman's father Tukaram was already on record as executant and was representing the joint family and that it was held in Rameshwar v. Bhangilal (4), that the result of a current of decisions is that when a Hindu father, a member of a joint family, sues or is sued, it is to be presumed that he sues or is sued in a representative capacity. I may remark that this presumption does not seem to me to arise here. Laxman, the son, was one of the executants of the mortgage and was made a defendant. The other sons, defendants Nos. 1 and 2, were not joined and have subsequently succeeded in getting their shares released from the mortgage. It is not stated in the plaint in Suit No. 14 of 1915 that Tukaram was sued as manager.

The respondent further relies on Moti v. Kanhya (5), Sheo Shankar Ram v. Jaddo Kunwar (6) and Krishnanand Nath Khare v. Raja Ram Singh (7).

These are all cases in which admittedly the manager was sued, and I am doubtful if they will apply to a case where Laxman was himself an executant of the bond and was made a party to the suit.

Assuming however that Laxman's heirs were necessary parties, the failure to join them as defendants would not result in the dismissal of the whole suit.

I have referred to Gour's Transfer of Property Act, Vol II, paras. 2151-2, on this question and the conclusion arrived at is that the effect of non-joinder is to leave the interests of the party omitted unaffected.

This is the view in Madras: cf. Sivathi Odayan v. Ramasubbayyar (8), and is supported by the Privy Council, cf. Umes Chunder Sircar v. Zahur Fatima (9) and Hari Kissen Bhagat v. Veliat Hossein (10).

In these circumstances I agree with the finding of the lower Court that the suit on the mortgage would not abate as a whole, but only as regards the share of Laxman, whose heirs are not bound by the decree against him. It is true that one of the heirs was his father defendant No. 4, but his brothers defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not on record. The share of Laxman has, as a matter of fact, been excluded from the mortgage.

The next point raised on behalf of the appellants is that the share of defendant No. 5 must be diminished by the birth of a son to him (defendant No. 6). He was not born at the date of the mortgage-decree, but he was alive at the date of the present suit for partition.

The learned Pleader for appellants relies on Ramnath v. Sitaram (11) and Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (12), and it is contended that the alienor's share fluctuates by birth and death.

In Civil Suit No. 16 of 1918 it has been held that what was passed by the mortgage was the right, title and interest of the executants, and the shares must be determined at the date of partition. The effect of the birth of Wasudeo defendant No. 6 is to reduce the share of his father by Re 0-2-8

It is also contended that in any case at the date of the alienation the wives of both Tukaram and Govind (defendants Nos. 4 and 5) were living, and would have been entitled to a share on partition.

It is not necessary to go into this last question which raises a difficult point of law as to the right of a wife to get a share on partition during the life of her husband, because this point was never raised in the pleadings and we do not know whether at the date of the mortgage defendants Nos. 4 and 5 had wives living.

With regard to the first point, the birth of defendant No. 6 as affecting his father's share, it is to be noted that the foreclosure decree was passed in 1918 and possession was actually given to plaintiff in July 1919. Wasudeo defendant No. 6 was born in November 1919 after his father's right in the property had already passed. He cannot, therefore, question it: cf. Sardar Singh v. Ajit (13) and Jairam v. Venkat rao (14).

The subsequent birth of Wasudeo does not operate retrospectively. It is contended on behalf of the appellants that they do not wish to challenge the alienation and they rely on the observations in Nanjaya Mudali v. Shanmuga Mudali (11). But in that case there had been no decree. In the present case the interests of defendant No. 5 had passed to the plaintiff before the birth of Wasudeo, who therefore acquired only an interest in the family property as it stood at the date of his birth.

I do not, therefore, see any reason to differ from the finding of the lower Court on this point.

The next point raised is that plaintiff is not entitled to get anything out of the property which was not mortgaged, that is out of the property mentioned in Sch. C.

It was contended by the defendants that in a partition suit all the property must be brought into hotch-pot and, therefore, the property mentioned in Sch. A was added. The course adopted by the lower Court is precisely that laid down in Ishrappa Ganap Hegde v. Krishna Putta Shankar Hegde (15), which is a case relied on by the appellants, viz., that the purchaser of an unascertained share of joint family property must bring a suit for partition in which the whole of the joint family property should be included and all necessary parties joined. In a suit of that nature the Court in making the partition would endeavour to give effect to the alienation and so to marshal the family property among the co-parceners as to allot that portion of the family estate, or so much of it as may be just, to the purchaser cf. also Dhulabhar Dabhar v. Lala Dhula (16). This is what has been done in the present case.

The result is that the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Second appeal against a decree and judgment of the Sub-Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 26th September 1924, setting aside that of the Munsif, Partabgarh, dated the 13th May 1924.

Mr. Radha Krishna, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ganga Dayal Khan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a redemption suit. The plaintiff executed a possessory mortgage in favour of the defendant's ancestor in respect of some trees for Rs. 10 bearing interest at Rs. 6 4-0 per cent. per mensem, on the 7th July 1897. The plaintiff sued to redeem the mortgage without payment of any sum on the allegation that the mortgage money which amounted to Rs 10 only was paid off by the appropriation of five mango trees which had been cut by the mortgagee. The defence was that no trees were cut, that Rs. 210 5-0 were due to the defendants on account of principal and interest and that the suit was not maintainable as no tender was made in the khali fasl. The first Court dismissed the suit on the ground that no tender was made in the khali fasl. The learned Subordinate Judge decreed the plaintiff's claim for redemption on payment of Rs. 5 only. The defendant has appealed challenging the findings on the points decided against him. I am not prepared to accept the contention that no cause of action for redemption arose in the favour of the respondent because the mortgage-money was not tendered in khali fasl, as pointed out in the case of Barma Bakhsh v. Suraj Singh (1): "Where there is a real dispute as to the amount due and the mortgagor tenders what turns out to be an insufficient amount or makes no tender at all, his suit for redemption should not be dismissed on the ground that no tender was made." In this case no tender could have been made for the amount of the mortgage-money was in dispute. The amount of interest was in dispute and the appropriation and cutting of five trees was also in dispute. The ruling in Karim

Bakhsh v. Idu Shah (2) cannot help the defendant in this case. The mortgaged property in that case consisted of certain agricultural plots. The mortgage in the present suit is a mortgage of trees only.

The learned Subordinate Judge has found that the mortgagee cut down some trees of the value of Rs. 5 (so far as the plaintiff's share is concerned) and should account for the sum. The finding on that point has not been questioned in this appeal. The appellant contends however that he is entitled to the interest claimed, under the terms of the mortgage deed in suit. I have read the deed in suit, Ext A-1, carefully. In my opinion the defendant's contention must be accepted. The deed shows clearly that the mortgage was executed for Rs. 10 bearing interest at Rs. 6-4 per cent. per mensem. The mortgagee was allowed to take the produce of the grove and it was further provided by the deed that the mortgage would be redeemed on payment of the principal money together with interest at the stipulated rate mentioned above in any khali fasl. I do not agree with the learned Subordinate Judge that interest at the rate stipulated in the deed was to be charged only when the mortgagee lost the usufruct of the trees mortgaged. The rate of interest is of course excessive but the Court cannot help the plaintiff when the deed clearly provides for payment of interest at the rate in question, at the time of redemption. As pointed out in Fazal Azim v. Girdhari Lal (3) a Court has no power to reduce the contract rate of interest solely on the ground that it is excessive.

The respondent's learned Counsel has referred to the ruling in Mata Din v. Ahmad Ali (4) but that ruling is inapplicable to this case. The mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property and he claims interest under the terms of the deed. I see no reason why the deed should not be enforced. The plaintiff should have to pay Rs. 215-5-0 if he wants to redeem the property in suit.

I allow the appeal and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court decree the plaintiff's claim for redemption on payment of Rs 215 5 0. The amount should be paid within six months from this date, i e., on or before the 25th May 1926. If

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, r 97—Execution of decree—Possession, delivery of—Investigation in anticipation of obstruction, legality of Rule 97 of O XXI, O P C, contemplates the Court ordering investigation after the Bailiff has been obstructed in giving possession in terms of the decree. Where, however, a person from whom obstruction is apprehended puts in an application to the Court claiming that the property, whose possession has been ordered to be delivered to the decree-holder, is his property and that he is not bound by the decree, there is nothing wrong in the Court anticipating the obstruction and ordering an investigation under r 97 of O XXI.

Civil revision against an order of the Township Court, Maubin, in C. E. No 293 of 1924

Mr. The Tun, for the Appellants.

Mr. Thein Maung, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—In this case the petitioner obtained a decree for possession of a piece of land and of a kyaung standing on the same land. The decree was by consent, and the defendant in that suit consented to the Court ordering the demolition of this kyaung by a Court Official. The plaintiff then applied for execution of the decree and for a direction ordering the Bailiff to demolish the kyaung. The Court issued an ordinary delivery order. After that the Court was informed that the kyaung in question was in possession of certain pongyis and that the said pongyis would shortly put in an application contesting the plaintiff's right to take possession and demolish this kyaung. On that application the Court stayed the execution of the order passed by it and subsequently the respondents put in an application claiming the kyaung to be their property and stating that they are not parties to that suit and that the decree in that case was not binding on them.

The Court thereupon held that this is a proper case for investigation under O. XXI, r. 97. It is true that Order contemplates the Court ordering the investigation after the Bailiff has been obstructed to giving possession in terms of the decree. But I do not think, under the circumstances of this case, that the Court was wrong in anticipating the obstruction and ordering an investigation under O. XXI, r. 97.

I, therefore, dismiss the application with costs.

Appeal against an order of the Official Receiver, dated the 7th January 1925.

Mr Nadrishah Naoroji, for the Appellant.

Mr Fatehchand Assudamal, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against the order of the Official Receiver rejecting the claim of the appellant Moolji Morarji as secured creditor over a sum of Rs 2,532-1-7. It arises out of the following facts:—

The Firm of Haribhoy Oodowji now insolvent had an account with Messrs Cox & Co., Bankers, for discounting their bills, and as security for the due payment of the amount standing to their debit in the said account, they deposited the title-deeds of one of their immoveable properties by way of equitable mortgage with Messrs. Cox & Co., who in their turn agreed to accommodate them to the extent of Rs 1,20,000.

The appellant had also an account with Messrs. Cox & Co. and had likewise deposited title-deeds of his properties to secure the due payment of the amounts debited to his account.

Messrs. Haribhoy Oodowji and the appellant both joined together in borrowing a sum of Rs. 30,000 from Messrs. Cox and Co., on two bills executed by them jointly and each of them appropriated to his own use the sum of Rs. 15,000. Messrs. Haribhoy Oodowji became insolvent before the due date of the payment of the two bills. The appellant retired one of the two bills and requested Messrs. Cox & Co. to recover the amount of the other bill in the first instance from the property of the insolvent contending that he was only a surety for the amount. This Messrs. Cox & Co. declined to do. They recovered the amount of the 2nd bill also from him and in reply to the protest of the appellants' Pleaders they said as follows:

"With regard to the last part of your letter all we can say is that if your client is entitled in law to the benefit of the security held by us, we will continue to hold the same and to have recourse to it after our entire indebtedness is satisfied."

The property was subsequently sold by Messrs. Cox & Co. as secured creditors, and after the rest of their claim against the insolvent was satisfied, there was a surplus of Rs. 2,532-1-7 in their hands; which they handed over to the Official Receiver duly intimating to him that the appellant claimed a preferential right over it, as surety and as such entitled to the benefits of the security held by them.

The Official Receiver has declined to recognize the claim of the appellant as a secured creditor and has retained the money with himself for the benefit of the general body of the creditors of the insolvents. On the evidence and the inferences to be drawn therefrom, there can be no doubt, that the appellant and the insolvents were each of them a surety for the other to the extent of a moiety of the amount borrowed on the two bills and that they had joined together as co-executants to afford a greater security to Messrs. Cox & Co., who were at liberty to fall back on either of them for payment of the whole amount on the due date. It is equally clear on the evidence of Mr. Leslie Smith, the Manager of Messrs. Cox & Co., that the equitable mortgage created by the insolvents extended to all bills discounted by them, whether such bills were executed by the insolvents alone or jointly with others and that the whole sum of Rs. 30,000 was debited to the insolvents as a contingent liability in the account, Ex. 10, which was the subject of the equitable mortgage. It would, therefore, appear that the whole sum of Rs. 30,000 and a portion of a moiety thereof appropriated by the insolvents to their own use, was inter alia secured by the equitable mortgage of their property.

It is urged on behalf of the Official Receiver that it is not open to the appellant to give oral evidence to vary the terms of the dishonoured bill, which terms are in writing, and to prove that the appellant joined in the bill as a surety only. This argument is based on a misconception of facts. The bill contains a joint promise by the two executants to pay to their creditors the amount of the bill jointly and severally and so far as the express promise goes it may not be varied by parol evidence. The bill does not declare in express terms the rights of the co-obligors inter se, and there is nothing in law to prevent one of them to prove such terms by parol evidence, provided that he does not thereby intend to affect the rights of the creditor to demand immediate payment from either or both of the co-obligors or joint promissors. Pooley v. Harradine (1) and Central Bank of India v. Nadirshaha Mehta (2).

The joining together of two persons in executing a bill or a promissory-note in favour of the person who advances money on such bill or note, though one of them is the principal debtor and the other is surety, is one of the common cases contemplated by s. 132, Indian Contract Act, and is referred to in the illustration to that section. Section 132 and the illustration read as follows:—

"Section 132—Where two persons contract with a third person to undertake a certain liability and also contracts with each other that one of them shall be liable only on the default of the other, the third person not being a party to such contract, the liability of each of such two persons to the third person under the first contract is not affected by the existence of the 2nd contract, although such third person may have been aware of its existence.

A and B make a joint and several promissory-note to C. A makes it, in fact, as surety for B and C knows this at the time the note is made. The fact that A to the knowledge of C, made the note as surety for B, is no answer to a suit by C against A upon the note."

The section prevents the co-obligor to qualify his immediate liability to the creditor but goes no further and does not debar him from claiming his rights as a surety under the subsidiary contract referred to in the section and declared by the Legislature in the subsequent sections which follows including s. 141 of the Act. If Messrs. Cox & Co. had acceded to the request of the appellant they were indubitably entitled to retain the surplus sale-proceeds in part-payment of the dishonoured bill as secured creditors. The appellant has paid the amount and is, therefore, entitled to the same lien which Messrs. Cox & Co., had over the surplus sale-proceeds.

I am of opinion that the Official Receiver was in error in rejecting the appellant's claim. I allow the appeal with costs and order that the costs of the appellant do come out of the estate of the insolvents.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of a suit by a son to challenge a sale of 2 kanals 9 marlas of land by his father at the rate of Rs. 1,000 per kanal. The findings of the lower Appellate Court are that the plaintiff and the vendor formed a joint Hindu family at the time of the sale and that the transaction was for the benefit of the estate. The suit was dismissed on these findings.

In second appeal two arguments have been addressed to me. The first is based on the summary set forth by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Brij Narain Rai v. Mangla Prasad Rai (1) of the circumstances in which the managing member of a joint undivided family can alienate or burden the estate. The first of these is stated to be that he cannot alienate or burden the estate except for purposes of necessity and it is contended that the term "necessity" represents actual pressure on an estate or danger to be averted by prompt discharge of liabilities, etc., and that an act of improvement of the estate cannot come within its scope. Against this view the lower Appellate Court has cited two rulings both of which are apposite. The first is Nagindas Maneklal v. Mahomed Yusuf Mitchela (2) where adult co-parceners had sold a dilapidated house. The family was in fairly good circumstances and it was not necessary to sell the house but the house yielded no income. It was held that the agreement of sale was binding on the minor co-parceners and that there was no reason to put a restricted interpretation upon the word "necessity" so as to exclude a case like that before the Judges. Mr. Justice Fawcett expressed the opinion that there was no authority for holding that legal necessity was confined entirely to cases where debts are to be paid or there is other financial pressure, and he cited in support of this view the observations of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanoomanpersaud Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (3) which recognized the power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own "in case of need or for the benefit of the estate." The second case was a decision by the Patna High Court printed as Sheetahal Singh v. Arjun Das (4) and dated the 10th of March 1920. There joint family property had been mortgaged in order to pay the premium for a 7 years' lease which was held to have resulted in considerable benefit to the joint family. It was argued before the learned Judges that later decisions of the Judicial Committee had modified the rule laid down in Hanoomanpersaud Pandey v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (3) and that the present rule requires a calamity affecting the whole family or necessity for its actual support or indispensable religious duties to justify an alienation. A large number of authorities was examined in connection with this argument and the conclusion, reached was that there had been no modification of the previous rule and that the manager of a joint family has an implied authority to do whatever is best for all concerned, the test being whether the transaction was one into which a prudent owner would enter in order to benefit the estate.

The learned Vakil for the appellant before me has urged that in Sahu Ram's case (5) the rule had been stated in the restricted form which he put forward. This is not so, for on page 444* the correct and general principle is said to be that if the debt was not "for the benefit of an estate" then the manager should have no power either of mortgage or sale of that estate in order to meet such a debt, and elsewhere allusion is made to "estate or family necessity," and in explaining the term "necessary purposes" the following passage occurs—"The principle in regard to this is analogous to that of the power vested in the head of a religious endowment or muth or of the guardian of an infant family. In all of the cases where it can be established that the estate itself that is under administration demanded, or the family interests justified, the expenditure, then those entitled to the estate are bound by transaction." This definition certainly does not exclude what might be described as benefit to the estate.

The second argument is that there was no benefit to the estate in the present case but the findings of fact of the lower Appellate Court are against this contention. They are that a fancy price was obtained for the land, that the land was yielding no income to the joint Hindu family and that the sale proceeds were invested in five years' cash certificates bringing in interest at the rate of Rs. 150 per annum. The sale was effected in May 1920. The lower Appellate Court took notice of the fact that the actual cash certificates had not been produced in the Trial Court, but it held that this was not necessary as there was no reason to disbelieve the statement of the witness Bhagwan Das who said that the investment had actually been made. An attempt has been made to re-agitate this point and the statement has been made to me that the cash certificates were actually called for by the plaintiff in the Trial Court. This statement, however, is proved from the record to be incorrect.

Neither finding of the learned District Judge that the transaction was for the benefit of the estate, and that under Hindu Law it binds the plaintiff can be interfered with, and I dismiss the appeal with costs.

Pre-emption—Price fixed in good faith—Finding of fact—Appeal, second—Finding, whether can be challenged.

Where a Court of first appeal disbelieves the witnesses produced by a pre-emptor in support of his allegation that the price mentioned in the sale-deed was not fixed in good faith, its finding that the price was fixed in good faith cannot be challenged in second appeal. [p 672, col 1]

Second appeal against a decree and judgment of the District Judge, Rai Bareli, dated the 4th April 1925, modifying that of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Partabgarh, dated the 31st July 1924.

Mr. H. D. Chandra, for the Appellant.

Mr. Bishambhar Nath Khanna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for pre-emption brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Indarpal Singh, on the basis of a sale deed dated 2nd June 1922, executed by one Naghai Singh and another in favour of the respondents. The sale-deed related to a share in village Chandarbhan, Patti Gokul Sah, District Partabgarh, and was for a sum of Rs. 2,400. The plaintiff alleged that the consideration stated in the sale-deed was fictitious, and that the price actually agreed upon between the parties to the sale was Rs. 1,800. He, therefore, claimed pre-emption of the property sold on payment of the said sum of Rs. 1,800. In defence, the title of the plaintiff to pre-empt was denied, and it was contended that the price entered in the sale-deed was fixed in good faith, and that the plaintiff could not be allowed to pre-empt on payment of any sum less than Rs. 2,400, the price entered in the sale-deed. The Trial Court, the Additional Subordinate Judge of Partabgarh, by his judgment dated the 31st July 1924, held that the plaintiff was entitled to pre-empt and decreed the suit on payment of Rs. 1,800 being of opinion that the price entered in the sale-deed had not been fixed in good faith and that the sum of Rs. 1,800 was the price which had actually been agreed upon and which was the fair market value of the property sold. Against this decree the defendants-respondents appealed to the Court of the District Judge of Rae Bareli, who, by his decree dated 4th April 1925, set aside the judgment of the Trial Court, and held that the price mentioned in the sale-deed was the actual price which had been agreed upon between the parties, and on that finding, he varied the decree of the Trial Court by passing a decree for pre-emption on payment of Rs. 2,400.

The plaintiff now comes up in second appeal to this Court, and on his behalf it is contended that the finding of the lower Appellate Court should not be accepted, inasmuch as the appellant in this Court had produced evidence sufficient to discharge the burden of proof that lay upon him. It is contended that, in accordance with the ruling laid down in a decision of the late Judicial Commissioner's Court of Oudh, Dwarka v. Ludar (1), in a suit for pre-emption only very slight evidence is required of the plaintiff to support his allegation, that the price entered in the sale-deed was not the true price, in order to shift the burden of proof on the vendee. We have to examine how far that contention, pressed on behalf of the appellant, can be entertained in second appeal.

There were three witnesses produced by the appellant in the Trial Court, namely, Mata Bhik and Sita Ram, the two attesting witnesses to the sale-deed in suit, and Naghai Singh, one of the vendors. The story narrated by the two marginal witnesses above mentioned was disbelieved by the Trial Court. That Court, however, believed the evidence of the vendor, Naghai Singh, and, taking other facts into consideration, came to the conclusion that the consideration stated in the sale-deed was a fictitious consideration. In appeal the learned District Judge agreed with the Trial Court in its view that the evidence of the two marginal witnesses was untrustworthy and could not be relied upon. He went a step further, however, and disbelieved the evidence of the vendor, Naghai, also. He stated in his judgment :

"Naghai Singh also has not spoken the truth and is not worthy of credit."

The result at which the learned District Judge arrived was, that he disbelieved all the witnesses produced in the case by the plaintiff-appellant, and was of opinion that the plaintiff had altogether failed to prove that he had given even the slight evidence of want of good faith in the statement of the price entered in the sale-deed, as laid down in the ruling quoted above. In these circumstances, there is no point of law left in the appeal. It was for the lower Appellate Court to have accepted or not the evidence of Naghai Singh, the vendor. It could not see its way to accept that evidence, and came to a finding of fact that there was no evidence which had been produced in the case by the plaintiff sufficient to justify him in shifting the burden of proof on to the other side. It, therefore, appears to us to be clear that the finding of fact arrived at in this case by the lower Appellate Court cannot be disturbed in second appeal.

We, therefore, direct that the appeal should stand dismissed with costs.

Mr. C. Rama Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Appeal from the decree of the Subordinate Judge of Cocanada in A. S. No. 45 of 1921.

The plaintiff and defendant entered into an oral agreement whereby the defendant was permitted to rest the beams of a structure upon plaintiff's wall, and to open certain cupboards in the said wall, in exchange for land which plaintiff added to his property. Plaintiff alleges that the full amount of land has not been made over to him, and sues to have the cupboards and beams removed. The lower Appellate Court has found that less land than what is alleged by plaintiff was agreed to be exchanged, and that defendant has fulfilled his part of the agreement. Accordingly it has dismissed plaintiff's suit and plaintiff appeals.

Two points have been argued.

(1). The lower Appellate Court's finding on the facts is not based upon any evidence (10th ground of appeal).

(2). The exchange pleaded by defendant is not valid since there was no registered document and no delivery (2nd ground).

I do not find that the lower Appellate Court proceeded without regard to the evidence. Appalaswami (D. W. No. 3) says that the land given in exchange extended to the west as far as the line in continuation of the western boundary of the western verandah of plaintiff's house and to the north of the red line in Ex. "B." That is the triangular section south of the new wall and north of the red boundary line which the Subordinate Judge finds to have been the portion surrendered by defendant and this finding on the evidence cannot be traversed in second appeal.

It is a very small trip of land admittedly below Rs. 100 in value (District Munsif's judgment, para. 7). Therefore, there is no question of the necessity of a registered document. Each party has delivered possession to the other, the defendant by allowing plaintiff to wall off the triangle of land, and the plaintiff by constructing the cupboards on defendant's side of the wall and having them available for his use. Therefore, the exchange is valid, and plaintiff has no right to oust the defendant. As regards the other grounds of appeal, (grounds Nos. 2 and 3), if an exchange for defendant's land plaintiff has only obtained an easement (and the transfer of the portion of his wall occupied by the cupboards is not a transfer of tangible property), then there is no question of plaintiff's transferring (apart from creating) any immoveable property either tangible or intangible. The only transfer would be the transfer of defendant's triangle, and the transaction is on the same footing as it would be if plaintiff had given cash instead of an easement in exchange for this land. This point, that the grant of an easement is not a transfer of ownership, is laid down in Bhagwan Sahai v. Narsingh Sahai (1), the ruling quoted by the lower Appellate Court. The Subordinate Judge may have overlooked that the other side of the bargain, the transfer of defendant's land, is a transfer of ownership, but to establish that transaction proof of delivery is sufficient because, as I showed above, its value is well below Rs. 100.

Ground No 4—And if plaintiff has transferred tangible property by the transfer of the cupboard space, then again, its value is so small that proof of delivery is sufficient.

Ground No 5—There is no such finding. The site "all along the northern side" which the Subordinate Judge finds was intended to be given is just that triangle which I have explained above and that has been given.

Grounds Nos 7 and 8 do not arise and there is no question of onus.

The appeal fails on all grounds and is dismissed with costs.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s 28—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 60—Provident Funds Act (IX of 1897), s 2 (4)—"Compulsory deposit", meaning of—Deposit paid out to insolvent—Attachment

A "compulsory deposit" within the meaning of s 2 (4), Provident Funds Act, is such deposit only so long as it remains in the fund, and not after it has been paid over to the person to whose credit it had hitherto stood [p 674, col 1]

Therefore, a compulsory deposit under the Provident Funds Act, after it has been paid out of the funds to an insolvent, is not exempt from attachment. [ibid]

Appeal against an order of the Fourth Additional District Judge, Lucknow, dated the 5th March 1925.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. Ram Shankar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the Fourth Additional Judge of Lucknow in insolvency proceedings. The insolvent, R J De Cruze, resigned his position as an employee in the Oudh & Rohilkhand Railway. A sum of Rs. 4,800 standing to his credit in the provident fund was then returned to him. He had at an earlier date been made an insolvent, but had not been discharged. A creditor, the appellant, asked (no Receiver having been appointed) to be allowed to attach this sum. The lower Court, relying on the case of Nagindas Bhukandas v Ghelabhai Gulabdas (1), upheld this contention. The question in this appeal is whether the lower Court was right in doing so.

The decision relied upon appears to us to be on all fours with the present case, but we regret that we are not disposed to follow it. It was admitted in the judgment of the Bombay Court that, under s. 16 (4) of the Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907, which is identical with s. 28 (4) of the present Act, V of 1920, all property acquired by an insolvent after the date of adjudication and before his discharge, shall forthwith vest in the Court or Receiver, and it was remarked that, at first sight, it would appear that these words in their literal construction are free from any doubt. But the Bombay High Court refused to adopt a literal construction on two grounds. The first ground was that in the English case, Cohen v Mitchell (2), the English Court had declined to follow the literal construction of ss 41 and 54 of the English Bankruptcy Act on the ground of inconvenience and the Bombay High Court pointed out, that in a previous case decided by the Bombay High Court, Alimahamad v. Vadilal Deichand (3), the Court had allowed itself the same measure of freedom. It suffices to say that the earlier Bombay case was distinguishable both from the later Bombay case and from the present case, inasmuch as in that case the insolvent had transferred property in good faith acquired by him after the adjudication order to a third party for value. It was not pleaded in this case that the provident fund money had passed out of the control of the insolvent. In the later Bombay case, however, it has been held, that neither the Official Assignee nor the Official Receiver (and similarly the Court) has any claim to money drawn by an insolvent as his provident fund from a Railway Company. The English ruling Cohen v. Mitchell (2) the decision in Nagindas Bhukandas v. Ghelabhai Gulabdas (1), was based on other considerations. It invoked s. 4 of the Provident Funds Act, 1897, which is still in force. This section provides that neither the Official Assignee nor Receiver, appointed under Ch. XX of the C. P. C. shall be entitled to or have any claim on a compulsory deposit. The present s. 57 of the Provincial Insolvency Act V of 1920, takes the place of s. 351 of the C. P. C. of 1882 as regards the appointment of Receivers. The Bombay High Court expressed the opinion that the words "shall be entitled to or have any claim on any such compulsory deposit," would bar a claim to a compulsory deposit, even after it had been paid over to the insolvent. In so doing we consider that the Bombay High Court ignored the definition of "compulsory deposit" contained in s. 2 (4) of the Provident Funds Act, IX of 1897. The definition runs as follows :—

"'Compulsory deposit' means a subscription or deposit which is not repayable on demand, or at the option of the subscriber or depositor, etc." In our opinion the words "repayable on demand" clearly show that a compulsory deposit is only a deposit so long as it remains in the fund, and not after it has been paid over to the person to whose credit it had hitherto stood.

The respondent's Counsel invoked sub-s. (5) of s. 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, V of 1920. This provision excludes from attachment of property which is exempted by the C. P. C., 1908. Turning to the C. P. C., 1908, we find that s. 60 (1), proviso (k), exempts from attachment all compulsory deposits and other sums in or derived from any fund to which the Provident Funds Act, 1897, for the time being applies, in so far as they are declared by the said Act not to be liable to attachment, but we have already stated that the Provident Funds Act, 1897, only exempts compulsory deposits, and that the definition of compulsory deposit will not include money after it has been paid out of the funds to an insolvent. The C. P. C., does not, therefore, carry us any further or assist the insolvent.

We are not concerned here with deciding whether the Bombay High Court in its earlier decision, quoted above, was right in holding that the Receiver could not interfere with property once it was transferred to a third party in good faith for consideration by the insolvent after an order of adjudication. It is obvious that money paid over by an insolvent to his wife, as is alleged to have been the case in respect of this money by appellant's Counsel, cannot come under this description of property. For the above reasons, dissenting from the decision in Nagindas Bhukandas v. Gelabhai Gulabdas (1), we allow this appeal with costs, and direct the lower Court to take into consideration the appellant's application on its merits.

Revision from an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Delhi, dated the 23rd January 1923.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the plaintiff's suit has been dismissed as barred by limitation under Art. 83 and a revision from that order is before me.

The facts are briefly that the plaintiff sued on a lengthy account showing a shifting balance, sometimes in favour of the petitioner and sometimes in favour of the other. He was a commission agent and as such received goods from the defendants and also discounted the defendants' hundis, and he claimed on these facts that his suit was governed by Art 85. The Trial Court has relied on Maughu Ram v Firm of Ram Saran Das-Maman Chand (1), in which the facts are not identical, for apparently there was no mutual, open and current account in that case and the transactions between the parties were confined to certain hundi transactions. Counsel for the petitioner has relied on Ratan Chand-Jwala Das v Asa Singh-Bagha Singh (2), Ratan Chand-Jwala Das v. Asa Singh-Bagha Singh (3) and Namberumal Chettu v. Kotayya (4), the last of which is exactly in point and indeed the facts are identical with the small distinction that in that case the plaintiff advanced monies to defendant out and out whereas in this case he merely discounted the hundis, the result being the same.

Following these authorities I find that although the parties have had dealings as commission agent and principal in virtue of the mutual open and current account which relates both to these dealings and to the hundi transactions the suit is governed by Art. 85, and, therefore, is within time.

I accept the revision, set aside the finding of the Trial Court and return the case for decision on the merits. Costs of the petitioner will be paid by respondents

JUDGMENT.

Misra, J.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit for redemption brought by the plaintiff-appellant against the defendant-respondent and certain other persons. The facts so far as they are material for purposes of this appeal are as follows—

One Jam Ali executed, on the 17th June 1865, a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 50 in respect of certain lands, situate in village Karmulapur, District Bara Banki, in favour of one Lodhey, the father of defendants Nos. 2 and 3. It was stipulated in the deed that the profits of the property mortgaged were to be appropriated by the mortgagee in lieu of interest. Subsequently, under a deed executed on the 17th January 1870, the said Jam Ali borrowed a sum of Rs. 150 from the same Lodhey agreeing to pay the said amount by instalments and in case the money was not paid at the stipulated time it was to be paid with interest at 2 per cent. per mensem at the time of redemption. It was also stipulated in this deed that without the payment of the money borrowed thereunder the mortgagor would not be entitled to redeem the property mortgaged under the deed of 1865. The plaintiff-appellant, Musammat Raisunnisa, who seeks redemption, is one of the heirs of Jam Ali, the original mortgagor, being one of his grand-daughters and who is admitted for the purposes of this litigation, by the parties to be the sole heir and representative of Jam Ali, the mortgagor. The defendant-respondent, Zorawar Sah, is also admitted to be the sole representative of the mortgagee.

The contest mainly centred round the deed of the 17th January 1870. Its genuineness was denied by the appellant; it was urged on her behalf that the deed, even if genuine, did not create any charge on the property in suit and she was not liable to pay the money due under it. It was also contended that the deed being unregistered, could not operate as a charge on the property mortgaged and that, in any case, she was not bound to pay the amount of money due under it since the claim regarding that amount was barred by limitation. The last plea was not raised in either of the Courts below, but has been urged for the first time here.

The Trial Court, the Munsif of Fatehpur, by his decree dated the 1st of September 1924, decided that the deed of 1870 was genuine and that the plaintiff was bound to pay the money due under it. He accordingly decreed the plaintiff's claim for redemption directing her to pay the principal sum of Rs. 50 due under the deed of 1865 and Rs. 1,878 due under the deed of 1870.

The plaintiff appealed against this decree to the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki and the learned Subordinate Judge by his decree dated the 10th February 1925 has confirmed the decree of the Trial Court and dismissed the plaintiff's appeal.

The plaintiff has again appealed to this Court and the contentions raised on her behalf are three-fold ;

First, that the deed of the 17th January 1870 cannot be construed as a deed of further charge;

Secondly, that even if it be construed as a deed of further charge it cannot be operative as such, being unregistered; and

Thirdly, that the claim under the said deed is barred by limitation.

In respect of the first contention reliance is placed on behalf of the appellant mainly on a ruling of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh reported in Ram Adhin Misra v. Sitla Bakhsh Singh (1) in which it was held that because in the body of the deed in dispute in that case there was nothing to show that any interest in immoveable property was transferred it could not be considered as other than a simple bond for the payment of the money received and that the fact that the executant of the deed covenanted that he should not be allowed to redeem the mortgage until he had satisfied the deed, did not render the deed a deed of mortgage or a deed of further charge, and the fact that the deed was described as a deed of further charge had not the effect of making it such a deed. This was the view promulgated by my learned brother, Mr. Justice Stuart, who decided that case. The view held in that case has now to be accepted with caution in view of a later Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court in Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (2). My learned brother was also a member of the Bench which decided that case and it appears that he has very much modified the view that was taken by him in the above Oudh case. It is, however, not necessary for me to come to a definite decision on this matter in this case, since the learned Counsel for the respondent did not press the contention that the deed was a deed of further charge.

It is also unnecessary to decide whether the deed can be considered to be a valid deed in spite of its not having been registered, but I may point out that in the year 1870 no Registration Act was in force in the Province of Oudh, the first Registration Act introduced in this Province being Act VIII of 1871. Till the introduction of the said Act registration in this Province was governed by the registration rules promulgated by the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh and under those rules it was not compulsory to register deeds like the one before us.

The main point which has been argued on both sides in this Court is whether the deed, considering it to be a simple deed, can be enforced against the appellant. I have no doubt, in my mind, that the plaintiff-appellant being one of the heirs and representatives of the original mortgagor, Jam Ali, cannot escape the liability of the payment under the deed in dispute. I am supported in this view by decisions of the various High Courts as well as by those of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, vide Allu Khan v. Roshan Khan (3), Hari Mahadaji Savarkar v. Balambhat Raghunath Khare (4), Gaya Prasad v. Rachpal (5) and Naunidh Lal v. Mahadeo Singh (6) and also the Oudh case first quoted in the earlier part of this judgment.

It also appears to me that there is no force in the plea of limitation raised by the learned Counsel for the appellant. Turning to the deed in question I find that it provides that the money borrowed under it was to be paid in instalments and that in case the instalments provided for, were not paid on due dates specified therein, the mortgagor was to pay the sum due under the deed with interest at the time of redemption. It is, therefore, clear that the mortgagee was clearly entitled to wait for the money due under this deed and is competent to demand it now when redemption is being sought for against him. It is not competent to the appellant to plead limitation in regard to a claim put forward by the defendant-respondent under this deed, because it is a settled rule of law that limitation cannot be pleaded against a claim made by way of defence. If any authority were needed in support of the point I would quote a case decided by a Bench of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh of which my learned brother, Mr Justice Stuart, was a member. It is reported in Meharban Singh v. Raghunath Singh (7).

I am of opinion that there is no force in this appeal.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Stuart, C. J.—I agree with my learned brother as to the order passed in this appeal, and add that my views as to the interpretation and effect of deeds of this nature will be found in my decision in Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (2).

Appeal against an order of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, in C. E. No. 5166 of 1924

Mr B. K. Naidu, for the Appellants.

Mr. U Sein Tun Aung, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In Suit No 1268 of 1921 in the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon, appellant obtained a decree against respondent and two others, namely, Po U and respondent's husband V. Paul, for Rs 2,000 (with interest) alleged to be due on a promissory note for Rs 5,000 executed by Po U and Paul, respondent having guaranteed payment of that amount.

Recently appellant applied for execution against respondent by attachment and sale of certain furniture belonging to her in Rangoon.

Respondent objected to his application on the ground that in consideration of her paying in full the amount of the decree which appellant had obtained against the same defendants in another suit, appellant had agreed not to take out execution of the decree in the present suit against either her or her husband.

Appellant admitted that the decree in the other suit had been satisfied, but he said that the money was paid by one Po Hman and not by respondent and he denied that he entered into any such agreement as that alleged or that such agreement if made would be effective.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court, after hearing the evidence called by the parties, held that the agreement was proved and dismissed appellant's application for execution.

Appellant appeals on the grounds that the agreement was not proved and that even if it was, it could not be recognized by the Court executing the decree because, it had not been certified under O. XXI, r. 2.

Respondent's learned Advocate replies that the agreement did not amount to satisfaction or adjustment of the decree and that, therefore, there was no bar to its recognition.

We have no doubt that such an agreement would amount to an adjustment or satisfaction of the decree as against respondent, and that as it was not certified it could not be recognized as a bar to execution.

We, therefore, set aside the lower Court's order dismissing appellant's application and direct the Court to deal with the application according to law.

Respondent will pay appellant's costs in this Court—Advocate's fee to be two gold mohurs.

Nuisance—Latrine—Test.

The question as to whether a latrine constitutes a nuisance from the legal point of view, must be judged by general standards on the principle enunciated in the legal maxim lex non favet votis delicatorem, and a particular latrine cannot be such a nuisance if latrines of the sort are common all over the city. [p 678, col 2.]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 24th January 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 86 of 1924.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the judgments of the lower Courts. What has been urged on behalf of the appellants is that on the facts proved in this case a legal inference of a private nuisance should have been drawn, and in this connection I have been referred to the decision in Bai Bhicaiji v. Perojshaw Jiwanji (1). I may say at once that the facts of that case are very dissimilar from those of the present one. In the Bombay case a large set of stables for hackney carriages and their horses were put up close to the plaintiff's residence. Here, on the other hand, we are dealing with a crowded portion of Nagpur City, in which the provision of a private latrine for most of the houses is practically a necessity. The previous latrine of Krishnarao was apparently built to the south of his house, whereas the present one is to the west. The latrine trap is only some 15 feet from the plaintiffs' door, but, on the other hand, the evidence shows that it has been constructed on the latest principles and that the trap for removing sewage is concealed from any one standing at the plaintiffs' door by a wall, and opens towards the north.

It is true that the evidence of Dr. Sen shows that he had originally recommended the original site for the latrine but the Building Sub-Committee apparently sanctioned the present site. I have considered the evidence of the 3 expert witnesses and it does not seem to me to make out a case of a private nuisance. One has a certain amount of sympathy with a person of the plaintiffs' position, but in the present congested state of Nagpur City it seems to me that it would be a serious matter to predicate of the present latrine that it constitutes a private nuisance. So far as one can judge from the map, the same proposition might apply equally well to any and every other possible site for the latrine opening, as it must do, on to a public road for convenience of removal of the sewage by the Municipal sweepers. Happily, therefore, it does not seem necessary for me, from the legal point of view, to hold that the latrine in question constitutes a nuisance of the kind the plaintiffs allege. Dr. Sen's opinion is that it is not such a nuisance, and Dr. Paranjpe (D. W. No. 1) is also of the similar opinion.

The question of whether a latrine like the present constitutes a nuisance from the legal point of view, must be judged by general standards and, as Stanyon, A. J. C., pointed out in Municipal Committee of Saugor v. Nilkanth (2) "lex non favet votis delicatorem." Now, in the present instance the facts are that latrines of the sort are common all over Nagpur City. They are what may be termed an evil necessity. In the congested state of Nagpur City it is almost inevitable that such latrines or their trap doors may be in close proximity, or even in view of dwelling houses, although every endeavour is presumably made to avoid this. In the present instance any site adopted for the latrine would probably cause annoyance to the occupant of some adjoining house were he as fastidious as the plaintiffs. It is further clear that the latrine constructed is of an improved type and that every effort has been made to reduce any nuisance caused thereby.

In the circumstances I think the lower Courts were correct in holding that a private nuisance has not been established and the appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Misra, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for possession brought by the plaintiff-appellant, Kedar Nath in respect of a zemindari share mortgaged to him under a mortgage-deed dated 8th June 1909. The suit was decided by the Subordinate Judge of Hardoi on the 26th of November 1924. The Subordinate Judge allowed the defendants to redeem and decreed the suit only in case the defendants did not choose to redeem the property. His decree has been confirmed by the District Judge of Hardoi by his decree dated the 11th February 1925.

The mortgage-deed on the basis of which possession was claimed by the plaintiff-appellant was executed by Bhikham Singh, defendant No 1, and his brother Sumer Singh, father of the defendants Nos. 2 and 3, for Rs 326 bearing interest at 12 per cent. per annum compoundable yearly in favour of the plaintiff's father since deceased. The mortgagee was entitled under the terms of the mortgage to take possession of the mortgaged property in case that mortgage was not redeemed within the period of 3 years fixed in the mortgage-deed. Bhikham Singh alone executed two deeds of further charge each for Rs. 100 one on the 30th June, 1914, and the other on the 10th November 1917

The defendants Nos. 4 to 8 were also made parties to the suit as subsequent transferees.

The defendant No. 1 Bhikham Singh did not contest the plaintiff's claim and defendants Nos 2 and 3 claimed redemption in the present suit and the plaintiff did not dispute their right. The case was tried ex parte against defendants Nos. 4 and 5 while defendants Nos 6 to 8 expressed their willingness to pay all the money due on the mortgage-deed and the deed of further charge. The real contesting defendants in the case were defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who claimed redemption in the case and contended that the rate of interest provided in the mortgage-deed could not be enforced as it was not justified by legal necessity. On the date the issues were framed in the case by the Trial Court the plaintiff's Pleader expressly stated before the Court that the plaintiff had no objection to allow the defendants to redeem the property mortgaged in this suit

The point that remained for decision in the case was the rate of interest which the defendants should be asked to pay in case they chose to redeem the property. The learned Subordinate Judge came to the conclusion that the rate of interest provided in the deed was not justified by legal necessity and so reduced it to 12 per cent. per annum simple. His decree was confirmed by the learned District Judge in appeal.

In second appeal before us only two points are urged on behalf of the appellant; the first was to the effect that it was not within the jurisdiction of the Courts below to pass a decree for redemption in a suit in which the appellant claimed possession of the property; the second was to the effect that the rate of interest provided in the deed was a fair rate of interest and should not have been reduced by the Courts below. A subsidiary question regarding the costs of the suit was also raised which would be discussed at the end of our judgment.

On the first point we are clearly of opinion that the contention raised by the learned Pleader on behalf of the appellant cannot be sustained. We have indicated in the earliest portion of our judgment that the plaintiff's Pleader expressed willingness on behalf of his client to allow the defendant to redeem the property and it was in these circumstances that the Trial Court passed a decree for redemption in favour of the defendant. In fact of this clear attitude taken on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant we cannot now allow him in second appeal to raise the contention that the Courts below had no jurisdiction to decree redemption in the present suit. We, therefore, overrule that contention.

On the second point the law as laid down by their Lordships of the Privy Council is quite clear. In Nawab Nazir Begum v. Rao Raghunath (1), quoted in his judgment by the learned District Judge, their Lordships of the Privy Council laid it down that it was incumbent on those who supported the mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family to show not only that there was necessity to borrow but it was not unreasonable to borrow at such a high rate and upon such terms and if it was not shown that there was any necessity to borrow at the rate and upon such terms as contained in the mortgage-deed that rate and those terms cannot stand. It is, therefore, clear that the burden of proving that the rate of interest provided for in the deed was justified by legal necessity lay on the plaintiff. There was no evidence given by him in proof of such necessity. The only evidence to which our attention was drawn by the learned Pleader on behalf of the plaintiff-appellant was that in a previous deed of mortgage executed by the grandfather of Bhikham Singh the same rate of interest was provided for as in the deed in suit and that the said deed formed part of the consideration of the deed in question in the present suit. We, however, do not consider that that could be considered as the evidence of the legal necessity regarding the rate of interest provided for in the deed in suit. There may be necessity for contracting a loan at a particular rate of interest and at a certain time and yet there may be no necessity for contracting a loan at the same rate at some other time subsequently. We, therefore, hold that the plaintiff-appellant failed to establish that the rate of interest stipulated in the mortgage-deed in suit was justified by legal necessity. Both the Courts below have exercised their discretion by reducing the interest from 12 per cent. per annum compoundable half yearly to 12 per cent. per annum simple and no argument has been addressed to us to justify us in holding that the discretion was exercised wrongly or in an unreasonable manner. Unless it can be shown that the discretion exercised by the Courts below was exercised in an unreasonable manner no case will have been made out for interference by us, in appeal [vide Dargahi v. Rajeshwari Pershad (2)].

We, therefore, maintain the decision of the Courts below on the point of legal necessity as well.

Regarding the question of costs it was urged before us that the Courts below while allowing the defendants to redeem the property should have ordered them to pay costs of the suit as well, declaring them to be a charge on the property to be redeemed. The Trial Court ordered that the plaintiff's costs in either case should be paid by the defendants Nos. 1 to 3. The defendants Nos. 4 to 8 who are subsequent transferees were not ordered to pay costs of the suit. We find that no separate costs were incurred by the plaintiff owing to the defendants Nos. 4 to 8 having been impleaded in the case. The trial against them was ex parte and no case has been made out for allowing costs to the plaintiff against those defendants. We also find that the question of costs, in the form in which it has been raised before us, was not raised before the learned District Judge in appeal. We, therefore, reject this contention relating to costs in second appeal.

The appeal, therefore, fails and we dismiss it with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Shaw.—Their Lordships have heard the argument of Sir George Lowndes in this case. He has traversed ground which has been for many years familiar in Bengal. The only question in the case is whether ss 8 and 10 of the Regulations referred to were complied with

The only point that now remains on the appeal is, there having been no general notice put up as the Act requires, whether the objection under s. 10 of the Regulations is not instantly fatal to the present appellant's case. Their Lordships, having heard the argument, think that nothing has been pleaded which would induce them to vary the opinion which has been delivered by the Courts below. In their Lordships' opinion the appeal accordingly ought to be dismissed and they will humbly advise His Majesty accordingly.

A co-parcener of a Hindu joint family cannot be allowed to impugn the rate of interest in any deed to which he himself is a party, or where by his statements or conduct, he must be deemed to have admitted the propriety of the rate [p 682, col 1]

Where a co-parcener executes a deed of further charge, in which he recites earlier deeds of further charge executed by other co-parceners, he should be inferred to have admitted their validity in every respect, and cannot be allowed subsequently to set up that the earlier deeds were for an excessive rate of interest [ibid]

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Second Additional Sub-Judge, Lucknow, dated the 27th February 1925, confirming those of the Munsif, District Lucknow, dated the 23rd September 1924.

Messrs Ganga Dayal and Murari Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr Bishehsvar Dayal Srivastava, for Respondent No. 1.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the transferee of the interest of two mortgagors. The deed in question was dated the 1st of March 1909 and was a usufructuary mortgage for Rs. 800 re-payable in 12 years. It is not now in dispute that by four subsequent mortgages set forth in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, the principal sum secured by the mortgage-deed was increased by Rs. 510 together with interest. It is, however, a question to be decided in this appeal whether the lower Courts were right in reducing the rate of interest secured by these four deeds of further charge. The second point is whether under the terms of the parent deed, the mortgagors were liable for a sum in respect of a certain area which had remained in their possession. The third point is whether the lower Courts should have awarded interest from the date up to which its decree directed payment to be made to the date of actual realization of payment. The last point is whether the lower Courts were right in refusing to award the costs to the mortgagee.

As to the first question Exs. A2 and A3 are deeds of further charge executed by Subh Karan Singh, the elder mortgagor, on his own behalf and on behalf of his brother, Naurang Singh, who was then a minor. The rate of interest might have been challenged by Naurang Singh. So far from doing so we find that Exs. A4 and A5 which are by Naurang Singh on behalf of himself and his brother Subh Karan Singh (who was at the time in Jail) recite the fact of the execution of the deeds Exs. A2 and A3 and profess to be further charges in addition to the charges created by those first two deeds. We are of opinion that where a co-parcener executes a deed of further charge in which he recites earliest deeds of further charges by which act we hold that he should be inferred to have admitted their validity in every respect he cannot be allowed subsequently to set up that the earlier deeds were for an excessive rate of interest. Apart from this, it may be stated that the rate of interest in all the four deeds was the same. Neither brother could, therefore, have been allowed to contend that what he himself thought a proper rate was not a proper rate for his brother to fix. The transferees of the brother can be in no better position than the brother. The lower Appellate Court appears to us to have gone wrong in ignoring the fact that the execution of these deeds of further charge at the same rate precludes a case being set up by the mortgagors that the rate was excessive. The decisions quoted by the lower Appellate Court refer, we understand, to cases where a co-parcener who is not a party to a deed by another co-parcener, would resist the rate agreed to by that other co-parcener as being unnecessary. They are no authority for allowing the rate of interest in any deed to be impugned by a co-parcener who was himself a party to that deed or must be deemed by his statements or conduct to have admitted the propriety of the rate.

As to the second point, whether the mortgagors were liable for use and occupation of the land reserved for their possession, the deed of mortgage of the 1st March 1909 contains no provision for the mortgagors retaining possession of any land. It contains a provision that before redemption all claims against the mortgagors in favour of the mortgagee must be settled, but there is no evidence in this case to show what were the terms on which possession of this small area was retained by the mortgagor. The possession must have been retained with the assent of the mortgagee, but we cannot infer that any rent was payable, or, if so, what rent is payable. We, therefore, hold that no claim in respect of this land has been made out against the mortgagors and the lower Courts were right in refusing to debit the mortgagor with any sum on this account.

The third point raised is whether future interest should be allowed from the date on which by the decree of the lower Courts the mortgage-money was to be re-paid and the date of actual realization thereof. We find nothing in O. XXXIV, r. 7, or in the prescribed form for a preliminary decree (given as No. 5 of Appendix D of the C. P. C.) that empowers a Court to award such interest. The appellant's learned Pleader, however, in the course of his arguments abandoned contest on the matter, and so without deciding the question from a legal point of view we reject this point taken in the grounds of appeal.

The last point to be decided is whether the lower Courts should have awarded the appellant mortgagee his costs. In the first appeal the appellant failed to raise a question of his costs in the first Court and he cannot, therefore, be allowed to claim them in second appeal. As to his costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court, we think that he should get them in proportion to his success, there being given no reason by the lower Appellate Court for withholding them.

We note that the decree of the first Court does not agree with its judgment. The decree should have been one providing, in default of payment of the sum decreed on the date fixed, for the property being sold inasmuch as the mortgage was a usufructuary one. This was ordered in the judgment. By some mistake the decree-writer has framed a decree directing that the plaintiff should be debarred from the right to redeem.

Accordingly we allow this appeal in part with costs to the appellant in both the lower Appellate Court and this Court in proportion to his success in this appeal. The plaintiff-respondent will also get his costs in the lower Appellate Court and in this Court in proportion to his success here. The order passed by the first Court as to costs will, however, stand. We extend the time for payment to six months from to day and direct the office to prepare now a decree under O. XXXIV, r. 7, according to this judgment providing for redemption of the property by payment within the said time of the money due, and for sale thereof, in default.

An agreement by a person to pay a certain quantity of grain every year to the cultivator of a field on account of the damage to be sustained by him owing to the cattle of the former passing over a strip of land in his field, is not a license but a lease, as it creates a right in such person, which could be exercised by his transferees or his servants and could not be revoked by the grantor [p 683, col 2]

A suit for recovery of value of such grain is, therefore, a suit for the rent of a field and is not triable by a Small Cause Court [ibid.]

Mr. M. Y. Sharif, for the Applicants.

Mr. P. C. Dutt, for the Non-Applicants.

JUDGMENT.—It is alleged in the plaint that all the eight defendants agreed in December 1922 that they would pay the plaintiff a certain quantity of urad on the 3rd of March every year on account of the damage to be sustained by him by his allowing them to take their cattle or carts over a strip of land one chain long and half a chain wide in one of his fields and another strip six chains long and twenty links wide in the next field, which also belongs to him. In answer to the objection that the suit was for rent and was not triable by a Small Cause Court the plaintiff's Pleader re-stated the case in these words. "The defendants are given a license to pass over the plaintiff's land. The claim is for license fee and not for rent. The suit is triable in this Court. The agreement was to pay 2½ khandies urad every year so long as the defendants took their cattle through the plaintiff's land. During the last 3 years in suit the defendants have been taking the cattle through plaintiff's land."

The agreement alleged satisfies the definition of a lease in s. 105 of the Transfer of Property Act and the payment alleged to have been promised that of rent in the same section. The definition of a license in s. 52 of the Easements Act is a negative definition, and it is at times difficult to distinguish between a license and a lease or an easement. But this particular agreement created a right in the defendants which could be exercised by their transferees or their servants or agents and could not be revoked by the grantor. It is apparent then from ss 56, 59 and 60 of the Easements Act that it cannot be a license. There is no suggestion that it is an easement. It must, therefore, be held to be lease, and the payment claimed is rent.

This stage of the case is slightly complicated by the fact that the eighth defendant Bhangi admitted the claim in the lower Court and that both he and the plaintiff Debi were represented by the same Counsel in this Court, a matter of which the learned Counsel himself was unaware till it was brought to his notice. He was asked to state the case for each of his clients separately, on the supposition that the decree against the applicants would be set aside for want of jurisdiction in the lower Court, and after consulting them urged on behalf of the plaintiff Debi that the whole decree ought to stand against Bhangi, and on behalf of Bhangi that he ought to be ordered to pay only one-eighth of the amount claimed, as he never meant to admit his liability for more than that. The position is ridiculous, and the whole decree must be set aside. If Bhangi desires to avoid further proceedings, he can easily do so by paying the share of the amount claimed which he admits is due by him, and the suit can go on against the remaining defendants for the rest.

The decree of the lower Court is set aside and it is ordered that the plaint shall be returned to the plaintiff for presentation in a Court having jurisdiction to try his suit. All the costs heretofore incurred by the applicants in both Courts will be paid by the plaintiff. The defendant Bhangi will pay his own costs. The Pleader's fee allowed in the lower Court is the grotesque sum of ten pies less than two rupees. In this Court it will be twenty five rupees.

Appeal from a decree of the Sub-Judge, Parulia, dated the 30th November 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Raghunathpur.

Mr. Achalendra Nath Das, for the Appellants.

Mr. Subal Chandra Mazumdar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Parulia reversing a decision of the Munsif of Raghunathpur and remanding a partition suit for allotment of hasil land and began according to the principles laid down in the judgment,

A preliminary objection is taken on behalf of the respondents that this is not a remand under O. XLI, r. 23 nor under r. 25 : it is remand under the inherent power of the Court and no appeal lies : Raghunandan Singh v. Jadunandan Singh (1). On behalf of the appellants it is contended that the order is a remand under O. XLI, r. 23. It seems to me plain that this is not a case of a suit being disposed of upon a preliminary point. The order of remand goes on to the whole principle on which the partition is to be made and there is no question of any preliminary point ; it affects the whole decision of the whole suit. The remand must, therefore, be taken to have been made under the inherent powers and no appeal lies.

I am then asked by the appellants to treat the appeal as an application in revision. The question then arises as to whether there is any point of jurisdiction. The contention on behalf of the appellants is that the parties having agreed to the allotment as made by the Commissioner, the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to alter ; and, secondly, that the Subordinate Judge had no jurisdiction to lay down a principle of partition which is against the settled law. Reference was made to a passage in the Commissioner's report where he says : " Both the parties requested me to divide that chak according to their respective shares keeping them in possession of their lands as far as practicable and accordingly I divide the chak keeping the parties in possession of their lands as far as possible." Evidently the partition made by the Commissioner did not meet the wishes of the parties because it was objected to when the report came before the Munsif. The objection of the defendant was that as he had reclaimed more of the danga land he ought to be left in possession of it. It cannot be, therefore, said, with any show of reason, that the allotment made by the Commissioner was agreed to by the parties. All that the parties agreed to was that they should be left in possession as far as possible, but from the manner in which this agreement was applied in practice there is no reason to suppose that the parties agreed to the allotment because in fact objection was taken to the partition actually made.

With regard to the principle of law, reference was made on behalf of the appellants to the decision of the Judicial Committee in Midnapur Zamindary Co. v. Naresb Narayan Roy (2) where it was laid down that if a co-sharer purchases any jote right in the lands held in common by the co-sharers such a purchase will be held to have been a purchase for the benefit of all the co-sharers, and it is contended that the view that the Munsif took was right, namely, that if the defendant expended money, on reclaiming the danga land which was held in common tenancy, he did so at his own risk and that the reclamation would be for the benefit of the joint property. On the other hand there is a decision reported as Kallian Banerji v. Modhusudun Banerji (3) where, in precisely similar circumstances to the present, the principle adopted by the learned Subordinate Judge was laid down by the Calcutta High Court. In any case if the learned Subordinate Judge was in error in this part of his judgment it is merely an error of law and does not affect his jurisdiction.

It was further contended that he had acted without jurisdiction in directing a partition of the Bagan because the Bagan was not partitioned by the Commissioner and no objection was taken on this score before the Munsif. It seems true that this objection was not taken before the Munsif; but the partition was to be a partition of the whole property and, if by oversight or for any other reason one of the properties was left unpartitioned I think that it was open to the parties to draw the attention of the learned Subordinate Judge to the omission and to get a direction from him in the matter.

In my opinion this appeal as a second appeal does not lie and must be dismissed with costs; nor can it succeed as an application in revision.

Adverse possession—Co-sharers—Ouster

In the case of co-owners the possession of one co-owner is in law the possession of the other co-owners as well, and it is not possible for one co-owner to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about that result [p 686, col 2].

The fact that a co-sharer has been in exclusive possession of the joint house and has been making repairs to it, is not enough to constitute ouster [p 687, col 1].

A co-sharer has a right to repair the whole of the house, and, if he does so, his act cannot be considered to be an act of such an hostile character that it may be considered as equivalent to a denial on his part of the title of the other co-owner or co-owners [ibid].

Second appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fyzabad, dated the 30th April 1924, setting aside that of the Munsif, Fyzabad, dated the 9th October 1923.

Mr. Naimullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Wasim, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal arising out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for possession by partition of a half share in a house situated in Mohalla Rakabganj, Fyzabad. The plaintiffs alleged that Sheo Ghulam, their predecessor-in-interest, purchased the half share in the house in dispute at an auction-sale in the year 1904, that they had obtained possession through Court and had been in possession of their half share since then. They now wanted their share to be partitioned. The defendants admitted the purchase made by Sheo Ghulam but pleaded that he never obtained possession over the share purchased by him and that they had throughout remained in possession of the said half share and thus had acquired title to it by adverse possession. They also pleaded that they had spent Rs. 575 in rebuilding the house and in case the plaintiffs be held entitled to a decree for possession of their share they should be made liable to pay half of this amount.

The Trial Court, the Munsif of Fyzabad, found that Sheo Ghulam had obtained possession of the share purchased by him through Court and had also succeeded in obtaining actual possession thereof. He, however, found that it was not established that the plaintiffs had remained in continuous possession of their share but that could not affect their title inasmuch as the possession of the defendants was that of co-owners and as such could not be considered to be adverse to the plaintiffs. He, therefore, overruled the plea of adverse possession and gave the plaintiffs a decree for possession by partition of their half share in the house. He, however, decreed possession subject to the payment of Rs. 194-0-7½ on account of their half share out of Rs. 388-1-3 which sum he held as proved to have been spent by the defendants on repairs and the new construction of the house in dispute.

On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge of Fyzabad came to a different conclusion. He held that the plaintiffs were never in actual possession of the share purchased by their predecessor-in-title Sheo Ghulam and thus the defendants had obtained title to their half share by adverse possession. He consequently allowed the appeal and dismissed the suit of the plaintiffs.

In second appeal it is contended before me that the decision of the learned Subordinate Judge on the question of adverse possession is wrong. It is contended on behalf of the plaintiffs that it having been established that Sheo Ghulam took possession of the property through Court and that he had remained for sometime in actual possession over half the share purchased by him the finding as to adverse possession could not be sustained. In support of this contention the learned Counsel for the appellants relied on Corea v. Apuhamy (1), Ahmad Raza Khan v. Ram Lal (2) and Nadir Singh v. Anpurna Kunwar (3).

On behalf of the respondents it is contended that under the circumstances established in the case adverse possession of the defendants over the half share purchased by Sheo Ghulam, the predecessor-in-interest of the plaintiffs-appellants, had been established and reliance is placed on a decision of the Calcutta High Court in Lokenath Singh v. Dhwakeshwar Prasad Narayan Singh (4).

(4) 27 Ind. Cas. 465; 21 C. L. J. 253; 20 C. W. N. 51.

I have taken time to consider my judgment. After considering the rulings cited on both sides I have come to the conclusion that this appeal must succeed and the plaintiffs appellants should be given a decree for possession of the half share in the house in dispute claimed by them. It is now well settled by numerous authorities that in the case of co-owners the possession of one co-owner is in law the possession of the other co-owners as well, and that it is not possible for one co-owner to put an end to that possession by any secret intention in his mind. Nothing short of ouster or something equivalent to ouster can bring about that result. It was urged on behalf of the respondents that circumstances in this case established adverse possession and in this connection reference was made to the judgment of Mookerjee, J., in the Calcutta case quoted above. In order to understand that the case actually decides, I will quote the following passage from the said judgment pages 257* and 258*:

"Every co-tenant has the right to enter into and occupy the common property and every part thereof, provided that in so doing he does not exclude his fellow-tenants or otherwise deny to them some right to which they are entitled as co-tenants; and they, on their part, may safely assume, until something occurs of which they must take notice and which indicates the contrary, that the possession taken and held by him is held as a co-tenant, and is in law the possession of all the co-tenants, and not adverse to any of them. It cannot be questioned, however, that one co-tenant may oust the others and set up an exclusive right of ownership in himself; and an open, notorious, and hostile possession of this character for the statutory period will ripen into title as against the co-tenants who were ousted. Thus, although, as a general rule, the possession of one co-tenant is not deemed adverse to the other co-tenants the existence of the relation of co-tenancy does not preclude one co-tenant from establishing an adverse possession in fact as against the other co-tenants; and though the co-tenant enters in the first instance without claiming adversely, his possession afterwards may become adverse. In order to render the possession of one co-tenant adverse to the others, not only must the occupancy be under an exclusive claim of ownership, in denial of the rights of the other co-tenants, but such occupancy must have been made known to the other co-tenants, either by express notice or by such open and notorious acts as must have brought home to the other co-tenants knowledge of the denial of their rights. The same principle is involved in the familiar statement that to enable one of several cotenants to acquire title by adverse possession as against the others, his possession must be of such an actual, open, notorious, exclusive, and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the other co-tenants, that is, must have been such as to render him liable to an action of ejectment at the suit of the co-tenants."

I have, therefore, to decide in this case as to whether the possession of the defendants-respondents over the half share purchased by the predecessor-in-title of the appellants has been of such an open, notorious, exclusive and hostile character as to amount to an ouster of the plaintiffs. Thus only facts which have been established in this case are that the defendants have been in actual possession of the house that they have been alone making repairs in it and that a short time before the institution of the suit when certain portions of the house fell down they built them afresh. In my opinion the acts enumerated above do not constitute act of adverse possession on the part of the defendants of a nature and for a period so as to extinguish the rights of the plaintiffs-appellants. If the defendants merely remained in occupation of the whole house and went on repairing it, that cannot be considered to be an action on their part which may be considered as tantamount to a denial of the title of the plaintiffs-appellants. A co-sharer has a right to repair the whole of the house, and, if he does so, his act cannot be considered to be an act of such an hostile character that it may be considered as equivalent to a denial on his part of the title of the other co-owner or co-owners. As to the new construction it is alleged that it was made only a short time before the institution of the suit. I am, therefore, of opinion that according to the rule of law laid down in the above noted Calcutta case relied upon by the respondents adverse possession on their behalf has not been established.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiffs-appellants has not denied his clients' liability to pay the amount decreed by the Trial Court as payable by them to the defendants in respect of their half share in the money spent by them on account of repairs and fresh construction.

I accordingly allow the appeal set aside the decree of the learned Subordinate Judge and restore that of the learned Munsif with costs in this and the lower Courts

Evidence Act (I of 1872), s 114—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 20—Payment towards decree—Payment towards interest—Denial of payment—Presumption—Extension of limitation

Ordinarily one does not split up the principal and interest in a decree, and, where a judgment-debtor makes a payment towards the decree it is a fair presumption to make that the payment was made towards both principal and interest for purposes of s 20 of the Limitation Act. Each case, however, must be decided on its own facts.

Mohammad Abdullah Khan v Bank Instalment Company Ltd, 2 Ind Cas 379, 31 A 495, 6 A L J 611, distinguished

Where a judgment-debtor, who has made a payment towards the decree, denies the fact of the payment it may be presumed, that it was his knowledge that he paid off principal and interest which drove him to falsehood.

Appeal against an order of the Court of the Additional Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in A S. No 34 of 1924, preferred against an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Nuzvid at Bezwada, in O. S. No. 80 of 1916, of the file of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada.

Mr. Ch. Raghava Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question raised in this appeal is really one of fact whether the payment on which the respondent relies to save limitation was made on account of interest. The best evidence in such a matter is the evidence of the payer himself and if he had gone into the box and explained how he came to pay the Rs. 25, for principal only, the task of judging this question might have been considerably lightened. Unfortunately, he chose to deny payment altogether which the lower Appellate Court finds to be untrue. It is then driven to presumptions and presumes from the evidence of the decree-holder's clerk that the money was paid towards the decree, and that that includes principal and interest. I think that is a fair presumption, because ordinarily one does not split up the principal and interest in a decree. Another presumption was open to the learned Subordinate Judge, that if petitioner lied, he had something to conceal; and possibly, it was his knowledge that he paid for principal and interest when he paid towards the decree which drove him to falsehood. Each case must be decided on its own facts; and merely because a presumption has been unfounded in one case, as that which is discussed in Mohammad Abdullah Khan v. Bank Instalment Company Ltd. (1), it does not follow that a presumption may not be made in another case. In the Allahabad case, the Judges say that the presumption will not enable them to hold that the payment was made for interest; not, that in all cases it is invalid. The appeal is dismissed with costs.

A person who accepts a mortgage over standing crops from a tenant with notice that the landlord has a lien over the crops for the payment of rent, takes subject to such lien.

It is the usual practice in Burma for landlords to have a lien over the paddy reaped by the tenants over their lands.

Second appeal against a decree of the District Court, Bassein, in Civil Appeal No. 18 of 1924.

Mr. Ba Thein, for the Appellants.

Mr. Leang, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case rented out to the first and second defendants a piece of land at a rental of 260 baskets of paddy, the condition being that their rental should be a first charge on the produce of the land. This agreement was subsequently embodied in a document signed by the first and second defendants. The first and second defendants in consideration of the sum of Rs. 1,000 mortgaged by registered deed the crops of the land to the third defendant who is the respondent in this appeal.

When the paddy was reaped both the plaintiff and the third defendant went to the place where paddy was stored and demanded their several claims from the first and second defendants. The first and second defendants asked the plaintiff to accept less than what was really due to him, and, on plaintiff's refusal, made over all the paddy to the third defendant. The plaintiff then filed the present suit claiming that he was entitled to a lien over the paddy and that the third defendant was liable to pay him the value of 260 baskets of paddy due to the plaintiffs.

The third defendant admitted that he knew that the land was rented from the plaintiff and also that he knew that the rental was 260 baskets of paddy. Before the paddy was delivered to him, he knew that the plaintiff claimed a lien over the paddy and that the first two defendants admitted the lien of the plaintiff.

It is the usual practice in this country for landlords to have a lien over the paddy reaped by the tenants over their lands, and if the respondent had made the slightest enquiry, he would have discovered that, in this case, the tenants had agreed to give the lien to the landlords. He admits that before he took away the paddy he knew of the existence of this lien. That being so, I think the plaintiffs are entitled to a decree against the third defendant also.

I allow the appeal and set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and modify the decree of the Court of first instance by giving a decree against the third defendant also. The plaintiff-appellants will get their costs in all Courts.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 233, 234, 235, 423, 439—Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss 408, 477A—Criminal breach of trust—Falsification of accounts—Separate transactions—Misjoinder of charges—Illegality—Notice to enhance sentence—Objection as to legality of trial, whether can be taken—Revision—Re-trial, whether can be ordered

The language of sub-s (6) of s 439, Cr P C, is very wide and it is open to an accused person who has been called upon to show cause against an enhancement of sentence to raise any point that might be urged against his conviction either to a Court of Appeal or to a Revisional Court. It is, therefore, competent to an accused person in such a case to urge that his trial was illegal owing to misjoinder of charges [p 689, col 2, p 691, col 1]

Where a person is charged with committing one act of criminal breach of trust and also with falsifying accounts with a view to conceal that particular defalcation, the two may be said to form part of the same transaction. Where, however, an accused person is charged with three separate acts of breach of trust and three separate acts of falsification of accounts, one in respect of each act of breach of trust, the charges cannot be tried together in one trial, as there are three separate transactions in respect of each act of breach of trust coupled with the corresponding falsifying of accounts, and the two offences are not offences of the same kind [p 690, cols 1 & 2]

Where the High Court sets aside a conviction in revision on the ground that the trial was illegal, it has power to direct a re-trial [p 692, col 2]

Sir Chimanlal Setalvad and Mir G. N. Thakor (with him Mr. R. J. Thakor), for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.

Coyajee, J.—The accused, who, at the material time, was the Manager of the Surat Branch of the Industrial and Exchange Bank of India, was tried in the Court of the First Class Magistrate at Surat on a charge which alleged as follows.—

“That you, on or about the period December 1, 1921, to October 31, 1922, being the Manager of the Surat Branch of the Industrial and Exchange Bank of India, wilfully and with intent to defraud the Bank, altered the entries in certain books of accounts of the Bank and omitted to have certain entries made, and misappropriated the amounts as shown below, viz. —

On December 1, 1921, .. Rs. 2,149-9-3

On March 11, 1922, .. Rs. 1,500-0-0

On October 31, 1922, .. Rs. 2,400-0-0 and thus committed criminal breach of trust in respect to the said amounts and thereby committed offences punishable under ss. 408 and 477-A of the Indian Penal Code, and within my cognizance.”

The Magistrate convicted him under ss 408 and 477-A in respect of the first two items in the charge, and awarded punishment for each of the four offences.

On appeal the Additional Sessions Judge reversed the conviction and sentence for the offence of criminal breach of trust in respect of the first item, but the rest of the appeal was disallowed. In the opinion of the learned Judge, however, the punishment was grossly inadequate, he accordingly made a reference to his Court. Notice was then given to the accused to show cause why his sentence should not be enhanced, and it has now come before us for hearing. In showing cause, Counsel for the accused contends that his client was charged and tried at one and the same trial for more than three distinct offences which, moreover, were not all of the same kind; the trial was, therefore, illegal, as being in contravention of the provisions of s 233, Cr P C, and the conviction was contrary to law. This question was not raised at the trial, and the first question is whether the contention is now competent. In my opinion it is. The contention, if made good, vitiates the whole trial.

Section 439 (6), Cr. P. C, says.—

“Notwithstanding anything contained in this section, any convicted person to whom an opportunity has been given under sub-s. (2) of showing cause why his sentence should not be enhanced shall, in showing cause, be entitled also to show cause against his conviction.”

The language of the enactment is wide, and there is no justification for giving it a restricted meaning.

The contention, then, is that the charge alleges more than three distinct offences; it is not covered by s. 234 of the Code, inasmuch as the offences of criminal breach of trust and of falsification of accounts are not offences of the same kind; and it cannot fall under s. 235, because there are three defalcations committed on different occasions, and the false entries connected with one defalcation cannot be said to form part of the same transaction with the other defalcations and falsifications. In my opinion this objection is well founded and must prevail. In Emperor v. Nathalal (1) the accused was charged at one trial with criminal breach of trust in respect of seventeen sums of money, and also with falsifying accounts with intent to defraud; this Court set aside the conviction and sentence, and directed a new trial on the ground that there was a misjoinder of charges in contravention of s. 234. The learned Judges say (page 434*): "In the present case two offences of distinct character have been joined in the same charge and the charge under s. 477-A includes a number of distinct offences in excess of three as provided by s. 234." In Kasi Viswanathan v. Emperor (2) a similar view was expressed, namely, that it is illegal to try a person on a charge which alleges three distinct acts of criminal breach of trust and three distinct acts of falsification of accounts. The authority of this case was followed in Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (3) where the learned Judge observes (page 726†):—"It is impossible to take a series of false entries referring to three different defalcations in the same trial although it might be possible to try three defalcations in one charge, or to try a whole series of falsified accounts in one charge. The two could not be combined in the manner in which they have been combined in this case."

The learned Government Pleader has sought to justify the trial on the ground that although the offence of criminal breach of trust is not of the same kind as the offence of falsification of accounts, here we have a series of acts so connected together as to form but one transaction; that ss. 234 and 235 (1) which form exceptions to the general rule, affirmed in s. 233, are not mutually exclusive; and that, therefore, s. 235 (1) must be read with s. 234. I am unable to accept this contention. It may be conceded that where a person is charged with committing one act of criminal breach of trust and also with falsifying accounts with a view to conceal that particular defalcation, the two may be said to form part of the same transaction. But the facts in this case are different. They would form at least three separate transactions, and, as pointed out in the Madras case above referred to (page. 329*) "there is no provision of the Code which says that all offences committed within one year in the course of three separate transactions may be tried at one trial." Reliance is, however, placed on the decision of this Court in In re Bal Gangadhar Tilak (4). That case, however, is distinguishable. For there, the trial proceeded on three charges, one under s. 124-A with respect to an article published by the accused on May 12, 1908, and one under s. 124-A and another under s. 153-A as to an article published by him on June 9, 1908. The accused was convicted. He, thereupon, appealed to this Court for leave to appeal to the Privy Council on the ground among others, that (page 225†):—

"The learned Judge acted illegally in trying your petitioner at one and the same trial for at least three offences, not of the same kind and not committed in the same transaction, contrary to the express provisions of s. 233 of the Cr. P. C. and in opposition to your petitioner's objection, thereby vitiating the whole trial and rendering it illegal, null and void ab initio."

The learned Judges held that the charges fell within the scope of s. 235 (1). They then proceeded to consider whether s. 235 (2) or s. 236 could not be made use of in co-operation with s. 234, and observed (page 238†):—

"We find it difficult to believe that the Legislature intended that a joint trial of three offences under s. 234 should prevent the prosecution from establishing at the same trial the minor or alternative degrees of criminality involved in the acts complained of. For these reasons we think that the exceptions are not necessarily exclusive; and that ss. 235 (2) and 236 may be resorted to in framing additional charges where the trial is of three offences of the same kind committed within the year."

It is clear then that the particular question now arising before us did not arise in that case. It is, however, discussed by this Court in the later case of Emperor v. Lalji Bhanji (5). There the accused had committed only one act of criminal breach of trust and the accounts alleged to have been falsified related to that particular act. The learned Judges explained and distinguished the decisions in Emperor v Nathalal (1) and Kasi Viswanathan v. Emperor (2) on that ground.

The learned Government Pleader has also referred us to s. 222 (2). In this case, however, the charge was in respect of three distinct acts of criminal breach of trust. No charge was framed in accordance with the provisions of that section. Moreover, the section refers only to offences of criminal breach of trust or dishonest misappropriation of money, and has no application to the charge as framed in this case.

For these reasons, I hold that the error has wholly vitiated the trial; we set aside the conviction and sentence and direct a new trial.

Fawcett, J.—In this case I agree with my learned brother that the point as to illegality of the trial in which the accused was convicted can be raised under sub-s (6) of s 439, as being "cause against his conviction." Those are very wide words and there is nothing in the sub-section to limit their generality. We are sitting as a Court of Revision, and any point that the accused might urge against his conviction either to a Court of Appeal or to a Revisional Court is, I think, open to him.

The learned Government Pleader submitted that in any case the embezzlements and falsifications of accounts charged against the accused were part of the same transaction, because the evidence shows that from the very commencement of his employment he had an intention to commit such offences, and there was, therefore, a continuity of purpose, linking all the offences charged against him. I think that argument is clearly unsustainable. It was considered in a somewhat similar case by this Court in Ramnarayan Amarchand v. Emperor (6). There the accused were charged with preparing false balance-sheets of a certain Company for the years 1912 and 1913, and were tried at one trial on both the charges and convicted and sentenced. On appeal it was held that there was a misjoinder of charges, for the preparation of the balance-sheets for the years 1912 and 1913 could not be regarded as forming the same transaction within the meaning of s. 235 of the Cr. P. C. A similar argument was put before the Court, and Heaton, J., on this point says as follows (page 736*):—

"Now here there were jointly tried matters relating to two totally distinct affairs, one being the balance-sheet for the year 1912, the other the balance-sheet for the year 1913. It is said that both of them were prepared in pursuance of a policy of deception, that the Company was really insolvent as early as the year 1910 and that the subsequent balance-sheets were prepared falsely with the deliberate purpose of concealing this practical insolvency; and it is said that because this was so, the preparation of these two balance-sheets for successive years was in reality but one transaction. The word 'transaction' used in the Cr. P. C. is not defined. Its meaning has frequently been illustrated by cases which are in the books, but in the long run we have to deal with every case that arises on its own facts. Knowing the general idea of the words 'the same transaction,' we have to determine whether these words do or do not apply to the particular facts of a particular case. Here it seems to me that to apply the words 'the same transaction,' to these two separate proceedings is to confuse the meaning of those words with the idea of things that are done in pursuance of a conspiracy. From the prosecution point of view it is perfectly correct to say that both these balance sheets were prepared in pursuance of a conspiracy. One only has to think over the matter, a little carefully, however, to see that this idea of a conspiracy covers a very great deal that cannot be included in the idea of 'the same transaction.' If we were to take those words as covering a case of this kind, it would lead us to treat the same acts of misconduct or fraud, however, often repeated, as constituting the same transaction, if there was the same general purpose underlying the repeated acts. But something far more definite than that is required, before separate proceedings can be brought within the meaning of the words 'the transaction.' "

I entirely endorse that reasoning. Similarly in a case dealt with by the Madras High Court, Cheragudi Venkatadri v. Emperor (7), it was held that.—

"Where a Company is formed with the object of defrauding the public, it cannot be said that distinct acts of embezzlement committed in the course of several years form part of the same transaction by reason of such general object."

(7) 5 Ind. Cas. 847, 33 M. 502; (1910) M. W. N. 65; 7 M. L. T. 299, 20 M. L. J. 220, 11 Cr. L. J. 258.

Therefore that contention, in my opinion, entirely fails.

In regard to the ruling of this Court in In re Bul Gangadhar Talik (4) I agree with the remarks of my learned brother. The particular case which the Court had to deal with there was one where the same offence fell under two different sections of the Indian Penal Code, and the exact point now before us was not then under consideration. There obviously is a difference between the case of such alternative charges, which do not increase the number of acts underlying the charges, and the present case, where the acts are doubled. The former case is analogous to that dealt with in s. 236, which allows any number of alternative charges in respect of a single act or series of acts to be made at one trial: cf., Begu v. Emperor (8). Therefore, I think, there is no sufficient ground for our taking a different view from that taken not only by the Calcutta, Madras and Allahabad High Courts, but also by this Court in Emperor v. Nathalal (1). No doubt this view provides rather a trap for Magistrates. In the case of alleged embezzlement, there is generally evidence of falsification of accounts to conceal that embezzlement, and unless the Magistrate knows, or has his attention drawn to, the rulings of the Courts about the illegality of joining three charges of embezzlement with three charges of connected falsification of accounts, he not unnaturally thinks, they can be the subject of one trial (which certainly is convenient) and is very likely to fall into the error that has occurred in this case. If the Magistrate had been aware of the danger and exercised a little more care; he might, I think, at any rate, according to the view adopted in Raman Behary Das v. Emperor (3), have legally framed his charge so as to comprise only one offence of criminal breach of trust for the aggregate amount alleged to have been embezzled and one other offence for the entire falsification of the accounts in regard to that embezzlement. It is rather absurd that we now have to hold that the trial is illegal on this objection which was never urged in the Trial Court or in the Court of Appeal, and where there is clearly no ground for saying that the accused has been in any way prejudiced. However we have no option, and I agree with my learned brother that the conviction of the accused not only in the Magistrate's Court, but also as modified by the Sessions Judge, must be set aside. Fine, if paid, to be refunded.

We have heard the accused's Counsel on the further steps to be taken. He draws our attention to the remarks of Batty, J., in Emperor v. Jethalal (9). We are of opinion, however, that we clearly have power to direct a re-trial under s. 439, read with s. 423, Cr. P. C., and that, as the accused has chosen to raise this point of illegality, there are no sufficient grounds for holding that he should not suffer the ordinary consequences. We think that this is a case where the Court should direct a re-trial, and we leave it to the prosecution to say exactly on what particular charge or charges the re-trial should take place. But regard must, of course, be had to the necessity of having one trial either in regard to not more than three alleged offences of criminal breach of trust or one trial as to one alleged offence of criminal breach of trust and the alleged falsification of accounts in regard to that breach of trust.

We wish to add that we think the attention of Government should be drawn to this case, with a view to its being considered whether the Government of India should not be moved to amend the Code, in the form of an illustration to s. 234 or otherwise so as to obviate difficulties of the kind that have arisen in the present case. We think that obviously in this case (and probably in all such cases) there is really no prejudice to an accused, if he is allowed to be tried in one trial for three separate offences of criminal breach of trust committed within one year and also three separate but connected offences of falsification of accounts in regard to those breaches of trust. Regrettable delay and expenditure are entailed by the present law as interpreted by the Courts, which frequently necessitate the upsetting of trials and in consequence either the re-trial of the accused or his getting off scot-free.

A copy of our judgments should be sent to the Local Government accordingly.

EMPEROR—PROSECUTOR

MATHRO—ACCUSED.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 562, object of—Discretion, exercise of, principles relating to.

The sole intention of s. 562 of the Cr P C is that an accused person who is convicted of a crime should be given a chance of reformation which he would lose by being incarcerated in prison. The powers conferred by this section should not be used for the purpose of showing favour to any particular class of persons and in the exercise of these powers a Magistrate should see that the crime that the accused person has committed does not indicate that he is rather a fortunate habitual than a true first offender.

Reference made by the District Judge, Sukkur, dated the 24th August 1925.

Mr. C. M. Lobo, Acting Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

Mr. Fartabrai D. Punwani, for the Accused.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused Mathro was convicted by the City Magistrate, Sukkur, of receiving stolen property and he was directed to enter into a bond under s. 562, Cr. P. C. The District Magistrate thought this punishment insufficient and has referred the case here.

We are reluctant to interfere with the discretion of the Trial Magistrate under s. 562. But this is a case in which we should have interfered had it not been for the fact that owing to the efforts of the accused a great part of the stolen property has been recovered.

It is necessary, however, to point out to Magistrates who are given the powers of s. 562, that it is not conferred upon them for the purpose of showing favour to any particular class of persons. The sole intention of the section is that the accused person now a convict should be given a chance of reformation which he would lose being incarcerated in prison. The exercise of this discretion does need a considerable sense of responsibility in the Magistrate. Should he make a bad use of this discretion far from reforming an offender he will be a cause of corruption of many. Punishment is not awarded to a criminal only for vindictive purposes. It is awarded to the criminal that the fate of the convict punished may be deterrent to others. If the Magistrate by a misuse of s. 562 causes to spring up in the minds of young people an impression that they can with impunity commit serious offences because they will get off with no punishment then it is obvious that this misuse of beneficial power is a means on the contrary of increasing crime. It may well be that many a young man who would have lived a virtuous life had he been certain that his first offence if serious would meet with due punishment may be led by the exception that he will even if detected escape with no punishment into a criminal course of life. He has already the chance that his first efforts may be undetected. It is, therefore, at least necessary in dealing with a so-called "first offender" to see that the crime he has committed does not indicate that he is rather a fortunate habitual than a true first offender. Therefore Magistrates in applying s. 562 should be very careful to consider the wording of the section and should not allow themselves to be misled into the use of this section by misplaced leniency and sympathy.

These remarks are general. We do not say that these considerations were not present to the mind of the Magistrate in this particular case. Indeed had it been the case that there had been this misuse of powers it certainly would have been our duty to rescind the order of the Magistrate and thereon to inflict punishment upon the accused. Certainly the accused in many ways does not seem to be a person worthy of much sympathy. It is, however, probable that the restoration of the property was due to a belief that the section would be applied. It is hoped that the present proceedings will be a lesson to him and he will hence forward tread the path of virtue and not of crime. On the whole, therefore, we refuse to interfere.

Criminal revision from an order of the Sessions Judge, Agra, dated the 17th of July 1925.

Sir C. Ross Alston, for the Applicant.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application in revision from a conviction of the accused under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code and a sentence of fine. The facts are not now much disputed. The complainant has a nephew whose daughter is of marriageable age. The accused wanted his son to get married to this girl but the complainant refused to comply with his request. The Courts below have found that this refusal was the cause of a malicious feeling in the mind of the accused. That finding has to be accepted. The accused arranged the betrothal of the girl with a relation of one Babu Lal and the marriage was about to take place. The complainant heard from various persons that the accused had been defaming him and telling people that he was keeping a woman Brahmin by caste as his mistress and was a bad character and that if the marriage of his nephew's daughter were to take place the members of his caste would not join. The complainant accordingly sent for the accused on the 16th of November 1924 in the presence of several persons who were sitting there and challenged him. The accused, in the presence of every one, made the following statement: "Hira Lal is a bad character and keeps a woman as his mistress and if he will join in the marriage of the girl of his nephew the biradari will not join." On this the complaint was filed. The accused originally denied having made any such statement and the Trying Magistrate not only admitted evidence as to this statement having been made but also allowed evidence to come on the record as regards some previous defamatory statements made by the accused, though he was charged only with the statement made by him on the 16th of November 1924. The accused further led evidence to substantiate the defamatory statement that the complainant was keeping a Brahmin woman. The Magistrate, however, found that though a woman was employed by the complainant she was employed as a maid servant and that it was not proved that she was a kept woman of the complainant. He pointed out that the witnesses for the defence were making statements on presumptions and that there was no direct evidence to prove the truth of the accused's statement.

In appeal the position taken up by the accused that he had not made the defamatory statement was abandoned, and the learned Vakil who appeared for him pressed only the plea of justification and privileged occasion. With regard to this the learned Judge first remarked: "I am doubtful whether such a change can be sustained as a matter of law, in spite of the observation of a Single Judge of the High Court in Umed Singh v. Emperor (1) in which he did not purport to lay down any principle of law." With regard to this passage in the judgment I must remark that a Subordinate Court is bound by the ruling of a superior Court, however unsound it may appear to it unless it is expressly contrary to any statutory provision of law which was not brought to the notice of the superior Court, or unless it has been overruled. It may, however, be pointed out that the plea of justification urged by the accused was not altogether a new plea inasmuch as evidence had been led by him at the trial to substantiate the statement allowed to have been made by him, but it may be that the learned Judge had in his mind the plea of a privileged occasion.

I must accept the finding of the Appellate Court that the accused had a malice against the complainant and that he made the statement which he has not been able to substantiate. The accused cannot be protected merely because he may imagine that he had some ground for believing that his statement was justified

The learned Counsel for the applicant has argued that inasmuch as the accused's statement was made in answer to a question put to him by the complainant he cannot be held guilty. This contention cannot be accepted. If the accused made the statement in the presence of a number of persons even if he had been challenged by the complainant he made that statement at his peril.

Lastly it has been contended that the defence evidence which has not been rejected by the Courts below suggests that the statement might have been justified. I am, however, bound by the finding of the Appellate Court that the truth of the statement has not been substantiated. I accordingly dismiss this application.

The object of s 342 (1), Cr P C, is to give an opportunity to the accused, if he so desires, to tender any explanation he likes of his part in the case that is presented against him. It is extremely desirable that Magistrates should follow the practice of English Courts of warning an accused person when they invite his explanation under s 342 of the Code that he is not obliged to say anything unless he desires to do so. JUDGMENT.—[The accused was a widow some 29 years of age who was undergoing a course of training to fit her to be a teacher in the Government Training School at Conjeevaram. She decoyed one of the pupils of the school about 9 or 10 years of age, took her to a place 10 miles, had her ornaments taken off and afterwards sold them to two goldsmiths and received the sale-proceeds. The next morning the child's body was found floating in water some 4 miles from the place and was very much decomposed. It was clear the child died of asphyxia and the balance of probability was that the child was dead before the body was put into the tank. The accused while she admitted that she was a party to removing the ornaments denied the murder and stated that the removal was at the instance of a person to whom the child's father owed money. On a consideration of the evidence, the Court came to the conclusion that the accused was responsible for the murder of the child to hush up the robbery she committed by taking the ornaments. The sentence of death was accordingly confirmed.]

We should like to add a word on one matter which arose during the trial.

By s. 342 (1) of the Cr P C. the Committing Magistrate of the Court at the trial is entitled to put questions to the accused. Chief Justice Sir John Wallis and one of us have held in a decision which, so far as we know, is unreversed, In re Abibulla Routhan (1) that the object of that section is to give opportunity to the accused if he so desires to tender any explanation he likes of his part in the case that is presented against him. Sub-section (2) of that section runs as follows.—

"The accused shall not render himself liable to punishment by refusing to answer such questions, or by giving false answers to them; but the Court and the Jury (if any) may draw such inference from such refusal or answers as it thinks just"

In that state of things a Full Bench of this Court has held in In re Varisai Rowther (2) in that particular case it was in the interests of the accused although we cannot think otherwise than that it will more often be greatly to his detriment, that the direction that the Judge shall ask the accused what he desires to say is mandatory and not discretionary.

There is no provision in the Code for the accused being warned of the consequence of the statement he makes. The main consequence, of course, would be that the statement he makes must be given in evidence against him.

We contrast with that the provision of 11 & 12 Victoria, Ch. 42, s. 18 which runs as follows:—

"After the examination of all the witnesses on the part of the prosecution of a person brought before any Justice or Justices of the Peace, charged with any indictable offence, shall have been completed, the Justice of the Peace, or one of the Justices, by or before whom such examination shall have been so completed as aforesaid, shall, without requiring the attendance of the witnesses read or cause to be read to the accused the depositions taken against him, and shall say to him these words, or words to the like effect: 'Having heard the evidence, do you wish to say anything in answer to the charge? You are not obliged to say anything unless you desire to do so, but whatever you say will be taken down in writing, and may be given in evidence against you upon your trial,' and whatever the prisoner shall then say in answer thereto shall be taken down in writing, and read over to him, and shall be signed by the said Justice or Justices, and kept with the depositions of the witnesses, and shall be transmitted with them as hereinafter mentioned; and afterwards upon the trial of the said accused person, the same may, if necessary, be given in evidence against him, without further proof thereof, unless it shall be proved that the Justice or Justices...before such accused person shall make any statement, shall state to him and give him clearly to understand, that he has nothing to hope from any promise of favour, and nothing to fear from any threat which may have been holden out to induce him to make any admission or confession of his guilt, but that whatever he shall then say may be given in evidence against him upon his trial, notwithstanding such promise or threat." The first thing we desire to observe is that the English Act says that the statement made by the prisoner in such circumstances may be given in evidence against him. It is within the experience of all Barristers who have practised in the English Criminal Courts that the prosecution will always put in the statement of a man as part of their case when it helps him or amounts to a denial of the charge. But there are cases in which an accused person makes a foolish incriminatory statement, not understanding the position he is in, where prosecuting Counsel, with that sense of fair play which, we may say, invariably characterises them, they think it is in the interests of the man himself not to put in the statement. They always point out the statement to the presiding Judge and he understands why it is the prosecuting Counsel does not think it fair to let the statement of the prisoner go before the Jury. If the Judge thinks it ought to go in, he says so.

It seems to us that it would be a salutary amendment of the Indian Law if it were not compulsory to put in such a statement. If there were any danger of prosecutors unfairly keeping back a statement that helped the accused, the Judge is there to insist on its being put in. Further, we think it is extremely desirable that some such form of caution as is prescribed by 11 & 12 Victoria should be introduced into the Cr. P. C. The form in which this woman was invited to make a statement by the Committing Magistrate in this case was as follows:—

"You have heard all the statements of the prosecution witnesses; you have heard read all the records filed in Court on the side of the prosecution. What explanation do you offer for it."

That seems to us a most undesirable method of inviting the accused person to make a statement. He is not warned that it will be usable in evidence against him; he is not warned that, if he does not wish, he need not offer any explanation whatever. We think it is extremely desirable that Magistrates should follow the practice of warning accused persons when they invite their explanation under s. 342 of the Code that they are not obliged to say anything unless they desire to. The object of the section should be to give them an opportunity if they so desire, to explain their conduct and further warn them that anything they say will be put in evidence against them at their trial.

The Local Government will necessarily have this judgment before them when the question of confirmation comes up and they may possibly consider it advisable to approach the Government of India to amend the law in this respect and bring it into conformity with the very careful provisions of the Indictable Offences Act intended to safeguard the liberty of the subject Criminal Reference made by the Sessions Judge, Muttra, dated the 10th September 1925.

The Assistant Government Advocate, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the Sessions Judge of Muttra recommending that the conviction of the accused under s. 24 of the Cattle Trespass Act (I of 1871) should be set aside. A report was made by the pound-keeper that the accused had removed a mare from the cattle pound 10 minutes after it had been put into it. The pound-keeper did not make any entry in his register as regards this mare although before he put it into the pound he ought to have made such an entry. The accused was tried summarily and the evidence does not disclose on whose land it had trespassed and who had brought the mare to the pound. On the other hand the accused's statement was that the two accused themselves had brought this mare along with a horse because otherwise they would not have found it possible to bring the horse to the pound. The learned Magistrate in a summary trial has convicted the accused on a finding that they removed the mare out of the cattle pound without a finding that it had been properly seized. Before a conviction under s. 24 can be sustained it is necessary to prove that the cattle which has been rescued was liable to be seized under this Act. The circumstances of the case are very curious and in the absence of any statement by the pound-keeper or any reference to it in the judgment that this mare had been rightly seized under the Act the conviction cannot be upheld. If the accused themselves had brought their own mare to the cattle pound and after the horse had gone inside they took the mare out no offence was committed. I accordingly accept the Reference and setting aside the convictions and sentences passed on the accused acquit them of the charge and direct that the fines, if paid, be refunded.

Section 145 (2) of the Railways Act only entitles a person authorized by the Agent of a Railway to conduct prosecution on behalf of the Railway Administration, to do so without the permission of the Magistrate, which would, except for the provision, be required under s 495 of the Cr P C. Prima facie, neither s 145 (2) of the Railways Act nor s 495 of the Cr P C affects s 493 of the latter enactment which deals with the right of appearance and precedence of the Public Prosecutor before any Court in which any case of which he has charge is under trial [p 700, col 1]

Where the Public Prosecutor has charge of a prosecution, a Pleader instructed by a private person, including the Agent of a Railway Administration, must act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor [ibid.]

Section 145 (2) of the Railways Act contemplates mainly, if not exclusively, prosecutions for offences under that enactment, that is to say, private prosecutions undertaken by the Railway Administration in which the Public Prosecutor does not appear as distinguished from public prosecutions undertaken or taken over by the State and in particular prosecutions under the Penal Code [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This Rule was issued on an application in revision by the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company, Limited, that the Court should direct that the representative of the applicant authorised by the Agent of the Railway under s. 145 (2) of the Indian Railways Act, 1890, has the right to conduct the prosecution in the case of Crown v Sheikh Makbul under s. 304-A of the Indian Penal Code which is pending in the Court of the Deputy Magistrate of Balasore and further should direct that the case be committed to the Sessions. At the hearing a further prayer has been made that if the case be not committed to the Sessions it be transferred to another district on the ground that the Magistrate is biased against the applicant. All the prayers are opposed by the Crown and by the accused, but after perusing the report of the Deputy Magistrate and the affidavit on behalf of the accused and hearing the Government Advocate on behalf of the Crown I have found it unnecessary to call upon Sir Ali Imam for the accused.

The circumstances are briefly these. About 5-40 A. M. on the 9th November 1924, there was a collision at the southern level crossing of the Cuttack Railway Station, on the Bengal Nagpur Railway between the Madras mail and a motor lorry driven by the accused which resulted in the death of two and severe injuries to one or more passengers of the motor lorry. About 6 A. M. a Head Constable gave information of the occurrence to the Sub-Inspector of Railway Police at Cuttack Railway Station and the latter proceeded under s. 174 (c) of the Cr. P. C., to hold an inquest on the persons killed and came to the conclusion that the gateman of the level crossing, a servant of the applicant, was responsible for the accident. While the Sub-Inspector was conducting this inquiry, the Station Master at Cuttack sent an "all concerned" message somewhere about 8 A. M. and the Superintendent of Police thereafter handed his copy to the Sub-Inspector who treated it as a first information under s. 154 of the

Cr. P. C. Eventually the Police sent up the accused Sheikh Makbul, the driver of the lorry, and the trial began in the Court of a Deputy Magistrate of Cuttack. The prosecution case is that the accused forced his way on to the Railway by opening the western gate and injured the gateman, who opposed, while the defence is that the western gate was open and, therefore, the applicant is responsible for the accident. The applicant deputed a Vakil from Howrah to conduct the prosecution, but though it is alleged by the applicant that the Magistrate permitted the Vakil to conduct the prosecution, the allegation is incorrect, the fact being that the Public Prosecutor was in charge of the prosecution and conducted it, and under his direction the representative of the Railway took some part in examining witnesses in the absence of the Public Prosecutor. Exception was taken by the accused to the participation of the Railway Vakil on the score of unfairness in his methods. The Magistrate, however, filed the petition of accused, framed a charge under s. 304-A, against him and called upon him to cross examine. The accused thereupon moved the Circuit Court then in Session at Cuttack for a transfer of the case to some other District and the applicant filed a similar petition on the ground that the master of accused holds a prominent position in Orissa. The applications were heard by Ross, J., who transferred the case to Balasore and further made the following order:

"It should be noted that the conduct of the prosecution should be in the hands of the Public Prosecutor. The petitioner has taken objection to the part taken in the trial by the Pleaders representing the Railway Company. The learned Government Pleader, however, has explained this by saying that he was in charge of the case under the orders of the District Magistrate and that the Pleaders retained by the Railway Company were only acting under his instructions and during his absence. So long as this is clearly understood there is no objection to this being done but the conduct of the prosecution should be in the hands of the Public Prosecutor."

The applicant makes it a grievance that this order was passed while the Vakil of the Railway was engaged in another Court, but it is clear from the applicant's petition that an attempt made on behalf of the applicant to induce the learned Judge in Chambers to alter the order was unsuccessful.

When the trial began at Balasore the Vakil for the applicant presented a formal authorization under s. 145 (2) of the Railways Act from the Agent of the Railway to conduct the prosecution, but the Court refused to entertain his prayer to take the lead in view of the order of the High Court quoted above. Because of the representation made by the applicant in his application for transfer of the trial from Cuttack, the Crown had in order to secure impartiality, specially introduced a Public Prosecutor from outside Orissa to conduct the prosecution of the accused. This special Public Prosecutor conducted the case in accordance with his own ideas of what is just and proper, and while taking full advantage of assistance pressed upon him by the representatives of the Railway refused to place himself unreservedly in their hands. In particular the Public Prosecutor opposed a commitment to the Sessions and declined to put questions which had only a bearing on the civil liability of the applicant in suits instituted against the latter by passengers travelling in the lorry driven by accused, a state of affairs of which the applicant unjustifiably makes a grievance.

The prosecution having examined thirty-one witnesses, the Trying Magistrate expressed an intention of committing the case to the Sessions. The accused, however, claimed the right to cross-examine all the prosecution witnesses before commitment and thereupon the Magistrate, considering that, if cross-examination were to take place in his Court, it would be useless to commit, gave up the idea and framed a charge under s. 304-A for trial in his own Court.

He also declined to accede to a prayer on behalf of the applicant that an additional charge be framed under s. 124 of the Railways Act. Obviously a charge under s. 124, which punishes with fine up to Rs. 50 for the opening of a Railway gate in certain circumstances was unnecessary in law so that the point has no significance and need not be further discussed. At the stage at which applicant obtained the present rule the cross-examination which had extended to nine or ten full days had just been concluded and the defence having declined to adduce evidence the case had been fixed for argument prior to judgment.

Mr. C. C. Das, appears for the applicant, claims an order in his favour on substantial-ly the following three grounds.

(1) that the Trying Magistrate has illegally withheld permission to conduct the prosecution from the Vakil appointed under s. 145 (2) of the Railways Act,

(2) that the Trying Magistrate has exhibited bias against the applicant; and

(3) that though the offence under s. 304-A of the Indian Penal Code is triable by a Magistrate as well as by the Court of Sessions, a higher punishment may be given by the latter.

The third submission has no weight. The maximum term of imprisonment for the offence is within the powers of punishment of the Magistrate, and if his powers in respect of fine are limited to Rs. 1,000 while those of the Sessions Court are unlimited, it is clear that in the circumstances of the case an appropriate sentence of fine would not exceed Rs. 1,000.

As regards the first point, it is clear that in view of the order of Ross, J., it was not open to the Magistrate to eliminate the Public Prosecutor and entrust the conduct of the case to the representative of the applicant. Mr. Das would draw a distinction between the vakalatnama filed by the Vakil for the Railway in the course of the proceedings at Cuttack, which was before Ross, J., and the subsequent mandate of the Agent under s. 145 (2) of the Railways Act. But in fact no distinction exists except that the latter is more formal. In the vakalatnama the Vakil is, in so many words, authorized by the Agent of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway Company to conduct the prosecution in the case against Sheikh Makbul, accused, under s. 304-A of the Indian Penal Code. The circumstances had in fact not altered and it was not open to the Magistrate to ignore the orders passed by the High Court in the case.

Accordingly the question of the position of a Vakil appointed by the Agent of the Bengal Nagpur Railway Company under s. 145 (2) to conduct the prosecution in this case in preference to the Public Prosecutor does not properly arise at this stage, the point having already been decided on the same materials by this Court against the contention of the Railway Company, it being explicitly directed that the conduct of the prosecution shall be in the hands of the Public Prosecutor. The first point, therefore, fails. It is not, therefore, necessary to express a final opinion on the subject, but one may say that the indications, are strongly against the claim in that regard of the applicant. Section 145 (2) only entitles a person authorized by the Agent of a Railway to conduct prosecution on behalf of the Railway Administration, to do so without the permission of the Magistrate, which would, except for the provision, be required under s. 495 of the Cr. P. C. Prima facie, neither s. 145 (2) of the Railways Act nor s. 495 of the Cr. P. C. affects s. 493 of the latter enactment which deals with the right of appearance and precedence of the Public Prosecutor before any Court in which any case of which he has charge is under trial. The Public Prosecutor has charge of the prosecution under discussion and the Pleader instructed by a private person, including the Agent of a Railway Administration, to prosecute a case of which the Public Prosecutor is in charge shall, it is enjoined, act under the directions of the Public Prosecutor. The entire propriety of such a provision, which could hardly be better demonstrated than in the present instance, is in favour of the interpretation. Then again, I am unable, as at present advised, to accept the view that there is no force in the argument advanced by the learned Government Advocate that s. 145 (2), of the Railways Act contemplates mainly, if not exclusively, prosecutions for offences under that enactment, that is to say, private prosecutions undertaken by the Railway Administration in which the Public Prosecutor does not appear as distinguished from public prosecutions undertaken or taken over by the State and in particular prosecutions, such as the present, under the Indian Penal Code.

Before dealing with the allegation of bias on the part of the Magistrate, it is expedient to indicate more fully than has been done above, what the case for the prosecution and the case for the defence is. At the level crossing there are drop-gates and the western and the eastern gates are about 134 feet apart. Two lines of Railway are within the crossing, the westmost being a goods line passing close to the western gate and the other being the main line passing close to the eastern gate. The prosecution case is that some one opened the western gate which had been closed by the gateman because the Madras mail was about to pass, and the accused drove his lorry towards the eastern gate knocking down the gateman who tried to stop him. The defence case is that the western gate was standing open and that the accused drove his lorry through it, it being the rule that the crossing is open unless both gates are closed. Obviously, therefore, the Railway is at least as deeply concerned with its prospective civil liability, if the gate was in fact open, as with the criminal liability of the accused, and the point of view of its representative is materially different from that of a Public Prosecutor and from that of a Judge presiding in the Court. It is clear that the former addressed himself amid considerable difficulties created by the representative of the applicant to securing impartial justice, therein acting in accordance with the best traditions of his office. It is right in the circumstances to quote here with approval the view of the Magistrate: "He has conducted the case very ably and impartially, and with perfect fairness to both parties. He has not identified himself wholly with the Railway version of the case, and so the Railway Pleaders are dissatisfied with him. The Railway Company is an interested party in this case and so he should not ally himself with them."

The allegation of bias on which a commitment to the Sessions or a transfer to another Court was claimed, was supported by four instances, two of which appear in each of the two petitions of the applicant. They are: (1) that the Magistrate did not grant the conduct of the prosecution to the applicant's representative; (2) that the case was not committed to the Sessions in accordance with the original intention of the Magistrate; (3) that, on 25th June the Magistrate asked the Police Sub-Inspector, before he went into the witness-box for cross-examination: "Why did you not send up the gateman?" and (4) that on the 26th June, when the representative of the Railway was moving a petition for the production of a letter alleged to have been sent on the day of occurrence by the Assistant Station Master to the Civil Surgeon of Cuttack requesting the latter to examine the injuries of the gateman, the Magistrate made a remark which showed that he was prejudiced against the applicant and such as, it is suggested, he would not, if he had not been influenced by high official opinion, have expressed when the matter was subjudice.

The first instance has already been discussed and it has been determined that the Magistrate's action was entirely proper, the order of the High Court on the point being conclusive in this trial. As regards the second instance, the Magistrate had a discretion to commit the case or to try it himself. In view of the maximum sentence, however, a commitment would only be justifiable on very special grounds, and it is obvious that if the Magistrate made any mistake, it was in at all contemplating commitment. When the accused expressed the intention of cross-examining all the prosecution witnesses, the Court could not but see that a commitment would result in an unwarrantable waste of public time without any advantage to anybody, and rightly re-considering the matter exercised a sound discretion in rejecting the idea of commitment to the Sessions. It must also be remembered that the Public Prosecutor argued against commitment. Even if the Magistrate had not exercised a sound discretion in changing his mind, it could not fairly be contended that the order, though unfavourable to the applicant, exhibits even the faintest trace of bias. It was entirely proper not to commit the case to the Sessions.

As to the third instance cited, there was nothing in the casual enquiry of the Magistrate that was not, in the circumstances, entirely reasonable. The Sub-Inspector who held the inquest had formed the opinion that the western gate was not closed as asserted by the prosecution, but was open, as stated by the defence, and the Court would have failed in its duty if it did not obtain from the Police Officer who had recorded such an opinion, the reason for not placing on trial the gateman, who, if the Police Officer's opinion was correct, must be responsible for the occurrence. The Magistrate did not give expression to any opinion.

I accept the version of the Magistrate as to the fourth incident. It appears that the representative of the applicant was pressing for the production of a letter on the ground that it would show how the gateman received his injuries. The Magistrate pointed out that the letter could not be legally taken in evidence in proof of the manner in which the gateman had received his injuries and in the course of the discussion remarked, "Supposing it were written in that letter that the gateman had come by his injuries by being knocked down by accused's lorry, do you think I will have to implicitly believe it? When such a serious Railway accident takes place, your Railway people can write anything and I cannot take it as true without proof." Apart from other considerations, I fail to see how this remark indicates bias or the influence of high official opinion (as to the latter there is not the slightest trace of anything to support it, and it is wholly groundless and should not have been asserted). The Magistrate only points out that the mere fact that a Railway subordinate has written something will not make it evidence or show it to be true.

Moreover, the facts clearly show that in calling after great delay and towards the end of the cross-examination for the letter, and describing it as an important document, the representatives of the applicant then sought to make much out of nothing at all, as indeed is sought now. No mention was made of the letter in examination-in-chief. In cross-examination the gateman says he carried no letter and the Assistant Station Master says he did not even see the gateman during that day except shortly after the accident. The first mention is in cross-examination of the Station Master who merely says that he asked the Assistant Station Master to write such a letter. The Assistant Surgeon cannot recall it. The Civil Surgeon, though wired to, was unable to produce it and the case of the Crown is that it does not exist, and that in any case its evidentiary value would be slight. There is in fact medical evidence as to the injury to the gateman, and the Assistant Station Master has himself been examined, so that the only value of the letter would be to show that his deposition is in accordance with his statement in the letter. The Magistrate is manifestly right in his view that an interested party like the applicant, who, as all the indications show, was pressing the case in a manner not consonant with the impartial conduct of criminal cases by the Crown or a public authority, who should comply strictly with the law of evidence and procedure, more especially in a matter where the Vakil for the applicant was pursuing a course wherein he had not the support of the Public Prosecutor or under whose directions the Statute enjoins that he shall act. Mr. C. C. Das, indeed, concedes that the letter is practically valueless as evidence. What he objects to is the remark of the Magistrate. But the remark, in my judgment does not contain any indication whatever of prejudice or amount to anything more than a demand that the prosecution should prove its case to the satisfaction of the Magistrate by admissible evidence. A similar rebuff to an unreasonable demand by the prosecution, especially when as in this case unreasonably urged or at a later stage, is not infrequently and with justice administered to a Public Prosecutor without implying any prejudice on the part of the Judge.

In my opinion bias and prejudice have not only not been proved but have been abundantly disproved. The trial appears to have been properly conducted by the Public Prosecutor and by the Magistrate, any difficulties arising being attributable to unseemly ardour on the part of the representatives of the applicant.

Accordingly no ground has been established on the merits for granting any of the prayers made by the applicant.

The Rule is accordingly discharged and the trial should proceed and the case be disposed of without any avoidable delay.

I add that I have dealt with the case as if it had come regularly before the Court, but it is to be observed that the affidavits in the case being sworn before Presidency Magistrates of Calcutta are not admissible in this Court under the interpretation, in Ramchandra Madak v. King-Emperor, Criminal Revision No. 255 of 1925, of s. 539 of the Cr. P. C., and that the application might also have been rejected on that ground.

CRIMINAL REVISION No. 104-B OF 1925.

June 2, 1925.

Present.—Mr. Justice Das.

MAUNG TUN U—PETITIONER

versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss. 107, 112—Security to keep the peace—Initial order—Substance of information received not recorded, effect of—Jurisdiction of Magistrate to take proceedings—Surety, rejection of, ground for—Time for furnishing security—Duty of Magistrate

A Magistrate acting under s. 107, Cr. P. C., must, under s. 112 of the Code, make an order in writing setting forth, inter alia, the substance of the information received. A failure to comply with this provision would deprive a Magistrate of jurisdiction to take proceedings under s. 107. [p. 703, col. 1]

A person against whom an order is passed under s. 107, Cr. P. C., must be given sufficient time to furnish security. [p. 702, col. 2]

As long as the security offered by a surety is ample, the Court is bound to accept the same, without enquiring into the politics of the person standing surety. [ibid.]

If the Magistrate is not satisfied with the sureties tendered, he should reject them within a reasonable time, so as to give the accused an opportunity of offering fresh sureties. [p. 702, col. 2, p. 703, col. 1]

Criminal revision being review of an order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Prome, in Cr. T. No. 269 of 1924.

Mr. Mg Ni, for the Petitioner.

JUDGMENT.—In this case the accused was called upon under s. 107, Cr. P. C., to show cause why he should not enter into a bond in the sum of Rs. 3,000 with four sureties on the ground that he is likely to commit a breach of the peace and disturb the public tranquillity and doing wrongful acts that may occasion a breach of the peace by prohibiting people from paying capitation tax and arranging to make demonstrations in large crowds.

The notice was served on the accused on the 3rd of October 1924, and he was called upon to show cause immediately. The order was passed on the same day, and the accused was sentenced to simple imprisonment for one year on the same day, as he was unable to furnish security.

The learned Magistrate in his diary remarks that "the accused is unable to furnish sufficient security although sufficient time is given." I cannot understand how the learned Magistrate could expect any person to furnish four sureties of Rs. 3,000 each on the very day on which notice to show cause was issued to him, and the order passed. Persons against whom orders are passed under s. 107, Cr. P. C., must be given sufficient time to furnish security.

It appears from the record that the Magistrate refused to accept the sureties offered by the applicant simply because they were Wunthanu members. The Magistrate had no justification in doing so. As long as the security is ample, the Court is bound to accept the same without enquiring into the politics of the person standing surety.

In this case the sureties were tendered on the 6th of October 1924, but no orders were passed accepting or rejecting them till the 6th of January 1925. This delay is inexcusable. The Magistrate, if he was not satisfied with the sureties tendered, should have rejected them within a reasonable time so as to give the accused an opportunity of offering fresh sureties.

The accused again offered sureties on the 9th of January. No orders were passed on that by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate up to date, the explanation of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate being that the case had not been received back by him yet. That is no explanation at all. The Sub-Divisional Magistrate must have known what the orders of the Sessions Judge were, and he should have passed orders on the application by the accused within a reasonable time. By this unreasonable delay the accused had been kept in custody from the 3rd of October till his release by the order of this Court. This Court on the 5th March 1925, ordered that the petitioner may be released pending disposal of this application on his own bond in Rs. 2,000 with two sureties in Rs. 1,000 each.

The order of this Court was clear enough, but still the Sub-Divisional Magistrate sent it back to this Court through the District Magistrate stating that the High Court's order did not expressly state as to whether the surety was to be accepted. This Court thereupon passed peremptory orders that the order directing the release of the petitioner on bail is perfectly clear and should be immediately complied with. It is only then that on the 25th of March the accused was released on bail. It is regrettable that all this delay should have occurred in accepting the sureties tendered by the petitioner. Section 112, Cr. P. C., requires that the Magistrate, when acting under s. 107, shall make an order in writing setting forth the substance of information received, the amount of the bond to be executed, the terms for which it is to be in force, and the number, character and class of surety required.

There is nothing on the record in this case recording the substance of the information received by the Magistrate before he proceeded to act under s. 107. All that he records in his diary is "Case under s. 107, Cr. P. C., with D. M.'s sanction sent up from Hmawza. P. S. Accused present. Order drawn up and explained to accused. Six witnesses examined, etc. Order passed." This is not a compliance with the provisions of s. 112, Cr. P. C., and the Magistrate acted without any jurisdiction in calling upon the accused to show cause. Moreover the evidence does not disclose a case for the petitioner to be bound down under s. 107, Cr. P. C.

The order of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate is set aside, and the accused's bail-bond will be cancelled.

MISCELLANEOUS PETITION No 76 OF 1925

December 19, 1925

Present.—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.
SHAIKH KARIM AND OTHERS—APPLICANTS
versus

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 426, 497—Bail application rejected by Sessions Judge—Powers of High Court to grant—Respectability of accused and sufficiency of security, whether ground for granting bail—Suspension of sentence, when to be granted

The High Court has power to grant bail under s 426 (2) of the Cr P C, after an application for the same made after a conviction by a Magistrate has been rejected by the Sessions Judge. But the Court will only interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge in refusing bail if that discretion was manifestly wrong or if in fact no discretion has been exercised [p 704, col 1]

The principle which should guide the High Court in dealing with such an application, is whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicant has committed the offence in question. [p. 704, col 2]

Although the High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers the High Court ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower Courts in this connection [ibid]

The mere previous respectability of a man is per se no sufficient reason for granting bail after he has been convicted of a criminal offence [p 704, col. 1]

The question of grant of bail is not only to be dealt with from the point of view of there being likelihood or not of the accused person absconding [ibid]

In the absence of very special cause, no order for a suspension of sentence should be passed, as the result of such an order is that if the appeal fails finally the convicted person only serves the original period of his sentence less the period of suspension [p 704, col 2]

Application for grant of bail against an order of the Sessions Judge, Nagpur, dated the 16th December 1925.

Mr P. C. Dutt, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—The applicant Shaikh Karim, along with 9 other co-accused, applicants Shaik Hasan, Abdul Mannan, Muhammad Ishaq, Muhammad Sharif, Shaikh Abbas, Abdul Sattar, Shaikh Dilawar, Shaikh Sardar and Wazir Khan, whose applications are disposed of by this order, has been convicted by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Kamptee, on 16th December 1925 of offences punishable under ss. 147 and 296, Indian Penal Code, and sentenced to concurrent terms of six months' rigorous imprisonment. Pending the lodging of an appeal in the Sessions Court an application to that Court was made for bail, and the Sessions Judge has rejected the said application on 16th December 1925. It is pertinent to notice that in the said application the only grounds alleged for granting bail was that the applicants were respectable persons, some of them being people of substance; that the case was a trivial one and that the applicants were willing to give ample security.

On the first point I would only desire to remark that the mere previous respectability of a man is per se no sufficient reason for giving bail when he has been convicted of a criminal offence. On the second point, the case was, according to the prosecution, one of an organised attack by Muhammadans on a Hindu religious procession, which resulted in a general riot; it is impossible from any point of view to describe such a case as a trivial one. As regards the applicants being able to afford reasonable security, the question of grant of bail is not only to be dealt with from the point of view of there being likelihood or not of the accused persons absconding.

In the applications to this Court a variety of grounds dealing with questions of fact and law have been advanced. I need hardly say that it would be undesirable, in the interests of the applicants themselves, if not impossible, for this Court at the present stage to enter into details on such matters. In argument before me some reference has been made to an alleged legal flaw in the trial with reference to an application made on behalf of the applicants under s. 162, Cr. P. C. That, again, is a matter which I must decline to enter into at the present stage.

The power of this Court to grant bail, even in a case like the present, is undoubted: cf., s. 426, sub-s. (2), Cr. P. C. This Court will, however, only interfere with the discretion exercised by the Sessions Judge in refusing bail, if that discretion was manifestly wrong or if, in fact, no real discretion has been exercised. There is nothing to show in the Sessions Judge's order that either of these conditions have been fulfilled. I have, however, read the judgment of the Magistrate and it seems to me that in the careful and elaborate judgment he has written, there are good prima facie grounds for supposing the applicants to have been guilty of the offences charged. It may be that the Sessions Judge, when he hears the appeal, may come to a contrary finding, but, as the case stands at present, it is impossible for me to hold that there are not reasonable grounds for believing the applicants to be guilty of the offences of which they have been convicted. In Sourindra Mohan Chuckerbutty v. Emperor (1) Stephen and Carnduff, JJ., pointed out that although the High Court has unfettered powers to grant bail, yet in exercising these powers the High Court ought to have regard to the limitations imposed on lower Courts in this connection.

It is true that s. 497, Cr. P. C., as now amended, only provides that a person, accused of a non-bailable offence shall not be released on bail if there appear to be reasonable grounds for supposing that he has been guilty of an offence punishable with death or transportation for life. We are here, however, concerned with men who have been actually convicted, and in those circumstances the principle, which will necessarily guide this Court, will be whether there are reasonable grounds for believing that the applicants committed the offences in question. In the present case, therefore, on the materials which it is open or desirable for me to consider at present, I cannot see any sufficient reason for granting bail: cf., King-Emperor v. Badri Prasad (2).

It has been suggested to me that failing bail, the execution of sentences on the applicants might be suspended. This request also I am not prepared to grant. As s. 426, Cr. P. C., stands, the result of a suspension of sentence is only that if the appeal finally fails, the convicted person only serves the original period of his sentence less the period of suspension. Such an order should, in my opinion, only be passed when very special cause is shown.

All 10 applications are accordingly dismissed.

On an application being made under para 20 of Sch II, C P C, it is open to the Court to enquire whether there was any matter in dispute between the parties to be referred to arbitration and whether there was, as a matter of fact, any reference to arbitration by the parties [p 706, col 2]

One partner in a firm has no authority to enter into an agreement to refer a dispute, to which the firm is a party, to arbitration [p 707, col 1]

Where a Receiver has been appointed to wind up the affairs of a partnership, to collect all outstandings, to pay debts and to distribute the surplus, a partner of the firm has no authority to refer to arbitration a question relating to the liability of the firm to pay a sum of money to a third person [p 707, col 2]

Miscellaneous first appeal from an order of the Senior Subordinate Judge, Jhelum, dated the 26th January 1925

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant

Mr. Dev Raj Sawhney, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—An application was made on the 13th August 1924 under Sch. II, paras. 20 and 21, C. P. C., by the Firm Radha Kishen-Chuni Lal through Raunki Ram, purporting to be its manager, against the Firm Ahsha Mal-Ishar Das, through Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal, described as its managing partner, to file an award dated the 13th August 1924 and to have it made a decree of the Court. The application was made the same day the award was written and when it was presented the two persons described as the managers were present as well as the arbitrator. According to the award two persons were partners of the Firm Ahsha Mal-Ishar Das, namely, Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal, who purported to be its managing partner, and another Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das and the arbitrator awarded Rs. 10,743, against the Firm Ahsha Mal-Ishar Das in favour of the Firm Radha Kishen-Chuni Lal with interest at 12 per cent.

per annum till payment. In spite of the large amount involved Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal signed the award and also agreed that it should be filed in Court. On the 31st October 1924 it came to the notice of the Court from the statement of Raunki Ram that he had only been a paid servant of the plaintiff Firm Radha Kishen-Chuni Lal which had ceased to exist three years before the alleged arbitration. He also disclosed that Radha Kishen, one of its two partners, was dead and that he had no power-of-attorney from its other partner Chuni Lal, who was his brother-in-law. In fact Raunki Ram signed the agreement to refer and signed the award, and put in the application to the Court only on the alleged oral instructions of Chuni Lal and it is obvious that he had no power to do these acts. The Court thereupon ordered notice to issue to the defendant Firm Ahsha Mal Ishar Das, at Karachi, and to Chuni Lal, but Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal at once volunteered a statement to the Court that the defendant firm had been closed or dissolved, though he used to institute and defend suits on its behalf. He added that the share-holders were —

Himself, i. e. Lakhmi Chand, son of Ganda Mal, Re. 0-5-4

Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das, Re. 0-10-8. He also said that the dealings of that firm came to him on an award. Accordingly the Court summoned the other Lakhmi Chand and Chuni Lal.

Chuni Lal did not appear on the 25th November 1924 but Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das did. On that date Raunki Ram further disclosed that Chuni Lal and Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal were true brothers, so that he was the brother-in-law of both of them. By the consent award, therefore, the dissolved firm, in which Chuni Lal was a partner, got an order against the dissolved firm in which his brother Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal, was a partner to the extent of one-third, for a large sum of money with interest. Chuni Lal ultimately appeared on the 13th December 1924 and admitted that his firm was closed or dissolved some five years before and that Radha Kishen, the deceased partner, had left a minor son, who, however, had no connection with the firm. He further said that he had orally authorised his brother-in-law Raunki Ram to act for him and that the defendant firm had been closed for three or four years. Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal made a further statement on the 13th December 1924 that Ahsha Mal-Ishar Das was not yet dissolved and that he was full owner of that firm by both the arbitration awards though this goes against his own consent award. He admitted that Kimat Rai had been appointed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, Karachi, as Receiver of the Firm Absa Mal-Ishar Das to collect outstandings and pay debts with what he collected. He also said that he had got no authority from the Receiver to enter on this arbitration and that the other Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das used to give assent to what he did, though it was not asserted that he assented to this arbitration.

The other Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das appeared on the 25th November 1924 by Counsel who filed a written statement and made an oral one. He objected that Raunki Ram could not carry on the suit on the oral instructions of Chuni Lal. This was certainly correct but when Chuni Lal came forward later, the position changed at least as far as the suit is concerned. It was further stated (1) that there was no reference to arbitration on behalf of either of the two firms, and (2) that there was no dispute between them so that there could be no reference. It was further explained that the Firm Ahsha Mal-Ishar Das was dissolved in November 1917 by an award filed in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. Ishar Das died in February 1918 when his son and heir Lakhmi Chand, son of Ishar Das, was 13 years old. A fresh dispute arose then and the same arbitrator Kimat Rai, settled it by a second award in October 1918 and it became a rule of the Court on 15th October 1919. Both the Lakhmi Chands, one being represented by his mother, then moved the Judicial Commissioner that Kimat Rai should be appointed Receiver to recover the outstandings and discharge the liabilities of the partnership, details of which were given in a list prepared by Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal, which was, however, not admitted necessarily to be correct by the other Lakhmi Chand. The Receiver finally had to distribute the surplus of the dissolved partnership between the parties, i. e., between the surviving partner Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal and the son of the deceased partner, Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das. The Judicial Commissioner accordingly appointed Kimat Rai, Receiver with the powers noted above in December 1919. All this is supported and proved by the copies of the joint application of the parties concerned and the order passed by the Judicial Commissioner together with a copy of the list of assets and liabilities referred to above, which are upon this record.

It is perfectly clear that all the parties knew the contentions marked (1) and (2) above on behalf of Lakhmi Chand son of Ishar Das and the Court then proceeded to determine them, after noting on the 13th December 1924 that the parties had made the statements and given the evidence they desired. A date was then fixed for arguments, and on the 26th January 1925 the Court dismissed the application on the grounds (1) that there was no reference to arbitration on behalf of the alleged firm, though there was an attempt by the two brothers, Chuni Lal and Lakhmi Chand, and their brother-in-law Raunki Ram, to defraud the other Lakhmi Chand and (2) that there was no matter in dispute between the two firms to be referred to arbitration. Relying on the opening words of para. 21 of the Second Schedule of the C. P. C., it held that that was sufficient to dispose of the application. Against this decision the plaintiff firm through Chuni Lal has filed this appeal.

The Court also appears to have commenced proceedings under s. 476, Cr. P. C., for this Court was moved to stay them, pending this appeal.

It was argued before me that the Court erred in not framing issues and allowing parties to produce evidence. The above discussion is sufficient to dispose of this contention. The parties knew what was in issue and said they had no further statements to make or evidence to give. A date was fixed for arguments and the case was argued on these two points, and no attempt was made to say that there was any other evidence to produce. There is thus no force in grounds Nos. 6 and 7 of the appeal. The merits of the case were obviously not affected in these circumstances and s. 99, C. P. C., in any case applies.

It was next argued (grounds Nos. 8 and 9) that the Court had no power to decide the two matters it did but was confined to deciding any objections under paras. 14 and 15 of the Second Schedule, C. P. C. This is obviously wrong for the opening words of para. 21 of the Second Schedule were inserted to set at rest this question, as to which different views had been taken by some of the High Courts. See also Ganesh Singh v. Kashi Singh (1) and Firm Mansa Ram-Gordhan Das v. Firm Mangal Sain-Duni Chand (2) (Lahore High Court) and Dip Chand v. Sahabdin (3). The case reported as Sassoon and Co. v. Ramdutt Ram-Kissen Das (4) is not against this view as it was a case under the Indian Arbitration Act and not under the C. P. C. Pokhardas Jashiomal v. Forbes Forbes, Campbell & Co. (5) is not in point for the same reason.

The first five grounds of appeal amount to this that there was a valid reference of a disputed matter to arbitration on behalf of both of the firms. It was held in Ram Bhargose v. Kalu Mal (6) that one partner cannot enter into an agreement to refer, the reasoning being based on s. 251 of the Contract Act. The English authorities are admittedly to the same effect. The Madras High Court has taken a similar view in Chandooru Pannayya v. Venugopala Rice Factory Co., Ltd. (7) and Venkatachellam Chetty v. Ramanaathan Chetty (8). There is a full discussion of this question by the Calcutta High Court in Mohamad Akbar v. Dwarka Nath (9). In it the plaintiff issued as legal representatives of a deceased partner to have the partnership wound up. It was held that it was the duty of the surviving partners to take all steps necessary for the completion of their unperformed engagements (See s 263 of the Contract Act). But, after the death of one partner, it was held that a dispute between the partnership and a third party could not be referred to arbitration by the surviving partners. This decision was based on the Indian, English, and United States judicial decisions and it is on all fours with the present case.

On behalf of the appellant I was referred to Ghaznavi & Co. v. Budge-Budge Jute Mills (10) in which it was held that an award was not bad for the facts that it was made against a firm without ascertaining who were the parties liable as the new C. P. C. provided for suits against firms in the firm's names. That ruling obviously is of no help in the special circumstances of this case. Besides it was a compulsory reference under the terms of the contract. Similarly, Sukha Nand v. Behari Ram-Ishar Das (11) and Bishambar Mal-Pala Mal v. Firm Ganga Sahai Nihal Chand (12) are obviously not in point. I, therefore, hold that there was no reference to arbitration on behalf of either of the firms named and that the application to file the award was consequently rightly dismissed under the opening words of para. 21 of the Second Schedule, C. P. C.

This case is even stronger than the one reported as Mohamad Akbar v. Dwarka Nath (9) as a Receiver is in existence winding up the partnership affairs of Ahsa Mal-Ishar Das under the Court of the Judicial Commissioner. It has been proved that he has been given full powers to collect all outstandings and to pay debts and to distribute the surplus. It was, therefore, not possible for Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal to refer a question as to whether the defendant firm owed anything to any one. See Pollock and Mulla's Contract Act, 5th Edition, page 807.

It was also argued by the respondent's Counsel that there could have been no matter in dispute to refer to an arbitration as in the list handed over by Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal himself to the Receiver, this debt is not included and as any debt due by the dissolved firm must have been time-barred before August 1914. In the absence of any other evidence this contention must also prevail. The list in question has been proved and there is nothing to rebut it.

I have already shown that it has not been established that the whole of the business of Ahsa Mal Ishar Das has been handed over to Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal by the two awards referred to but that on the contrary a Receiver is liquidating this firm. Even in the award it is stated that both the Lakhmi Chands are partners in it. Likewise it is not established that Chuni Lal is the sole proprietor of Radha Kishen-Chuni Lal with full powers as regards it. If only the two brothers Chuni Lal and Lakhmi Chand son of Ganda Mal were meant to be involved, it

C P Tenancy Act (I of 1920), s. 104, Sch II, Art 1, scope of—Dispossession of tenant by other than landlord—"Tenant," whether includes holder of Survey Number in Sambalpur Territory

Section 101 and Art 1 of the Second Schedule of the C P Tenancy Act apply to all suits for possession by a person claiming to be a tenant, irrespective of the fact as to whether the person keeping him out of possession is the landlord of the village or any other person.

The holder of a Survey Number in the Sambalpur Territory is a "tenant" within the meaning of Art 1 of Sch II to the C P. Tenancy Act Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bilaspur, dated the 30th April 1924, in C. A. No. 50 of 1921.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant

Messrs. G. R. Deo and T. Y. Dehankar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT. (July 4, 1925.)—There is no basis whatever for the opinion expressed in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court that s. 104 and Art 1 of the Second Schedule of the Tenancy Act of 1920 apply to a suit by a person claiming to be a tenant only when it is against the landlord of the holding he claims. The contrary could hardly be more clearly expressed than in the words of Art. 1 of the Schedule. The learned Judge also contradicts himself on this point in that portion of the judgment in which he finds that the plaintiff's suit is not barred by the rule of limitation because it was filed within two years of his dispossession by the defendants.

The facts are these: In 1911 the defendant Budhu transferred in some way or other to the plaintiff Mansaram the Survey Numbers in a village in the Sambalpur Territory of which he was the holder, and Mansaram remained in possession of them and paid the rent for them to the Gaontia till November 1921. In 1915 one Ramprasad to whom Budhu had transferred a part or the whole of the land held by Mansaram sued the latter for possession. Mansaram pleaded that he was the tenant, and the suit was dismissed. Budhu was a witness for the plaintiff in that case and, therefore, had notice not later than 1915 that Mansaram was asserting a hostile title, even if he had till then held permissive possession under Budhu. Mansaram remained in possession as the tenant recognised by the Gaontia till November 1921 when he was ousted by Budhu, and he filed the suit for possession out of which this appeal arises on the 6th of July 1923.

It is the opinion of the learned Judge of the lower Appellate Court that the holder of a Survey Number in the Sambalpur Territory is not included in the word "tenant" as used in Art 1 of the Second Schedule of the Tenancy Act, 1920, and that the period of limitation for a suit by him to recover possession of a Survey Number of which he claims to be the holder is 12 years. It has been held, therefore, that Budhu did not lose his rights in the holding by being out of possession for more than two years between 1915 and 1921. This, of course, implies that the learned Judge was further of opinion that s. 35 (2) of the Tenancy Act, 1898 also did not apply to such a person.

This view of the matter is based on reading the second Explanation attached to the definition of a tenant in cl. (11) of s. 2 of the Tenancy Act, 1920, which is the same as that attached to cl. (14) of s. 2 of the Act of 1898, as meaning that the holder of a Survey Number in the Sambalpur Territory is to be treated as a tenant so far as the Gaontia is concerned but for no other purposes. I can see very little reason for such an interpretation of the words used in the two Acts, but if it were correct it would follow that the holder of a Survey Number in the Sambalpur Territory had all the rights and privileges of the holder of one in Berar including the unrestricted right of transfer and it is beyond doubt that he has not got these rights. The interpretation is, therefore, wrong and Budhu had ceased to be the holder of the Survey Numbers in dispute in this case long before November 1921 when he took forcible possession of them from Mansaram, whether we apply the Tenancy Act of 1920 or that of 1898.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will be set aside and that of the first Court will be restored. The Pleader's fee in this Court will be twenty rupees.

(July 8, 1925)—The order for the payment of costs was accidentally omitted from this judgment. The whole costs in all three Courts will be paid by the defendants.

Where a District Judge grants a certificate under s. 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act with regard to a question of custom for the reason that the appellant is anyhow appealing on the question of the ancestral nature of the land and that it is advisable that he should be given a certificate in order that he might agitate every question which has arisen in the case and it is not stated in the certificate that the various requirements of the section have been fulfilled, the certificate is bad and will be ignored by the High Court.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Rawalpindi, dated the 14th February 1921, reversing that of the Munsif, First Class, Rawalpindi, dated the 23rd October 1920.

Mr Aziz Ahmad and Chaudhri Zafarulla Khan, for the Appellant

Mr M. L. Puri, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case are the collaterals in the third degree of one Latif Shah and they pray for a declaration that a gift made by him to a very distant relative, named Mahtab Shah, shall not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court but the appeal to the District Judge was successful and a decree has been given as sought for.

On second appeal, which is supported by a certificate, Counsel contends, in the first place, that the plaintiffs have not proved the property in suit to be ancestral, and, in the second, that the gift is valid.

We find that the second and main question cannot be argued as we hold that the certificate given by the District Judge does not comply with the requirements of s. 41 (3) of the Punjab Courts Act. The District Judge granted this certificate for the reason that the appellant was anyhow appealing on the question of the ancestral nature of the land, and, therefore, the Judge appeared to think it advisable that he should be given a certificate in order that he might agitate every question which had arisen in this case. It is not stated that the various requirements of the section have been fulfilled and, as the grounds on which the certificate is granted are wholly mistaken, we must ignore it.

The question remains whether the plaintiffs have or have not established the ancestral nature of the land. The pedigree-table is to be found on page 23 of the judgment of the District Judge. It is an admitted fact that the land in suit was held by Sher Muhammad, the common ancestor. It is also an admitted fact that it was held by his grandson Latif Shah, and in the year 1860 by Jawaya Shah, father of the donor. It is also admitted by the defendants that Latif Shah was succeeded by his two daughters, and Jawaya Shah, therefore, must have inherited from his mother. It is well established law under these circumstances that the woman merely acts as conduit pipe, and that the ancestral nature of the land is not affected by the fact that she takes a place in the line of succession. We agree with the learned District Judge in finding that the plaintiffs have established beyond all doubt that the land in suit is ancestral, and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

The removal under a decree of a trustee from office comes into operation not from the date of the decree but from the date on which the trustee is removed from actual possession. So long as he is not removed and remains in possession of the property, he is the proper judgment-debtor to be on record for purposes of execution of a decree against the trust [p. 711, col. 1.]

Appeal against an order of the District Court, South Malabar, in A. S. No. 523 of 1922, preferred against that of the Subordinate Judge, Ottapalam, in Execution Petition No. 123 of 1922.

Mr. K. Kuttikrishna Menon, for the Appellants.

Messrs. N. A. Krishna Iyer and T. S. Anantharaman, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the execution petition is barred by time. The decree sought to be executed is the final decree in O. S. No. 36 of 1912 on a hypothecation bond executed by certain persons. The bond was executed by them, as trustees or owners of a certain Devaswom. At the time that suit was pending another suit, O. S. No. 12 of 1912, to declare that the trust was a public trust and to remove the above persons was going on. On 9th July 1914 a decree to remove them was passed. The final decree in O. S. No. 36 of 1912, the hypothecation decree against the property was passed on 30th September 1914. Three execution petitions were put in to execute this final decree. The first was put in on 20th July 1915 and was dismissed, because batta was not paid. The second was put in on 26th June 1918 and was rejected for the same reason. The third was put in on 20th June 1921 and is the execution petition now under appeal.

The appellants are the present trustees who were put into office in the place of the original judgment debtors by force of the decree in O. S. No. 12 of 1912 at sometime which is not known. They contend in limine that the decree in O. S. No. 36 of 1912 now under execution was not against the trust property at all; but I am not prepared to accept this contention, for the decree clearly is in the first instance, against the trust property. It is further contended that the decree is a nullity, it being pointed out that the decree removing the original trustees was passed some two months before the final decree against them. But it is clear that this contention cannot arise unless the respondents show that the judgment-debtors in O. S. No. 36 of 1912 had been, as a matter of fact, removed, in consequence of the decree in O. S. No. 12 of 1912, sometime prior to the final decree in O. S. No. 36 of 1912 and that some other trustees or Receiver had been appointed in their place who could have been brought on the record as the legal representatives of the original trustees before the final decree was passed. This fact the appellants have not attempted to show. It is a question of fact which ought to have been heard and decided by the first Court; and in the absence of any evidence to prove that fact it cannot be reasonably contended that the decree in O. S. No. 36 of 1912 is a nullity.

The next contention is based on very much the same argument. Appellants contend that the execution petition dated 20th July 1915 was not in accordance with law, because the proper judgment debtors were not on record in that petition, as that petition was put in against the judgment-debtors named in the decree a year or so after the decree for their removal had been passed. It is said that a Receiver was appointed in O. S. No. 12 of 1912 on 16th February 1915 some five months before the date of the first execution petition; but again, the appellants have not attempted to show that this Receiver took charge or that the trustees, who were the original judgment-debtors, were actually ousted by him from the property prior to the date of this first execution petition.

were not the proper party respondents to the execution petition because they had been dismissed by the decree in O. S. No. 12 of 1912 on 9th July 1912 but it nevertheless held that the execution petition was in accordance with law. I do not agree with the lower Appellate Court in its view that the removal of the original trustees came into operation from the date of the decree and not from the date, whatever date it be, on which the trustees were removed from actual possession. So long as they were not removed and they remained in control of the property cannot be contended that they were not the proper judgment debtors to be on record in the execution petition. Suppose for example that no Receiver or new trustee was appointed for some months after the passing of the decree in O. S. No. 12 of 1912. It could not be held that there was no judgment-debtor at all against whom any execution petition could be brought during that period. The crucial date on which the trustees cease to be actual judgment-debtors is that on which they were ousted from the control of the trust property. What that date is does not appear. It is clear that the duty of the appellants was to establish that date and they have not chosen to do so. It cannot, therefore, be concluded that on the date of the execution petition of 1915 the original trustees were not the proper judgment-debtors. Therefore there is no proof that this execution petition was not against the proper judgment-debtors.

Even if it were against the wrong judgment debtors it would not be invalid as a step-in-aid so long as the executing decree-holder bona fide believed that they were still the proper judgment-debtors. According to law, so far as laid down in this Presidency, a bona fide application to execute a decree against a particular judgment-debtor is in accordance with law even though it is subsequently discovered that the judgment-debtor was dead at the time of the application; see Samia Pillai v. Chockalingu Chettiar (1). An unreported case of this Court, O. M. A. No. 185 of 1902, has been brought to my notice which takes an opposite view but in such cases the proper course is to follow the reported decision. The same principle has been laid down in Balkishan Das v. Bedamati Koer (2) where it was held that an application made against persons who were not the legal representatives of the deceased judgment debtor was valid if the decree-holder bona fide believed that they were the legal representatives see also Ramasawmi Chettiar v. Oppilamani Chetti (3). The High Court of Allahabad takes a different view which this High Court so far has not accepted see Jnanendra Nath Basu v. Nihalo Bibi (4); but compare this with Mahomed Hussain v. Enyat Hussain (5).

Now as the application of 1915 was put in against the judgment-debtors named in the decree the Executing Court in the absence of evidence to the contrary could not but decide that the execution petition was in accordance with law. It is not its business to go outside the decree and enquire whether the judgment-debtors named in that decree were still the proper judgment-debtors in 1915. The presumption is that the execution petition was in accordance with law, and it was admitted as such by the Court and notice issued therein. The parties who now wish to contend that it was not, were bound to prove it, and for that purpose they must first establish that the judgment-debtors named in the decree were no longer the real judgment debtors. That, as noted, they have not attempted to do. Unless and until they proved that fact, it was not the business of the decree-holders to prove that they nevertheless bona fide believed that the judgment-debtors named in the decree were still really the judgment-debtors. It is not, therefore, open to the appellants who have not established the fact necessary to throw on the decree-holders the onus of proving their bona fides, to put forward now any contention that the execution petition of 1915 was not bona fide.

A further contention has been put forward that the decree under execution was a fraudulent decree come to by collusion between the mortgagee and the original trustees. But, obviously that objection cannot be taken in execution. The real judgment-debtor is the trust; and the representatives of the trust cannot attack it in execution proceedings. If they want to set aside the decree they must institute appropriate proceedings.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the Arbitration - Award, suit to enforce Contract containing arbitration clause, validity of, whether can be questioned - Procedure - Piecemeal trial of suit, undesirability of

In answer to a suit to enforce an award, made on a reference in pursuance of an arbitration clause contained in a contract alleged to have been entered into between the parties, it is open to the defendant to plead that there was no completed contract between the parties and that consequently the arbitration clause could not come into operation. This objection goes to the root of the whole matter and must be determined along with any other issues in the suit. [p. 713, col. 1]

The practice of trying an important case piecemeal tends to lead to protracted litigation and serious inconvenience and to involve the parties in heavy costs if the case is taken repeatedly on appeal to a superior tribunal. [p. 714, col. 2]

First appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Delhi, dated the 18th July 1922.

Bakhshi Tek Chand and Lala Kahan, Chand for the Appellant.

Mr. Prem Lal, and Lala Ram Kishore, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff sued the defendant on the allegations that the defendant on the 8th January 1920 placed an indent with him for 5 cases of grey merino on certain terms, that the indent was duly accepted by the plaintiff within the prescribed period of sixty days; that the goods were shipped by the plaintiff; but that the defendants raised frivolous objections which were referred by the two parties to arbitrators who disagreed and that thereupon they were duly referred to an umpire who gave an ex parte award in the plaintiff's favour. This award was to the effect that the defendant should take up and pay for the goods. It was alleged that the sum payable on this award, though it was not actually fixed was Rs. 36,925-15-9 and this with future interest was claimed on its basis. In the alternative it was claimed that this sum was due for the price of the goods apart from the award.

The defendant admitted the indent but denied that it had been accepted within the period prescribed. There was thus no completed contract. The submission to the two arbitrators was admitted but the appointment and proceedings of the umpire were alleged to be illegal, so that the award was invalid. The other pleas do not require mention at present except that plaintiff's Counsel replied that the indent had been accepted within the prescribed period and that in any case the defendant had accepted his client's acceptance as due acceptance. These allegations were denied by defendant's Counsel and the Court proceeded to frame the following issues:—

(1) Was an umpire validly appointed and did he give an award?

(2) If so, is it invalid and not binding on the defendants?

(3) To what amount is plaintiff entitled under the award?

(4) Was there a completed contract between the parties?

(5) Is defendant estopped from impugning the contract?

(6) Was plaintiff ready and willing to perform his part of the contract? Did defendant break it? If so, how and when?

(7) Was defendant excused from accepting the goods under the circumstances of the case?

(8) Had the property in the goods passed to the defendant?

(9) If so, does not a suit lie for the price of the goods as framed?

Later it added the following two issues:—

(10) What goods and under what circumstances have been parted with? What is the effect thereof on plaintiff's claim?

(11) To what amount for price, charges and interest are plaintiffs entitled and at what rate of exchange?

When the first nine issues were struck the Court ordered the parties to produce their evidence on the first three issues only, though later evidence was also allowed on Issues Nos. 10 and 11 as being supplementary to the first three issues. It would seem that this order was verbally objected to when it was made; while before evidence was commenced, defendant's Counsel again tried to get the order changed to allow of evidence being given on all the issues. He was overruled and he then put in a written application to the same effect. This also was refused. The Court then proceeded to judgment on the issues mentioned and holding that the award was valid, found that Rs. 32,683 2 6 were due on it. A decree for that sum with future interest at 9 per cent. per annum was given to the plaintiff with a lien on the goods. Against this decision the defendant has filed this appeal.

It was argued by the learned Counsel for the appellant that Issues Nos (4) and (5) went to the very root of the matter as they involved the question of the jurisdiction of the arbitrators and that it was, therefore, illegal to shut out all evidence on these two issues and to decide the suit only on issues Nos (1) to (3). The Trial Court itself seems to have felt this difficulty, for, though it confined the case to issues Nos (1) and (3), it entered into a discussion of issues Nos (4) and (5) in its judgment at pages 73 and 74 of the paper book. It said there that the indent, which contained an agreement to refer disputes to arbitration, was admitted. It did not add that the acceptance of that indent by the plaintiff-respondent which was necessary to make it a complete contract was denied. It then went on to say that in the correspondence not a word was said as to the contract not having been completed, although both sides appointed arbitrators. This was a discussion of issues Nos (4) and (5), evidence as to which had been excluded.

In Sasoon & Co., v. Ramdutt Ramkissen Das (1) their Lordships of the Privy Council held that a suit was maintainable to contest an award when the objection was the want of jurisdiction in the arbitrator. In Firm Jainaram-Babu Lal v. Firm Narain Das-Jain Mal (2) it was held at pages 305*-306* that the question of the factum or the validity of the contract was not within the cognizance of the arbitrators, and that the arbitration clause assumed that there was a valid and binding contract between the parties, that is, that the arbitration clause, which is part of the contract, falls if the contract falls. It was sought to distinguish these authorities on the ground that in them the arbitration had been ex parte throughout. But in the present case the effect of their having been a submission to arbitration is clearly included in issue No (5), which should, therefore, have been decided after recording evidences, and after issue No (4) had been decided.

In Tagabally Abdul Hussain v James Finlay & Co (3) the Sind Judicial Commissioners also held that a party dissatisfied with a private award could contest it, when it was sought to enforce it under the Indian Arbitration Act, by taking such objections as that Act allowed but that that remedy was not his sole remedy. He could also bring a suit, thereafter, to set aside the award on the ground that no contract, providing for a reference to arbitration was made or that if made, was not enforceable by reason of fraud or misrepresentation. Rudha Kisen Khetry v Lukhmi Chand Jhawar (4) (especially at page 518) is also in point.

In the case of above authorities the suit was brought by the party objecting to the award, but that clearly makes no difference. In the present case, the umpire's ex parte award was simply to the effect that the buyers should take up and pay for the goods. It was useless to file such an award in Court under the Indian Arbitration Act as no sum was fixed in it as due and certain calculations had, therefore, to be made and rates of exchange ascertained. The plaintiff, therefore, came into the regular Courts on the umpires' award. In these circumstances it was within the defendants' rights to attack the award on all possible grounds.

It was urged, however, by the learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent that his plaint proceeded on two causes of action, paras (4) to (7) disclosing the cause of action on the award, and the other paras dealing with the claim independently of the award, that defendants' plea as to there being no completed contract referred to the second part of the claim which arose only if the award was set aside; and that the initial submission to arbitration was admitted and that all that was pleaded as regards the claim on the award was that the arbitration proceedings were invalid on various grounds. This argument, though ingenious, cannot be accepted. It was in para (2) of the plaint that it was stated that the indent had been accepted, by the plaintiff within the prescribed period of 60 days. This was prior to any mention of an award. Similarly in para. (2) of the pleas the defendant at once denied that there was a completed contract as the indent had not been accepted within 60 days. The order of the pleas had to follow the plaint. Later, in replying to the paras. of the plaint dealing with the award it was admitted that two arbitrators, who disagreed, were appointed while it was added that the appointment of the umpire was invalid. Then in the further pleas, it was again denied that there was a completed contract. It is true that it might have been added for the sake of clearness that there could be no valid submission to arbitration as there was no completed contract, but the meaning was clear enough, namely, that, as there was no completed contract, the whole suit went.

This becomes even clearer when the statements of Counsel before issues are examined. Plaintiff's Counsel stated that the indent was accepted two days before the prescribed period ended and that in any case the defendant accepted plaintiff's acceptance as due acceptance. Both these allegations were denied by the opposing Counsel. Issues Nos. (4) and (5) embody this part of the case and the whole suit depends on the findings on these issues and the legal effect thereof. The fact that there was a submission to arbitration may be evidence on this part of the case, but in the absence of other evidence it is impossible to decide these issues. No question arises as to the defendant having accepted the order of the Trial Court confining the trial to the three first issues. It is clear from the Court's order, dated the 20th April 1922, that this objection was probably taken at the very time the order was passed and that defendant certainly objected before any evidence was recorded, and finally put in a regular petition when his objections were not heeded.

It follows that the Trial Court has erroneously decided the first three issues as being preliminary issues, the decisions of which were sufficient for the disposal of the case, whereas issues Nos. (4) and (5) may go to the root of the case. We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the Trial Court, remand the suit under O. XLI, r. 23, C. P. C., for decision according to law.

The Court-fee on appeal will be refunded. Other costs will be costs in the cause.

In conclusion we would refer to *Yatindra Nath Chaudhury v. Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), s. 105—Settlement of rent—Suit to recover rent at rate settled—Plea of denial of settlement proceedings—Fraud, plea of, absence of—Notice, service of, whether can be enquired into

In answer to a suit to recover rent at the rate settled in proceedings under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, defendant denied that there was any such proceedings and stated that if any order under s. 105 had been obtained it was not binding upon him. There was no plea of fraud and no issue was raised in the suit as to the validity or otherwise of the proceedings under s. 105.

Held, (1) that in the absence of a plea of fraud it was not open to the Court to try the question as to whether there was any service of notice on the defendant or not in the proceedings under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act,

(2) that if the defendant wished to challenge the proceedings under s. 105 on the ground of non-service of notice, he ought to have questioned the proceedings before the Settlement Officer, or by way of proceedings appropriate for such relief or by appeal, and that it was not open to him to do so in answer to the present suit.

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Court, Mymensingh, dated the 31st July 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, Third Court, Mymensingh, dated the 9th January 1922.

Babus Gobinda Chandra De Roy and Jatindra Nath Sanyal, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this second appeal by the plaintiffs arises was for recovery of rent. The plaintiffs claimed rent at the rate of Rs. 13-4 per annum as was settled in proceedings under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The defence of the defendants was that the rent payable was at the rate of Rs 4-13 a year. They denied that there was any proceeding under s. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and also stated that if any order under s. 105 was obtained in secret it was not binding upon them.

The only issue raised in the case was "Can the plaintiffs recover rent at the rate of Rs. 13-4". No issue was raised as to the validity or otherwise of the proceedings under s. 105 at all.

The Court of first instance found that there was no fraud as regards the proceedings under s. 105 and held that the defendant was bound by the order under s. 105 which showed that the rent settled was Rs 13-4 per annum. The first Court further found that the defendants produced no dakhilas to show that the rent was paid at the rate of Rs 4-13 as alleged by them. The Trial Court, therefore, gave a decree to the plaintiff for the rent claimed at the rate of Rs. 13-4 per annum. On appeal by the defendant No. 1 the learned Subordinate Judge reversed the decree of the Munsif and gave a decree for rent at the rate of Rs 4 13.

The learned Vakil who appears for the plaintiffs-appellants has contended before me that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge was erroneous because the Court had made a new case for the defendants upon which no issue was raised. Next he contended that a mere finding on the denial of the defendants that no notice was served does not affect the validity of the order under s. 105 and lastly it was contended that the lower Appellate Court was in error in enquiring as to whether the order under s. 105 was passed upon sufficient evidence.

It is to be regretted that the respondents did not appear before me.

It appears to me that the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge cannot be maintained. As I have already stated no issue was raised by the defendants on the question of validity or otherwise of the order under s. 105. The Court of first instance found that there was no fraud in the proceedings. The lower Appellate Court on the denial of the defendants, that there was any proceedings under s. 105 held that that was enough to show that the proceedings under s. 105 were not binding upon the defendants. In the absence of any fraud which was not even alleged in the written statement or taken in the grounds of appeal before the lower Appellate Court and not found by that Court it was not open to the learned Subordinate Judge to try the question as to whether there was any service of notice or not in the proceedings under s. 105. The learned Subordinate Judge does not deal with any evidence as to non-service of notice in the proceedings under s. 105. All that he found is upon the denial of the defendants that there was any service. If the defendants wished to challenge the proceedings under s. 105 on the ground of non-service of notice it was not open to them to do so in the present proceedings. They ought to have, if they chose, questioned the proceedings before the Settlements Officer or by way of proceedings appropriate for such relief or by appeal. A decree relied upon by a party can be challenged on the ground of fraud or want of jurisdiction. No question of want of jurisdiction arises here, and as there was no issue as to the proceedings under s. 105 being vitiated by fraud and there was no finding that there had been any fraud sufficient in law to take away the force of the order made under s. 105, I think, therefore, the learned Subordinate Judge, upon the findings arrived at, was not justified in not giving legal effect to the order under s. 105 and that effect was that as between the plaintiffs and the defendants Rs 13 4 was settled as the rent payable by the defendants to the plaintiffs.

I think the learned Subordinate Judge was not justified in interfering with the judgment of the Court of first instance. I, therefore, set aside the decree made by the learned Subordinate Judge and restore that of the first Court with costs in all Courts.

The general rule is that in a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell, persons who do not claim under the parties to the contract and are strangers to it or persons claiming adversely to both the parties, ought not to be made parties [p. 718, col 1.]

A person setting up a mortgage in his favour executed by the predecessor-in-title of a vendor, who impeaches it as being a sham transaction and without consideration, is, however, a person whose title could be displaced by the vendor and against whom, therefore, the contract to sell could under s 27 (c) of the Specific Relief Act be specifically enforced. In such a case the just and proper course would be to implead also as party to the suit the person who claims to be a mortgagee and to adjudicate on all the questions in the suit itself so as to enable the purchaser to be free from all future risk and liability [ibid.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an application to set aside the order of the Subordinate Judge who dismissed the suit as against the second defendant holding that he was an improper party. The suit was filed by the plaintiff to enforce specific performance of a contract to purchase certain property for Rs. 70,000. There was a mortgage over the property created by the predecessor-in-title of the first defendant, who was the person who contracted to sell the suit property to the plaintiff, for a principal sum of Rs. 50,000. The first defendant denied that the mortgage was binding on the property on the ground that it was a fraudulent and collusive transaction entered into by the predecessor-in-title through whom he claims for the purpose of defrauding the creditors and that any consideration passed for that mortgage. The plaintiff, who had agreed to purchase the properties, got a varthamanam letter, Ex. C, whereby the first defendant agreed to indemnify the plaintiff against all claims by third persons. The plaintiff in this suit joined both the first defendant who was the person with whom he entered into the contract to sell, and the second defendant who was the person who claimed as a mortgagee under a mortgage created by the predecessor-in-title of the first defendant for a principal sum of Rs. 50,000 the interest on which would amount to a great deal more, the defendants inter se disputing the validity of the mortgage, the first defendant saying that there was no mortgage which can be enforced against the property and the second defendant that it was a valid mortgage.

Now the difficulty in this case is as to what the plaintiff has to do? If the second defendant is discharged from the suit, the plaintiff would be in the position of having to pay the second defendant the full mortgage-money which the first defendant may draw out, and the day after there might be a suit against the plaintiff on the mortgage under which the second defendant claims, and, if the first defendant's case that the mortgage was fictitious or a sham transaction is not true, then the plaintiff would have to pay that amount over again. It was suggested that the plaintiff might pay the money in Court under s 83 of the Transfer of Property Act and leave it to the defendants to fight out the question; but the trouble is that the plaintiff on the date of the suit was merely an individual in possession of an agreement to sell and s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act says that a contract for the sale of immoveable property is a contract that a sale of such property shall take place on terms settled between the parties and that it does not of itself, create any interest in or charge of such property; the plaintiff, therefore, is a person who, by reason of the agreement to sell, has no interest in the property.

As regards the paying of money into Court under s. 83, the section states that the person who can deposit in Court would be a person who could file a suit for redemption. It says that the mortgagor or any other person entitled to institute such suit (that is a suit to redeem) may deposit the money into Court. Section 91 enumerates the persons who may redeem and a person who has merely got an agreement to sell the property does not fall under any of these categories. So that, the remedy under s. 83 is not open to the present plaintiff.

Turning to the Specific Relief Act, we find in cl (c) of s. 27, (which states against whom a contract can be specifically enforced) that it can be enforced against "any person claiming under a title which, though prior to the contract and known to the plaintiff, might have been displaced by the defendant." In this case the first defendant, if his case is true, can file a suit against the second defendant to have that mortgage declared invalid and not binding, so that he can displace a title which was created by his predecessors in-title. Section 27, therefore, seems to me to provide for a case like the present and enable the plaintiff to file a suit against the first defendant who executed the agreement to sell and the second defendant who claims under a title of the first defendant, which title the first defendant can file a suit to displace, on the ground that it was a fraudulent transaction brought about to defraud the creditors and that no consideration passed therefor. It seems to me that, in a case like the present, the only convenient course would be to allow both the first defendant, who executed the agreement, and the second defendant, who claims under an encumbrance, to be joined as parties, whereby the dispute between the person who claims an interest in the property as a mortgagee may be settled. That is the only safe way of keeping the plaintiff really indemnified. In that suit if it is decided that the mortgage is valid, the money which the plaintiff has paid into Court under the decree would be appropriated in such a way as to keep the plaintiff free from all future troubles. I see very little justice in making the plaintiff, in a suit like this, pay the money into Court, and allowing the defendant to draw the money and then leaving the plaintiff at the mercy of the person who claims under a mortgage which he can enforce later on with interest for the intervening period, for that would be the result of striking out the second defendant in a case like this and letting the suit to proceed against the other party.

Reference was made to the fact that in the varthamanam letter there is actually a promise to indemnify the plaintiff against any loss ultimately sustained, and that, till the loss is sustained, the plaintiff has to pay the money and take his chance of getting it back or not under the indemnity clause. I think the decisions cited by Mr. Patanjali Sastri, are in favour of the view that it is not necessary that actual damage should be caused before the party affected can act. In Wolmershausen v Gullick (1) and Eastern Shipping Co v Quah Beng. Kee (2) the person who was ultimately to pay was made a party. The case of the plaintiff here is this. He has got an agreement to sell, that the person who has got to sell denies that there is any mortgage on the property which is binding on it, and there is the second defendant who claims under a mortgage not executed by a stranger claiming a paramount title but by the predecessor in title of the first defendant. There is also an indemnity clause in the varthamanam letter saying that he should be indemnified against any loss he may sustain if rival claims were established. Now, the plaintiff naturally says "I am ready to pay money to the first defendant as I am bound to do under the contract. If there is any mortgage, I am entitled to see that the money is paid to the discharge of the mortgage, so as to give me a clear title. Therefore let that question be decided before the money is paid into Court." Clause 18 (c) of the Specific Relief Act says.—"Where the vendor professes to sell unencumbered property, but the property is mortgaged for an amount not exceeding the purchase-money, and the vendor has in fact only a right to redeem it, the purchaser may compel him to redeem the mortgage and to obtain a conveyance from the mortgagee." I see there is nothing either in justice or in equity to compel this to be done by a separate suit, and where the vendor says that there is no mortgage which he has to redeem and that the mortgage set up was a sham transaction, I see nothing to prevent that question being tried if the suit for specific performance itself by making the person who claims a title a party to that suit, where that party claims under a sale created by the vendor's predecessors-in-title. Having regard to these considerations it seems to me that, in cases like the present, the just and proper course will be to implead the person who claims to be a mortgagee and to adjudicate on all these questions in the suit itself so as to enable the purchaser to be free from all future risk and liability. Unless I am compelled to hold by any provisions of the C. P. C., or the Specific Relief Act that such a suit would be bad, I do not see why the most general principles as to not making persons not parties to a contract parties should stand in the way. There can be no objection to the general rule that persons who do not claim under the parties to a contract and are strangers to it should not be made parties. There is also the other rule that persons claiming adversely to both the parties to a suit for specific performance or for redemption of a mortgage ought not to be made parties. Applying these general principles to the facts of a case like the present it is difficult to see how it can be said that a person, who claims under a mortgage created by the predecessor-in title of the person who agrees to sell, claims an interest which is hostile to both parties or that he is a person who ought not to be joined under any provisions of the C. P. C. The Specific Relief Act makes ample provision for protection of the interests of the person who agrees to buy the property subject to encumbrances. Reference was made by the respondent to the case reported as Bugata Appala Naida v. Chengalvala Jogiraju (3). That was a case where a suit for specific performance was filed against a person who agreed to sell and against a mortgagee on a mortgage created by the person who contracted to sell the property. The mortgage was with possession. The learned Judges in that case stated that there was misjoinder as regards the mortgagee dealing with the disputes between the mortgagee and the mortgagor. They say "Further as the 1st defendant now disputes the validity of the mortgage, the amount due thereunder will be paid into Court by the plaintiff under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act, and if, within three months, the 1st defendant has not taken proceeding to set aside the mortgage and to establish his right to the money, it will be paid over to the mortgagees." But the learned Judges unfortunately failed to see that s. 83 would not cover a case like that, because the vendee (the plaintiff) could not pay the money into Court under that section as he had no right to redeem the property. With great respect, it seems to me that that remedy would not help the parties in this case, because they may be met by the objection that the money could not be paid into Court under s. 83. Cases have been referred by the respondents' Vakil which relate to paramount titles set up by a person not a party to the contract, for example, Howard v. Miller (4). That was clearly a case where the person claiming the property was not a party to the contract but a person who claimed adversely both to the vendor and to the vendee. The cases reported as Rangayya Reddi v. Subramanya Aiyar (5) and Ahmedbhai v. Dinshaw (6) are cases where joint family property was agreed to be sold, and it was held that the co-owners who disputed the validity of the transaction were not proper parties. The claim was by persons not parties to the contract but by persons who claimed adversely both to the person who contracted to sell and to the person who contracted to buy. I do not think that these cases afford much help in a case where there is a mortgage created by the predecessor-in-title, which mortgage is attacked, and there is a dispute between the vendor and the vendee as to the validity of that mortgage. It seems to me that considerations of justice and equity demand that in such a case there should be one suit filed to adjudicate all matters in dispute and, as I find no decided cases which actually decide the present question, I do not see why the suit as framed should not go on.

I reverse the order of the Subordinate Judge and direct that he proceed to try the suit as framed according to law. It will be open to him in the process of the suit to direct any monies which the parties are legally bound to pay to be paid into Court and to pass such orders as to taking security or on payment as he thinks fit.

Adoption is a contract under which a person takes another with certain objects and confers certain rights. Hence, to be able to adopt a person must be of age and able to contract. A minor is not, therefore, legally empowered to adopt any person.

Second appeal against the decree of the District Court, Henzada, in Civil Appeal No. 148 of 1923.

Mr. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. Kyaw Htoon, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case filed a suit for possession of two pieces of land belonging to his step-sister Ma Ngwe Bwin. The lands in question were in the possession of the maternal aunt of Ma Ngwe Bwin. She resisted the claim of the plaintiff on the ground that she had adopted Ma Ngwe Bwin when Ma Ngwe Bwin was seven months old, and that, therefore, she was entitled to these pieces of land as heir of Ma Ngwe Bwin, Ma Ngwe Bwin having died without any children or other direct heirs.

If Ma Ngwe Bwin had been adopted by the defendant, Ma Nyun, then it is admitted that Ma Nyun would be entitled to the estate of Ma Ngwe Bwin.

Both the lower Courts held that Ma Ngwe Bwin had been adopted by the defendant, and, therefore, dismissed the plaintiff's claim.

Ordinarily these findings would be binding on this Court as two concurrent judgments, but both Courts have overlooked the fact that, at the time of the alleged adoption, Ma Nyun was, according to her own statement, only 15 years old, living with her parents.

Ma Nyun's case is that it was then that she adopted Ma Ngwe Bwin with a view to inherit.

I am of opinion that a minor cannot adopt any person. To be able to adopt a person must be of age, and able to contract. Adoption, after all, is a contract under which a person takes another with certain objects, and confers certain rights, and I do not think that a minor is legally empowered to adopt any person.

No evidence of notoriety has been produced in this case. The only evidence regarding the adoption is the giving and taking of the child, who was at that time seven months old, by Ma Nyun, and the child's living with Ma Nyun together since. There is nothing extraordinary in a child living with an aunt and grand-mother on the death of her own mother.

There is also another fact which goes to show that there could not have been any adoption. It is admitted that Ma Ngwe Bwin inherited a quarter share of her father's estate on his death. It is impossible to believe that, if Ma Ngwe Bwin had been adopted, she would have been allowed to take a share in the natural father's estate.

Under these circumstances I must hold that Ma Nyun was incapable of adopting Ma Ngwe Bwin at the time, she says she did, and that Ma Ngwe Bwin had not any property by her.

I, therefore, set aside the decrees of both the Courts, and the plaintiff will get a decree for possession of 12.85 acres of paddy land as claimed in the plaint.

The defendants claim having spent some money for the funeral expenses of Ma Ngwe Bwin, and also claim that Ma Ngwe Bwin owed them some money. These claims of the defendants cannot be gone into in this suit, but must be tried in a separate suit. If the defendants have any such claim they are at liberty to file a suit for the recovery of it from the estate of Ma Ngwe Bwin.

The plaintiff has failed to prove that the defendant has received the rental of the paddy land, namely, 220 baskets of paddy, and that part of his claim will be dismissed. The plaintiff will get costs in all Courts.

JUDGMENT—The question in this appeal is whether the plaintiff's share was sold by the 6th defendant to the 1st defendant under sale-deeds Exs. VII and III. The contention of Mr. Somayya for the appellant is that the 6th defendant sold the property as his and that he did not sell the property as the manager of the joint Hindu family and, therefore, he could not have validly conveyed the share of the plaintiff. He places great reliance upon the evidence of P. W. No. 3, the son of the 1st defendant. In his evidence he stated that it was believed at the time of the sale that the plaintiff had been adopted into another family. From this the appellant wants us to infer that the 6th defendant sold only his share of the family property. The circumstances are these. The plaintiff and the 6th defendant are brothers. The property of the family was sold for paying off the debts of their father and in the documents there is no mention that the right of the 6th defendant alone was sold. No doubt there is no mention in it that the 1st defendant conveyed the properties under Exs. VII and III as managing member of the joint Hindu family. But the question is where the de facto manager of a joint Hindu family conveys the property without any reservation and without restricting the right conveyed to his own share, whether the Court should presume that the vendee contracted to buy and the vendor contracted to sell the interest of the whole family in the property. The proper presumption in such a case would be that where a vendee firm purchases property from a de facto manager of the joint Hindu family and there is nothing in the document to show that the manager conveys only his share or that he reserves the share of anybody from being conveyed, both the parties to the conveyance intended that the whole interest of the family should be conveyed by it. Here in this case there is an additional circumstance that the debt for which the sales were effected was a debt binding both upon the plaintiff and upon 6th defendant. The purpose being one which could bind both the plaintiff and the 6th defendant, the mere fact that the vendor did not describe himself as the managing member of the joint Hindu family is not a circumstance which should be taken as militating against the presumption that what the bona fide purchaser bought was the whole interest of the joint family in the property conveyed to him. Mr. Somayya places great reliance upon Balwant Singh v. Rev. Rockwell Clancy (1). The facts of that case are different from those of the present. In that case the vendor claimed the property as impartible property belonging to him alone. It was held that he could not have intended to convey the interest of the younger brother whose right he denied in the document itself. Their Lordships of the Privy Council found that the brother was a minor at the time and, therefore, his consent to the sale was of no avail to the vendee. They also found that the mortgage was not made by Sheoraj Singh as the manager of the

Here when the 6th defendant conveyed the property, he did not deny the right of the plaintiff, nor did he hold out that he was the only person interested in the property. The case in *Ammani Ammal v. Co-sharers—Nature of right in joint property—Sale of definite portion by one—Rights of others

So long as partition has not taken place, each co-sharer has a share in every fragment and portion of the joint holding and if his rights are infringed by his co-sharer alienating a definite portion of the joint holding, he is entitled to a decree for a declaration that he is joint owner of the portion alienated. Lachman Das v. Sunder Das, 124 P. R. 1879, referred to.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Lahore, dated the 5th January 1924, modifying that of the Sub-Judge, Third Class, Lahore, dated the 29th January 1923.

Lala Daulat Ram, for the Appellants.

Malik Mahomed Hussain, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Indar Singh, who owns half of a joint holding, executed a sale-deed conveying a definite portion of this undivided joint holding to his vendee Ganda Singh. The plaintiffs being the owners of the other half brought this suit for possession of one half of the area sold, and for a declaration that regarding the other half the alienation would not affect their reversionary rights. The suit was dismissed by the Trial Court, and on appeal the District Judge held that Rs. 100 only of the consideration money had passed, and was shown to have been for necessity, and agreed with the lower Court in holding that the suit by the co-sharers for possession of one half of the area sold did not lie and that their only remedy was for partition.

The plaintiffs have appealed from both points. As regards the item of Rs. 100, which is recited to have been required for the payment of an old mortgage, they challenge the truth of the allegation that there ever was a mortgage. It is shown by the Revenue Records that in 1897 a mutation was entered regarding a mortgage effected by the father of the present plaintiffs in favour of the present vendee, and that there was not a mere casual order is shown by the fact that whereas the father of the present plaintiffs purported to charge the share of his nephews also the mortgage was disallowed so far as those nephews were concerned. This creates a strong presumption as to the genuineness of the mortgage. Counsel points out that the special Kanungo speaks of the mortgage as of the year 1892, but it is not clear whether this was the same mortgage, or whether there has been some error in the description and the date given. He further relies on the fact that the sale deed mentions a deed, whereas the mortgage of 1897 was oral. I think this is all very immaterial, and find it is fully proved that a mortgage for a small sum was effected by the father of the plaintiffs and was a valid charge, and after this lapse of time it is impossible to effect any further proof of necessity beyond its execution.

As to the second point, Counsel relies on Lachman Das v. Sunder Des (1) and Counsel for the respondent has not been able to show any sort of authority against this clear and, I think, self evident exposition of the law. So long as partition has not taken place each co-sharer has a share in every fragment and portion of the joint holding, and if his rights are infringed by his co-sharer alienating or selling them, he is entitled to a decree at any time to the effect that he is a joint owner of any portion alienated, sold or charged. This is not the same thing as saying that he is entitled to physical possession of that portion without partition, but he is always entitled to his decree.

I, therefore, accept the appeal in so far only as to give the plaintiff a decree for joint possession of the land in suit, i.e., for half of the land in suit. Under the circumstances, I order that the parties bear their own costs. For the rest the appeal is dismissed.

Mr. M. Wasim, for the Appellant.

Mr. A. P. Sen, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bahraich in an execution case dismissing the appellant's objection to execution of a certain decree, dated 21st July 1922. The facts of the case are as follows: One Musammat Taluqdei was the donee under a deed of gift executed by Thakur Mandhatta Singh her father. The present appellant is the son of Mandhatta Singh. He brought a suit for a declaration that the deed of gift was void. That suit was compromised. The compromise was to the effect that the deed of gift should be declared invalid, but that Musammat Taluqdei should be given land amounting to 75 bighas out of the property comprised in the deed of gift, and also out of other property. The compromise provided for a Commissioner, one Babu Sheo Gopal, allocating specific plots to the lady. On this compromise being filed a preliminary decree was drawn up stating the terms of the compromise, and directing the person named to select the plots. After he had selected the plots, a further and final decree was passed awarding the lady Musammat Taluqdei the specific plots. The decree ran in the following terms:

"And in accordance with the conditions entered in the report of the Commissioner, the defendant No. 1 be given possession over these plots."

The lady put in an application for execution of this decree by delivery of possession. An ex parte order was passed directing that possession should be given to her and possession was in fact given to her. The present appellant was, however, given notice by the Court, and, in response to this notice, he appeared in Court and objected to the delivery of possession being given, on the ground that the decree should not have incorporated any order for the delivery of land not comprised in the deed of gift, which formed the subject-matter of the suit.

The Subordinate Judge has written a lengthy judgment considering the law upon the subject. We do not consider it necessary to refer to any decision except that of Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Midnapur Zemindari, Co. (1). On pages 497 and 496* their Lordships of the Privy Council drew attention to the terms of s. 375 of the C. P. C. (Act XIV of 1882) which have been replaced by O. XXIII, r. 3 (Act V of 1908). Their Lordships pointed out that it was not proper for a Court to allow the operative part of a decree to go beyond the actual subject-matter of the existing litigation, and they added that it might be that a decree which infringed this rule was incapable of being executed outside the lands of the suit.

We do not consider that this last remark throws any doubt on the well established view that parties in an execution case cannot call in question the validity of a decree as actually framed or impugn the jurisdiction of the Court that framed it.

An attempt has been made by the appellant's Counsel to construe the final decree of which execution has been allowed as merely a declaratory decree in regard to the land which was not comprised in the deed of gift called in question in the suit. The language, however, of this final decree appears to us to be plain, and to direct that possession should be given. It cannot be construed as merely declaring title on the basis of the compromise. It is not open to a party to an execution case to go behind the plain and obvious meaning of a decree.

For the above reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from an order of the Senior Sub-Judge, Sheikhpura, dated the 24th March 1924.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., for the Appellant.
Mr. Mukand Lal Puri, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The question in this appeal is whether the Senior Sub-Judge has passed a suitable and proper order under the circumstances of the particular case, which was before him. One Bantu minor claiming to be the fourth chela of one Nihal Das deceased and in virtue of an oral gift in his favour brought this suit against certain individuals and the Shromani Gurdwara Probhandak Committee for a declaration that he was entitled to a fourth share as the joint holding. By a separate application he prayed for an injunction restraining the defendant Committee from realising rents of the land in suit from the tenants. The findings of the Senior Sub-Judge were that at the time the suit was instituted, namely, 27th November 1922, the plaintiff was actually in possession through his tenants and this in spite of the fact that on the 24th of October 1922 the Collector had held that the Committee was in possession. The Court further held that subsequent to the institution of the suit, the defendant Committee had taken possession of a part of the land and that the tenants were willing to pay rent to either side if and when a decision were given by a competent authority as to who was the landlord. The Senior Sub-Judge held, therefore, that the suit for a declaration lay, and that on these facts the injunction prayed for should not be given but he ordered the defendant Committee to give security for Rs. 3,000, per annum apparently for an indefinite time and until the case was finally decided for the re-payment of any rents realised by them. He pointed out that difficulties must arise at the time of making recoveries that the plaintiff was a minor and the Committee was a registered body with no funded capital, but he passed this order as he stated that he apprehended that the grant of the injunction prayed for was likely to lead to the mismanagement of the property and other disputes. At the same time he passed a further order directing the plaintiff to give security for a sum of Rs. 1,500 for the costs of the case. No order was passed calling upon the defendant to give such security although the Sub-Judge held that the defendants had no property beyond the income derived from religious institutions which was spent on certain objects as soon as it was realised.

Counsel for the plaintiff appellant points out that under O XXV, r. 1. security could not be demanded from him, the plaintiff, as he has a residence in British India. This is so and I set aside so much of the order as refers to the plaintiff. So far as the defendant is concerned it is urged that because it is laid down in Bishun Prashad Pathak v. Sashi Bhusan Misra (1) that a temporary injunction should not be granted in a suit in which the ultimate result would not be the granting of a permanent injunction or in other words that because the same principles govern the granting of a temporary injunction as the granting of a permanent injunction it follows that a temporary injunction can never be granted in a suit for a declaration. This is going too far and in Kanshi Ram v. Sharf Din (2) a temporary injunction was so granted in a suit for a declaration. The defendant relies chiefly on the fact that mutation has been recorded in his favour but this, I think, goes for very little, if anything against the finding of the Sub-Judge that the plaintiff was in possession at the time of the institution of the suit and the conduct of the defendant in ousting him to the extent of collecting rents from his tenants shows that he is not entitled to any particular sympathy. This case has already lasted for two years and may be expected to last very much longer. A suggestion made that both parties should agree to pay all rents realised by them into Court. If the decision of the case is not acceptable to the defendant and under the circumstances it appears to me that the peculiar facts of this case do justify the granting of the injunction sought. I am not passing any order as to possession being given to the plaintiff by the defendant Committee, there is no question of physical possession by either party. The injunction I grant is to restrain the defendant Committee from realising any rents due from the tenants who are in cultivating possession of the land in suit.

I set aside both orders demanding security.

The costs of this appeal will be paid by the respondent Committee to the appellant.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXII, r. 9 (2)—Abatement, application to set aside—Delay—Sufficient cause—Appellate Court, interference.

Where on an application to set aside an abatement, the Court after a consideration of all the circumstances holds that the delay in making the application has not been satisfactorily accounted for and dismisses the application, the Appellate Court will not interfere with the order of dismissal.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, South Arcot, in I. A. No. 84 of 1922, in O. S. No. 11 of 1918, on the file of the Court of the Additional Temporary Subordinate Judge, Cuddalore (O. S. No. 10 of 1916 on the file of the District Court, South Arcot).

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. C. Padmanabha Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question in this appeal is whether the delay in presenting the application to the lower Court for setting aside the abatement should be excused or not. The appellant is the adopted son of the decree holder who died on the 30th January 1919. The decree was passed on the 12th November 1918. The appellant applied for execution of the decree on the 2nd November 1921. The District Judge held that there was no executable decree. Thereupon the appellant filed the present application out of which this appeal arises. His contention is that he was mistaken as regards the nature of the decree and he thought it was an executable decree and that was why he did not make the application before November 1921, for setting aside the abatement. He attained majority on the 4th June 1921.

From 4th June 1921 to 2nd November 1921 it does not appear that he consulted any Vakil and he was misled by reason of the advice given by the Vakil. It is suggested on behalf of the respondent that, inasmuch as the time for setting aside the abatement had long passed, the appellant wanted to try and induce the Court to hold that the decree was an executable one and when he found the Court would not uphold his contention, he filed this application. There may be some truth in this suggestion but we are not satisfied that the appellant has satisfactorily explained the delay of five months in presenting this application. The lower Court on a consideration of the circumstances has refused to excuse the delay in the case. We are not prepared to differ from the finding of the lower Court that the appellant has not sufficiently explained the delay. We, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

Custom—Alienation—Exchange Widow's powers—Suit for declaration challenging exchange—Second appeal—Certificate, whether necessary—Punjab Courts Act (VI of 1918), s. 41

In a suit for a declaration that an alienation effected by a widow is without necessity and will not affect the reversionary rights of the plaintiffs, a second appeal is competent without a certificate, as no question of existence or validity of a custom is involved therein, because admittedly a widow cannot effect an alienation except for necessity.

Customary prohibition against alienations by a widow is not confined to cases of sales and mortgages but applies to those of exchanges as well.

Sheikh Azim Ullah, for the Appellants.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a second appeal from the order of the lower Appellate Court dismissing the appellants' suit for a declaration that an exchange of certain land effected by Musammam Niamte, the widow of their collateral, should not affect their reversionary rights on the ground that the exchange had not resulted in any detriment to the estate. Counsel for the respondents raised a preliminary objection to the effect that no second appeal was competent in the absence of a certificate; but there is no question as to the existence or validity of any custom in this appeal. Admittedly a widow cannot effect an alienation except for necessity when the case is governed by custom. It is explained in previous rulings of this Court and the Chief Court. The land given in exchange was one plot near the village abadi, whereas that received in exchange consisted of three plots at some distance from the abadi, and, therefore, prima facie it appears that the land received in exchange is less valuable than that given. But even supposing that there was no detriment to the estate still the widow could only make an exchange of land for a necessary purpose. It was so pointed out in the case of Nihali v. Lehna (1),* where at page 5* the following passage occurs—

'It is also urged that the customary prohibition against alienations by a widow only applies to cases of sale and mortgage and not to cases of exchange, but no authority in support of this argument is quoted, and, in our opinion, it is necessity alone which can justify any sort of alienation by a widow. We are aware of no authority to the effect that a widow can make exchanges even for improvement. She is bound to preserve the estate, and it appears to us that to allow the proposition that she can effect exchanges for the mere purpose of improving it or getting a large income from it, would be to open the door to all sorts of rash speculations and enterprises which might prove highly injurious or inconvenient to the reversioners.'

No authority to the contrary has been cited by Counsel for the respondents. The mere fact that the two appellants' share in the land exchanged will only be very small does not appear to me to affect their rights in any way. Moreover, the other reversioners, who did not join in the suit and who have been made defendants pleaded that the exchange was detrimental to their rights.

I, therefore, accept the appeal, and setting aside the order of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Trial Court decree—

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s 53—Fraudulent preference—Intention of insolvent—Creditor's motive, whether material

In a case of fraudulent preference it is not necessary for the Official Receiver to make out that the property alienated was undervalued. The gist of fraudulent preference lies in preferring one creditor to another when the insolvent is unable to meet his liabilities fully.

In such a case the Official Receiver has only to make out the intention of the insolvent. The intention or motive of the creditor is immaterial. Even if the creditor takes a bona fide sale from the insolvent in discharge of a debt to him, that does not make the transaction a valid transaction if the intention or the view of the insolvent is to prefer that creditor to others.

Appeal against an order of the District Court, Guntur, dated the 19th April 1923, in I. A. No. 32 of 1922, in I. P. No. 59 of 1918.

Messrs. S. Varadachariar, K. Ramamurthy and K. Kameswara Rao, for the Appellant.

Mr. N. Rama Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal is against the order of the District Judge of Guntur setting aside the alienation in favour of the appellant made by the insolvent on 29th September 1918 under Ex. I. Mr. Varadachariar, for the appellants, contends that the sale is a bona fide sale for adequate consideration. The learned Judge has attached importance to the fact that the properties sold were undervalued. In a case of fraudulent preference it is not necessary for the Official Receiver to make out that the property alienated was undervalued. The gist of fraudulent preference lies in preferring one creditor to another when the insolvent is unable to meet his liabilities fully. In this case the creditor presented a petition to adjudicate the insolvent on the 19th December 1918 and on the 10th March 1919 the insolvent presented an application for being adjudicated an insolvent. It is also in evidence that the insolvent alienated almost all the properties in his possession between the date of Ex. I and the date on which the petition for adjudication was filed by the creditor. The appellant is a relation of the insolvent, his wife being the niece of the insolvent's wife, and, as the learned Judge remarks, there was no pressure by the appellant on the insolvent for the payment of his debt. The consideration for Ex. I is partly a debt due to the appellant and partly a debt due to the Bank which the appellant was asked to pay. As a considerable portion of the consideration was a debt due to the appellant, the sale to him of the insolvent's property was with a view to prefer him to other creditors. There is another circumstance which also goes to show that the sale was not a bona fide sale. The insolvent who sold his dwelling house to the appellant is now in possession of the same under a rental agreement, Ex IX, taken in the name of his son. A person in embarrassed circumstances, who has a number of liabilities to meet does not think of selling his dwelling house first unless it be to put it out of the reach of his creditors. The insolvent sold not only the dwelling house, but also about 21 acres of land and bricks about 50,000 and the standing crops which the learned Judge values at Rs. 750. All these are circumstances going to show that the object of the insolvent was only to prefer the appellant to other creditors. In cases of fraudulent preferences the Official Receiver has only to make out the intention of the insolvent. The intention or motive of the appellant is immaterial. Even if the creditor takes a bona fide sale from the insolvent in discharge of a debt to him, that does not make the transaction a valid transaction if the intention or the view of the insolvent is to prefer that creditor to others.

We agree with the learned Judge in holding that the transaction is void as being fraudulent and we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Under the Hindu Law an alienation of a minor's property by a de facto guardian may be valid, if it is otherwise justified. Where, however, a de facto guardian alienates the minor's property in the presence of a legal guardian, the Court must be satisfied that the legal guardian refused to act for the minor and to protect his interest, and that unless the de facto guardian acted for the minor irreparable loss to the minor would have been the result of the inaction of the legal guardian [p 723, col 2, p 729, col 1].

It is not for the person who challenges a sale on behalf of a minor to show that the price was inadequate, it is for the guardian to show that he made all possible endeavours to sell the property at a proper price and that the price which he obtained was the best possible procurable one [p 729, col 2].

In a case where the interest of the minor is concerned, the case ought not to be decided simply on the questions raised by the parties, but the Court has to satisfy itself, in the interest of the minor, that the sale was a proper sale and the Court must insist upon the purchaser to satisfy it that circumstances justifying a sale of the minor's property did really exist [ibid].

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bankura, dated the 10th of February 1923, reversing that of the Munsif, Second Court, Bishnupur, dated the 6th September 1922.

Mr. Mohendra Nath Roy and Babu Charu Chandra Ganguly, for the Appellants.

Babu Norendra Krishna Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit out of which this appeal by the principal defendants arises was brought by the plaintiff for a declaration that the lands in suit belonged to him and also for an injunction staying sale of the property in execution of a decree obtained by the defendants for money. The plaintiff alleged that the property in suit consisting of about 3 bighas belonged to one Baidya Nath, that Baidya Nath had borrowed Rs. 140 from the plaintiff by signing a hatchitta and that on Baidya Nath's death, plaintiff pressed for payment of the money due to him. The father of the widow of Baidya Nath, who was a minor acting as a de facto guardian of the widow arranged to pay Rs. 40 in cash and also executed a kobala for the disputed lands in favour of the plaintiff in satisfaction of the remaining Rs. 100 of the debt. The plaintiff further stated that he was in possession of the land in suit since the date of his kobala, that the defendants after the death of Baidya Nath instituted a suit for money in the Court of the Munsif of Bishnupur, that in execution of the decree obtained by them in that suit the lands covered by his kobala were attached and that on such attachment the plaintiff filed a claim in the execution case which, the plaintiff alleged, was not registered for reasons not known to him. The plaintiff, therefore, brought the present suit for the reliefs already stated.

The defendants resisted the plaintiff's claim and challenged the plaintiff's conveyance as a collusive sale without any consideration. The defendants further alleged that the main object of the transfer was to defraud the creditors of Baidya Nath, that the father of the widow of Baidya Nath was not her legal guardian and that there was no necessity for the sale of the property by the minor widow and, therefore, the sale was invalid and that the property as belonging to Baidya Nath was liable to satisfy the decree obtained by the defendants.

The learned Munsif raised several issues of which I shall mention only two :

Is the plaintiff's kobala valid, genuine and for consideration ?

Had minor's father any legal right to execute the kobala ? Is it valid in law ?

The learned Munsif recorded his findings on the first issue in these terms : "Considering the evidence on the record and the circumstances of this case, I am of opinion that the kobala was without consideration and a colourable transfer by which the plaintiff acquired no rights to the disputed land". In arriving at this conclusion the learned Munsif found that no consideration for the kobala did actually pass. The learned Munsif disbelieved the payment of Rs. 40 in cash and he also totally disbelieved the story of any debt due under the hatchitta which, he found, was not a genuine document. In considering the bona fides of the kobala the learned Munsif, to quote his own words, said as follows : "It is significant to note that the kobala, Ex. 2 was executed under somewhat strange circumstances—and I should say, with some undue haste. Baidya Nath died on 10th Pous. The stamp for the kobala was purchased on 16th Pous, 31st December 1920, and on the very date the kobala was executed. Defendants Nos. 1 and 2 instituted their suit on the 3rd January, 1921, and the kobala was registered on the 8th January, 1921. The attachment of the property was on 29th January, 1921".

"The kobala was, therefore, executed only 5 days after Baidya Nath's death even according to plaintiff's version. I find no explanation for this hurry especially when it appears that Baidya Nath left moveables of considerable value in his shop. Evidently Baidya Nath was a shop-keeper and had a good stock in his shop. Defendants have proved that these articles were sold soon after his death and this kobala was executed and also another arpannama was executed with respect to other properties of Baidya Nath. These circumstances lead me to think that Ex. 2 was a colourable deed".

The learned Munsif further found that the annual yield of this property was about Rs. 80 a year, and that Rs. 100 for which the plaintiff purchased the property was an inadequate value. The learned Munsif concluded by a finding that the kobala was really antedated.

As to the second point, the learned Munsif pointed out that although the father of the minor was not the legal guardian as the brother of Baidya Nath who was the legal guardian did not claim to be the guardian of defendant No. 3, the father although he had obtained no certificate of guardianship under the Guardians and Wards Act was a de facto guardian and as such he could legally execute a conveyance, subject to the restrictions which have been laid down in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooe Munraj Koonveree (1). On the findings which the learned Munsif had arrived at, he dismissed the plaintiff's suit without entering into the question as to whether there was justifying necessity for a conveyance on behalf of the minors.

On appeal by the plaintiff the learned District Judge has reversed the decree of the Munsif and granted a decree to the plaintiff. The learned District Judge, it appears to me, came to the following conclusions; first, that no adequate motive for collusion on the plaintiff's part with the father of the minor has been disclosed; secondly, that Baidya Nath was indebted to the plaintiff; thirdly, that the price paid for the property was not inadequate; fourthly, that Rs. 40 was paid in cash; that the kobala was a genuine transfer as between the plaintiff and the father of the minor on her behalf, although it may be that it was intended to give preference to the plaintiff over the other creditors of Baidya Nath. On these findings the learned District Judge as I have already stated reversed the decree of the learned Munsif and decreed the plaintiff's suit.

On behalf of the defendants-appellants Mr. Roy has contended, first, that the alienation by the father, while the legal guardian was the brother, was invalid; secondly, that the learned District Judge was in error in giving effect to a conveyance by a de facto guardian and was in error in doing so without finding that there was any pressure upon the property or that there was any legal necessity for the sale. It was further contended that the learned District Judge's finding that the value of the property was not inadequate was not sufficient in the absence of a finding that the property was sold for an adequate and full price for the benefit of the minors; and it was generally contended that the findings arrived at by the learned District Judge are not sufficient in law to justify the upholding of a sale of the immovable property by a de facto guardian of the minor, especially in view of some of the findings by the Trial Court were not interfered with in appeal.

As to the first point, the learned Advocate relied upon the passage in Trevelyan on Minority at page 93. He also quoted a passage from Macnaughten's Principles of Hindu Law. These authorities merely lay down that husband's heirs are the legal guardians of a minor widow and the father is not. No authority has, however, been cited to show that any alienation if otherwise good is invalid under Hindu Law, simply because the alienation was made by a de facto guardian and not by a guardian de jure. On the contrary there are authorities which show that an alienation by a de facto guardian may be valid if such an alienation is otherwise justified. But in a case like this it is the duty of the de facto guardian to satisfy the Court that the legal guardian refused to act for the minor and to protect her interest and that unless the de facto guardian acted for her, irreparable loss to the minor would have been the result of the inaction of the legal guardian. In this case Baidya Nath's brother was the legal guardian of the minor widow and was her next reversioner and he was the person most interested in the payment of Baidya Nath's debts. The plaintiff has not given any explanation as to why he approached the minor's father and not her brother-in-law.

As to the other questions raised by the appellants I shall deal with them together and not separately, as it appears to me that the objection really amounts to this. The findings of the learned District Judge are not sufficient for justifying a sale by a de facto guardian and that the learned District Judge has failed to appreciate the real points which arise in a case like this and consequently the learned District Judge has not considered them. The law as to the power of a guardian of a minor to alienate the property of his ward was clearly and definitely laid down by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in the case of Hunoomanpersaud Panday v. Babooee Munraj Koonweree (1). At page 423* their Lordships observed "The power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his own, is, under the Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power. It can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. But where, in a particular instance, the charge is one that a prudent owner would make, in order to benefit the estate, the bona fide lender is not affected by a precedent mismanagement of the estate. The actual pressure on the estate, the danger to be averted, or the benefit to be conferred upon it, in the particular instance, is the thing to be regarded". Now what are the circumstances of this case. Baidya Nath died on the 25th of January the plaintiff a creditor under a hatchitta executed by Baidya Nath pressed for payment of the money, according to the plaintiff, immediately after the death of Baidya Nath and the father of the minor forthwith agreed to execute this conveyance on behalf of the minor and sold 3 bighas of paddy lands belonging to the minor. The Munsif found (a finding not set aside by the learned District Judge) that Baidya Nath left considerable moveable properties. The learned District Judge does not consider what pressure was there upon the estate left by Baidya Nath to justify a sale of the immoveable property. It is not shown and in fact there was no time for it, that any attempt was made to pay off the debt by sale of the moveable properties. The onus of proof in a case like this is entirely upon the purchaser to justify the sale. Except proving that he had a claim for Rs. 140 and except showing that he, as a creditor of the dead man, threatened the minor with a litigation before even the period of mourning was over, what real necessity has the plaintiff established for the sale of this land. The guardian has given no explanation as to whether or not it was possible for him to pay this debt out of the moveable properties left by the deceased. We do not find any definite information as to what the value of the stock in the shop of Baidya Nath was; there is no finding as to what was the benefit which was conferred upon the minor by this sale in haste, nor do we find that the guardian made any attempt to find out if there was any other purchaser willing to pay a higher price. It is not for the person who challenges the sale on behalf of the minor to show that the price was inadequate, but it was for the guardian to show that he made all possible endeavours to sell the property at a proper price and that the price which he obtained was the best possible procurable one. In this case there was no time between the death of Baidya Nath and the date of the kobala for any such endeavour by the guardian. In a case where the interest of the minor is concerned, the case ought not to be decided simply on the questions raised by the parties, but the Court has to satisfy itself, in the interest of the minor, that the sale was a proper sale and the Court must insist upon the purchaser to satisfy it that circumstances justifying a sale of the minor's property did really exist. In my opinion the mere fact that there was a debt to be paid did not justify the guardian straight off to sell the immoveable property of the minor. The learned Vakil for the respondents relied upon the case of Adhar Chandra Dutt v. Kirtibash Bairagee (2). But the facts of this case are quite different. The sale was of property in which the minor owned a share in the joint property and the guardian transferred the minor's share along with the other co-sharers who were sui juris and who considered the sale was necessary and a proper one in the circumstances of the case.

*Page of 6 M. I. A.—[Ed.]

(2) 6 Ind. Cas 638, 12 C. L. J. 586.

It appears that the fourth issue raised by the Munsif, was "Had the minor's father any legal right to execute the kobala? Is it valid in law?" In the view that the learned Munsif took that there was no debt due to Baidya Nath and that the kobala was not a genuine document it was not necessary for him to go into this question. But the learned District Judge having overruled the Munsif on that finding ought to have tried this issue. Evidently the learned District Judge has overlooked it. I think, therefore, that the learned District Judge should try this issue.

It appears from the judgment of the learned Munsif that the defendants in their defence challenged the conveyance of 3 bighas of paddy lands for Rs. 140 on the ground that the price was grossly inadequate. The learned Munsif found that the annual yield of the land was Rs. 80 and, therefore, the alleged consideration was grossly inadequate. As I understand the finding of the learned District Judge he thinks, in spite of the admission of the plaintiff in possession, that the income was about Rs. 24 per year and that the price was not inadequate. Here also the learned District Judge missed the real point. It was for the plaintiff to show that the price was adequate and the best obtainable. Here the price was less than six times the income of this land. In Bengal so far as I know any price less than 20 times of the income would be inadequate. The plaintiff was to show that the price paid was fair considering the price prevalent in the neighbourhood.

On the whole, therefore, I think that the learned District Judge has not approached the case from a proper point of view and has misapprehended the real point for trial and has altogether omitted to try the main issue in the case. For the reasons given in my judgment, I think the judgment and decree of the learned District Judge should be discharged and the appeal should be re-heard in the light of the observations made in my judgment.

The appellants are entitled to the costs of this appeal and other costs will abide the result.

Order VII, r 1, C. P. C., requires that a plaintiff shall contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees. It is not contemplated that the subject-matter shall be given two values, one purely arbitrary and fanciful for the purposes of jurisdiction, and one in strict conformity to the real value for the purposes of Court-fees [p 731, col 1].

In either case the valuation should conform to reality. Therefore when a plaintiff contains a valuation for purposes of jurisdiction it is a natural assumption that the same valuation would apply, if it were necessary to have a valuation for an ad valorem Court-fee. [ibid.]

A suit for an injunction and the appointment of a Receiver falls within the purview of s 7 (iv) (c) of the Court Fees Act, and under s 8 of the Suits Valuation Act, the value of such a suit for purposes of Court fees and jurisdiction must be the same. [p 731, cols 1 & 2]

Where in such a suit the plaintiff does not state the valuation put by the plaintiff upon the relief sought, and there is no valuation for the purpose of computing ad valorem Court-fees, the value for the purposes of jurisdiction must also be taken to be the value for purposes of Court-fees [ibid.]

Petition under s. 115 of Act V of 1908 and s. 107 of the Government of India Act, to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in C. M. P. No. 741 of 1923 in O. S. No. 6 of 1923.

JUDGMENT.—Petition against the order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bezwada on C. M. P. No. 741 of 1923 in O. S. No. 6 of 1923. Petitioner filed a plaint valued for the purposes of jurisdiction at Rs. 10,000 and with a Court-fee of Rs. 100 on the assumption that he was at liberty to put his own value on the suit which was for the appointment of a Receiver, and for an injunction restraining the defendant a widow from wasting her estate. In the light of Nandan Mal v. Salig Ram (1) and Aruna- chalam Chetty v. Rangasawmy Pillai (2) the learned Subordinate Judge has held that plaintiff must pay an ad valorem fee and that is now admitted. The order concludes: "In the present case he has valued the suit at Rs. 10,000 for purposes of jurisdiction. So he cannot give another valuation for purposes of Court-fee". To this, petitioner objects urging that he is at liberty to give another value for purposes of Court fee. I see from C. M. C. No 942 of 1923 that the petitioner applied to amend his plaint and the Subordinate Judge ordered that he should first pay the Court-fee.

It is difficult to say that the order of the Court is ultra vires or that he has exercised his jurisdiction with material irregularity. Order VII, r. 1 (i) requires that a plaint shall contain a statement of the value of the subject-matter of the suit for the purposes of jurisdiction and of Court-fees. It is not contemplated that the subject-matter shall be given two values, one purely arbitrary and fanciful for the purposes of jurisdiction and one in strict conformity to the real value for the purposes of Court fees.

In either case the valuation should conform to reality. Therefore, when a plaint contains a valuation for purposes of jurisdiction it is a natural assumption that the same valuation would apply, if it were necessary to have a valuation for an ad valorem Court-fee.

The case cited by petitioner in Sailendranath Mitra v. Ramcharan Pal (3) is not quite in point. There, for purposes of jurisdiction the suit had been valued at Rs. 1,200 and the Court-fee leviable under s. 7, sub-s. (x) cl. (c), Court Fees Act, was on a value of Rs. 32. It was held that Rs. 32 and not Rs. 1,200 was the value for the purposes of jurisdiction. In the present suit the Court-fee leviable under s. 7, cl. (iv) (c) is according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued in the plaint. Plaintiff has not stated the amount, but as this value, whether determined for the computation of Court-fees, or whether for the purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same (see s. 8 Act VII of 1887), it is taken to be at Rs. 10,000 the amount which plaintiff has stated for the purposes of jurisdiction.

If the plaintiff had entered as his value for jurisdiction Rs. 10,000 and his value for ad valorem Court-fee, say Rs. 5,000 following the ruling in Sailendranath Mitra v. Ramcharan Pal (3) the Court, no doubt, would take Rs. 5,000 as the value for purposes of jurisdiction. But if the plaintiff enters as his value for jurisdiction Rs. 10,000 and owing to his misreading of the Court Fees Act omits an ad valorem valuation altogether considering that the two valuations must be the same, the Court is justified in assuming that Rs. 10,000 would also be the ad valorem valuation.

Nor does plaintiff really contest this position, his plea being merely one of fact, that he has made a gross blunder in giving Rs. 10,000 as his figure. If he had reckoned the valuation for jurisdiction more carefully and put it say at Rs. 5,000 or whatever he thinks fair he would have no objection at all to the Court's carrying that figure over to the valuation for Court-fees.

In the circumstances, I consider that the Subordinate Judge was acting within his discretion in asking petitioner to pay the Court-fee according to his own figure and then if he wished to correct any error in his plaint to proceed by way of amendment.

The petition is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff in this case, who is the Secretary of the Gurdwara Guru Tegh Bahadur at Anandpur, sues to recover the sum of Rs. 299 2 3 said to have been received by the 2nd defendant as an agent of the 1st defendant from the Nabha State as an offering for the shrine during the period from the 12th April 1913 to the 12th April 1918. The Trial Court dismissed the suit as barred by limitation under Art. 62 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, but the Additional Judge, on appeal, has held that the case is governed by Art. 89 and has remanded it for decision on the merits. The defendants had filed a second appeal.

Counsel for the respondent has taken a preliminary objection that the suit is a small cause of a less than Rs. 500 in value and, therefore, no second appeal lies. The suit, however, falls under Art. 18 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act as it relates to a trust, and also probably under Art. 35 (ii), so that it is an unclassified suit, and not a small cause, and a second appeal, therefore, lies.

The lower Appellate Court is wrong in applying to the case Art. 89 of the First Schedule to the Limitation Act, as there is no allegation by the plaintiff that either of the defendants was his agent. The question remains whether Art. 62 applies.

For the respondent Ramasami Naidu v. Muthusamia Pillai (1) is cited in which it was held that in an action for money had and received there must be privity of a legal recognizable nature between the plaintiff and the defendant. It appears that there is such privity existing in this case, as the defendants, according to the plaintiff, held the money in trust for the shrine. In Mahabir Prasad v. Parsandi (2) where rent of property was recovered by a person not entitled in law to recover it, it was held that he must be deemed to have realised the money for the real owner's use; and in Biman Chandra Dutta v. Promotho Nath Ghose (3) was held that the form of suit indicated by Art. 62 was applicable where the defendant had received money which in justice and equity belonged to the plaintiff under such circumstances as in law rendered the receipt of it a receipt by the defendant to the use of the plaintiff.

I agree, therefore, with the view of the Sub-Judge, that the suit is governed by Art. 62 and is consequently barred by limitation. I accept the appeal, reverse the decree of the Additional Judge, and restore that of the Sub-Judge dismissing the suit. The respondent will pay the appellant's costs throughout.

Estoppel—Compromise—Execution proceedings—Civi Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXI, rr. 89, 90.

A judgment-debtor filed an application under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C. for withholding confirmation of the sale in execution owing to certain irregularities. Subsequently he applied under r. 89 for leave to avoid the sale by deposit of 5 per cent. of the purchase-money. Both applications came for hearing on the same day, and the Pleader for the purchaser represented that the judgment-debtor could not maintain his second application unless he withdrew his first one. The judgment-debtor, thereupon, withdrew his application under r. 90 and his application under r. 89 was granted by the Court. [p. 733, cols. 1 & 2.]

It was urged by the purchaser in appeal that the application under r. 89, made in the presence of the application under r. 90, being void ab initio, the withdrawal of the application under r. 90 would only leave it open to the judgment-debtor to make a new application under r. 89. He could not by withdrawal of his application under r. 90 give retrospective validity to his application under r. 89.

Mr. Zahur Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Ram Bhroselal, R. N. Shukla, Raj Bahadur, M. Wasim and Mahesh Prasad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by an auction-purchaser, Chandoo, from an order of the lower Court allowing the judgment-debtor's application under O XXI, r. 89 of the C. P. C., to have the sale set aside on deposit by him of a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the purchase-money.

The facts of the case are as follows:—The decree in respect of which the sale, or alleged sale, took place is dated the 28th July 1919, and was a decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage. The preliminary decree was made absolute nearly two years later on the 22nd July 1921. The application for execution by sale was made by the decree holder on the 4th July 1923. The actual holding of the auction-sale continued from the 16th to the 25th February 1925. On the 9th of March 1925, Murli Dhar, a judgment-debtor by transfer of a portion of the interest of the original judgment-debtor filed an application under O. XXI, r. 90, that the sale was invalid owing to the property having been sold in one lot contrary to the orders of the Court, and owing to other irregularities. Five days later he added a further reason for withholding confirmation of the sale, that in fact no sale had taken place. The 28th of March 1925 was fixed for hearing this application under r. 90. Before that date arrived, namely, on the 24th March 1925, the judgment-debtor, Karim Bux, applied under r. 89 for leave to avoid the sale by deposit of 5 per cent of the purchase-money. On the 28th of March, both the application under r. 90 and that under r. 89 were put up before the Court, and the hearing in respect of them was adjourned to the 4th April. On that date, the parties appeared, one B. Ganga Dayal Khare appearing as Pleader for the purchaser, the present appellant. This Pleader represented that the judgment-debtor could not maintain his application for avoidance by deposit under r. 89 unless he withdrew his application under r. 90. The judgment-debtor Murli Dhar, thereupon, withdrew his application under r. 90 and his application under r. 89 was granted by the Court. It is against this order of the Court that the present appeal is preferred.

In this appeal the first point raised by the appellant purchaser is that he is not bound by anything stated to the Court on the 4th April by Ganga Dayal Khare, inasmuch as that Pleader had no authority from him to appear for him on that day, or make any representation. The argument is, that Ganga Dayal Khare was merely engaged on the 14th March 1925 to resist the application under r. 90, and that he had no authority to agree to the granting of the application under r. 89. We consider that there is no force in this objection. The vakalatnama of Ganga Dayal Khare shows that he was engaged for "dawa uzurdari ijrati digri", that is to say in respect of the objection of the execution of the decree. We consider that this language was quite wide enough to justify Ganga Dayal Khare in appearing, not only in connection with the application under r. 90, but also in connection with the application under r. 89. As both applications were heard together and on the same day, it would, as a matter of fact, have been impossible for him to appear in respect of one without appearing in the other.

The next ground raised by the appellant is that any admission or statement made by Ganga Dayal Khare on the 4th April was merely an expression of his opinion as to the law. That opinion, so far as it can be construed as an admission that the application under r. 89 was in order and valid, was incorrect, and a party cannot be bound by any admission of his Pleader as to law, inasmuch as the parties must be presumed to know what is correct law. Another objection taken is that no statement by Ganga Dayal Khare can be held to be an estoppel against the appellant, inasmuch as estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat any expressed provision of the law. It is urged that the application under r. 90 was void ab initio by reason of cl. (2) of r. 89, which enacts not merely that a person may not prosecute an application under r. 89 without withdrawing his previous application under r. 90, but provides that he may not make such an application. It is urged again that the application under r. 89 made on the 24th March 1925 having been invalid for this reason on that date, the withdrawal of the application under r. 90 would only leave it open to the judgment-debtor to make a new application under r. 89. He could not by withdrawal of his application under r. 90 give retrospective validity to his application under r. 89. On the 9th April the time had elapsed within which the judgment-debtor could make any application under r. 89. Now we are not disposed to deny the correctness of the two propositions of law, that an estoppel cannot be invoked to defeat an express provision of law, or that no compromise or agreement can prevent the law of limitation from taking effect. We are, however, of the opinion that neither of these propositions of law are relevant to the present case, in view of the construction which we place upon the lower Court's order of the 4th April 1925. That order runs as follows:—

"B. Parbhu Dayal, Pleader, states that the money deposited by the J. D. is sufficient, and that the deposit was made within time. B. Ganga Dayal Khare Pleader dittoes the statement of D. H.'s Pleader. He, however, urges that the J. D. cannot deposit the money, unless he withdraws his petition under O. XXI, r. 90, C. P. C. As he has already deposited the money so he cannot take advantage of the section. If he withdraws the petition under O. XXI, r. 90 he can take advantage of the deposit."

"Murli Dhar J. D. states that his petition under O. XXI, r. 90 may be dismissed under the circumstances."

"Murli Dhar J. D. has deposited the decretal amount plus 5 per cent. of the purchase-money in Court within the period prescribed by law under O. XXI, r. 89, C. P. C. The sale is, therefore, set aside. The surplus, if any, will be returned to the J. D. (i. e., Murli Dhar)".

It will be observed that the words "if he withdraws the petition under O. XXI, r. 90 he can take advantage of the deposit" are ambiguous, if we look at the circumstances of the case. When we consider that the two applications were up before the Court, these words leave it doubtful whether they should be construed to mean that the purchaser's Pleader was merely expressing an opinion on the law, or was in effect agreeing to withdraw objection of the application under r. 89, if the application under r. 90 dropped. As this ambiguity is a latent one, we are entitled to go to outside evidence to decide which meaning should be attached to the words. When we do so, we can have no doubt that the latter interpretation is the true one. An objection had been taken by the judgment-debtor and by would-be purchaser that there had in effect been no sale. When we look at the proceedings, there appears to be on the face of the record a strong probability that this was so. The nazir, who was the auctioneer, had reported on the 24th of February the two highest bids. The Court passed an order accepting the highest bid, whereas the proper order should have been that the nazir should make one last offer in open sale, and accept the highest bid if any better offer were given. It must have been observed to the appellant purchaser that he ran a great risk of the sale being declared invalid, in which case he would derive no advantage from the property having been knocked down to him at a low figure. By withdrawing opposition to the application under r. 89, he would at any rate get 5 per cent. of the purchase price tendered by him. It is to be observed that the order of the lower Court, which we have just quoted, does not contain any reference to the fact that the application under r. 89 was invalid in its inception by reason of the previous application under r. 90, nor does it contain any reference to the question of limitation. We, therefore, construe this order of the Judge to mean that the purchaser withdrew all contest, in other words confessed judgment in respect of the application under r. 89. So construed no legal question arose. It is incorrect to suggest that, where a compromise or confession of judgment prevents any consideration of legal bars, it is invalid on the ground that, if the legal question had been gone into, a legal bar would have been obvious.

Whether we are to regard the order of the lower Court in the light of an order recording a compromise under O. XXIII, r. 3, or merely as the recording of a statement of the purchaser, which would operate as an estoppel, appears to us of small moment. There does not appear any reason why it should not be regarded in the light of the former. Order XXXIII, r. 3 applies to suits, but under s. 141 of the Code the procedure applicable to suits, as far as it can, should be made applicable in miscellaneous proceedings.

Our finding then is that the appellant is not entitled to call in question the order of the lower Court allowing the respondents' application under r. 89 in the light of the statement of his Pleader made on the 4th April, which statement either amounted to a compromise in the proceedings or to an admission which would estop the applicant from questioning the validity of the Court's order.

For these reasons we dismiss this appeal with costs.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

CIVIL REVISION No. 173 OF 1925.

December 2, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.
CHANDRABHAGA BAI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPLICANTS
versus

BAKARAM—DEFENDANT—NON-APPLICANT.

Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887), 25—Order returning plaint—Title to immoveable property involved—Erroneous finding—Revision—Interference by High Court.

A High Court is entitled to interfere in revision under s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act with an order returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court.

Under this section the duty of the High Court is to see whether the particular decree or order complained of is according to law.

A Small Cause Court fails to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it in returning a plaint for presentation to the proper Court on the ground that the plaintiff's success or failure in the suit depended upon a question of proof or disproof of title to immoveable property, where the question of title does not really arise.

Application for revision of an order of the Judge, Small Cause Court, Nagpur, dated the 23rd April 1925, in Civil Suit No. 268 of 1925.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicants.

ORDER.—The plaintiff-applicant No. 1, the widow of Nago's case was that her husband had let the house in suit to the non-applicant Bakaram. The non-applicant's case was that Nago's aunt Musammam Mani was presumably the landlord. The lower Court, in view of this conflict, held that the question of relief in the suit depended on the proof or disproof of title to the immoveable property and accordingly returned the plaint to the plaintiff for submission to an ordinary Civil Court.

I think this action on the part of the Small Cause Court was quite premature until the Judge thereof had definitely adjudicated upon the question of who the non-applicant's lessor was. On that point there might have been at least two findings, if not more, viz, that Nago was the lessor or that Musammam Mani was the lessor. On either alternative an entirely different set of legal incidents would arise. If Nago was lessor, a presumption might arise under s 116 of the Indian Evidence Act. If Musammam Mani was the lessor, it is possible although not inevitable, that it might be found necessary to send the case to the ordinary Civil Court. Moreover, in this connection even if Musammam Mani was the actual owner but the lease had been taken actually from Nago and if possession had been given by him and rent paid to him, the question of whether the defendant was entitled to put forward the defence which she did in the present case, would still require consideration: cf., Meer Jangoo v. Chote Sahib (1) and Prabhat Chandra Chatterji v. Bijoy Chand Mahatap (2).

It is, however, urged on behalf of the non-applicant that even if the lower Court exercised a wrong discretion in returning the plaint as it did, this Court is not entitled to interfere on the revisional side. The decision in Subalram Dutt v. Jagadananda Majumdar (3) has been quoted in support of this position. Personally, with all respect I am not prepared to follow this decision. I prefer the view taken in the later case of Umesh Chandra Paladhi v. Rakhal Chandra Chatterjee (4). The other view seems to me to put an unnecessarily arbitrary meaning on the word "decided" in s 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. Even, however, apart from this the order of the Small Cause Court, of which revision is now sought, decides the case finally so far as that Court is concerned.

I may point out further here that under s. 25 the duty of this Court is to see whether the particular decree or order complained of was according to law. Now, if the Judge of the lower Court was wrong in holding that the plaintiff's success or failure in this suit depended upon a question of proof or disproof of title to immoveable property, it seems to me indubitably to follow that the Court failed to exercise a jurisdiction vested in it in returning the plaint as it did. From this point of view, therefore, the order cannot be said to be according to law. I am, therefore, of opinion that it is open to this Court to interfere in the circumstances of the present case.

(1) 8 Ind. Cas. 1124, 6 N. L. R. 161

(2) 75 Ind. Cas. 89, 50 C. 572, A. I. R. 1924 Cal. 84.

(4) 10 Ind. Cas. 8, 15 C. W. N. 666, 14 C. L. J. 118.

The order of the lower Court, dated 23rd April 1925, is accordingly reversed and the suit is remanded to that Court for disposal on the merits with advertence to the above.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 120—Suit for specific performance, dismissal of—Suit to recover loan—Limitation.

Defendant handed over a piece of land to the plaintiff as security for a loan, the agreement between the parties being that if the defendant failed to re-pay the loan within three years, the land would be conveyed to the plaintiff. Plaintiff continued in possession of the land and after the expiry of the three years filed a suit for specific performance of the agreement to convey, which was dismissed. He then brought a suit to recover the amount of the loan:

Held, that the suit was governed by Art. 120 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act, and that the cause of action arose when the suit for specific performance was dismissed.

Second appeal from a decree of the District Court, Payapon, in Civil Appeal No. 46 of 1924.

Mr. Ankelsaria, for the Appellants.

Mr. Ba Tin, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The point for determination in this case is whether the suit is barred by limitation.

This was a suit for the recovery of Rs. 1,188 from the defendants. The facts relevant to the present case are as follows: There was a sum of Rs. 1,188 due to the plaintiff for moneys advanced to the defendants from time to time. In 1916 the defendants purported to hand over a piece of land to the plaintiff as security for this loan, and the agreement between the parties was that if the defendants failed to re-pay the said sum within three years, the land would be conveyed to the plaintiff. The defendants failed to re-pay the money within three years, and the land remained in the possession of the plaintiff. In 1920 the present appellant filed a suit, being Suit No. 81, to recover possession of the land. It may be stated here that there was no document evidencing the mortgage of the land to the present plaintiff. The respondents also filed a suit, being Suit No. 116 of 1920 for specific performance of the agreement by which the defendants had agreed to convey the land to the plaintiff on their failure to redeem within three years. Both suits were heard together and ultimately the High Court in Special Second Civil Appeal No. 26 of 1922 decided that, as there was no document of mortgage, the present appellant was entitled to get back possession of the land because he was admittedly the original owner of the land, and dismissed the present plaintiff's suit. The respondents then filed the present suit for the recovery of this sum of Rs. 1,188.

The appellant's contention is that the suit is barred by limitation. His case is that as the cause of action for the recovery of the money arose in 1919, the three years had expired, and that the suit is, therefore, barred. His case is that Arts 62, 115 and 97 of the Limitation Act apply and that under any of these articles the suit is barred.

The respondent's contention is that either Art. 97 or Art. 120 applies to the facts of the case.

There can be no question that, if there is no specific Article of the Limitation Act applying to the facts of this case, the only Article that could apply would be Art. 120, and, if Art. 120 applies, it is admitted that the suit is within time. I am of opinion that Art. 120 applies to the facts of the case. Even if Art. 97 be held to apply I think the suit would still be within time because it is only after the decision of the High Court that the cause of action for the present suit can be said to arise. The judgment of the High Court was delivered on the 8th January 1923.

The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

CRIMINAL MISCELLANEOUS APPLICATION

No. 51 of 1925.

July 20, 1925.

Present.—Mr. Justice Rutledge, Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Brown.

T. F. R. McDONNELL—PETITIONER

EMPEROR—OPPOSITE PARTY

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), ss. 499, Except 9, 500—Defamation—Statement made by Advocate, whether privileged—Absolute privilege, doctrine of, whether applicable—Malice, proof of—Advocate, position and duties of

Section 499 of the Penal Code is meant to be universal and the English Law of absolute privilege does not apply in this country to statements of Advocates in judicial proceedings [p 738, col 2]

It is, however, for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an Advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the Presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client [p 739, col 2]

Exception 9 to s 499 of the Penal Code must, therefore, be interpreted accordingly, and it is the duty of a Court when a complaint is made against an Advocate or Legal Practitioner for defamation that it should presume that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith, and unless circumstances clearly show that it was made wantonly, or from malicious or private motives, the complaint should not be entertained [ibid]

Even if the circumstances suggest recklessness or malice, further enquiry should be made and an opportunity, if possible, should be given to a Legal Practitioner to offer an explanation before summons is issued against him [ibid]

Per Brown, J—A definite pronouncement of the Indian Legislature is not liable to be overridden by the provisions of the Common Law of England. [p 740, col. 1]

The law as to absolute privilege is not applicable to the Criminal Law of defamation in India. The Indian Penal Code is a complete Code in itself. It is to a large extent founded on the Common Law of England, but the ordinary criminal offences in this country are punishable, not because they would be offences under the English Common Law, but because they have been declared to be offences punishable under the Penal Code. Section 499 defines the criminal offence of defamation. The section is quite clearly wide enough in certain circumstances to make statements made by Advocates in the exercise of their profession amounting to criminal defamation punishable under s 500. There are a number of exceptions set forth in s 499, and any statement falling within those exceptions does not amount to criminal defamation. But any statement which does not fall within any of these exceptions, and which otherwise satisfies the terms of the general definition in the section is quite clearly declared by s 499 read with s. 500 to be punishable. [p. 739, col. 2, p. 740, col. 1]

If an Advocate is to carry out his duties to his client, he must frequently have to make imputations or statements, the correctness of which he has not had the time or opportunity to verify, and it is a very fair presumption in ordinary cases that a statement or imputation so made by an Advocate in the course of judicial proceedings is made, not for the purposes of defamation, but in good faith, for the protection of the interests of his client. In such a case, therefore, to establish an offence of criminal defamation it is necessary not only to show that a defamatory statement has been made, but that it has been made maliciously, wantonly, or with some improper motive. A Magistrate should refuse to take cognizance of a complaint in such a case unless there is some allegation of malice, wantonness or improper motive. [p 740, col 2]

Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, amicus curiæ, for Rangoon Bar Association.

JUDGMENT.

Rutledge, C. J.—This is an application by Mr. McDonnell to quash the criminal proceedings instituted on the complaint of Ponniah Pillay in the Court of the District Magistrate of Insein, or, in the alternative, to transfer the case for trial by the District Magistrate of Rangoon.

The facts of the case leading up to the present application are as follows:—

Mr. McDonnell, one of the leading Advocates of this Court, who has practised with repute and distinction in Rangoon for over twenty years, was engaged in the defence of one V. M. Abdul Rahman, who was being prosecuted last year before the District Magistrate of Insein. In the course of his address on the 8th of September 1924, at the close of the prosecution case, he asked that his client should be discharged, and was asked by the Magistrate: "Who is Ponniah Pillay?" Mr. McDonnell answered that his name was down on the C. I. D. records, and that he was employed by Cassims (the complainant). On a protest from Mr. Gaunt, Assistant Government Advocate, Mr. McDonnell reiterated the statement that he was employed by Cassims to help in their litigation work, and that, as he had already said, he was on the C. I. D. records.

Ponniah Pillay filed a complaint for defamation, under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, before the District Magistrate, Insein, through Mr. Patel, Advocate, on the 12th of September 1924, alleging, inter alia, that Mr. McDonnell had defamed the complainant by making the above-mentioned imputation intending to harm or having reason to know that such imputation would harm the complainant's reputation.

It may be noted that neither in his complaint, nor in his examination by the Magistrate did the complainant charge Mr. McDonnell with either malice or wanton recklessness. Mr. McDonnell has stated that his answer to the Magistrate was on written instructions, which he had no reason to disbelieve.

The Magistrate thought fit to issue summons, which owing to Mr. McDonnell's absence in Europe on leave, could not be served until last month.

For reasons, which will hereafter be given, I am of opinion, that the Magistrate should not have issued summons, and the proceedings will accordingly be quashed.

If the applicant had been satisfied to base his case upon the very extensive, but still qualified, privilege, which an Advocate enjoys under the Indian Penal Code, the question might be dealt with quite briefly. But Mr. McDonnell, not so much on behalf of himself as on behalf of the profession to which he belongs, and Mr. N. M. Cowasjee, whom we have heard as amicus curiæ on behalf of the Rangoon Bar Association, have asked us to concur in the decision of the Madras High Court and declare that any statement of an Advocate during the course of judicial proceedings is absolutely privileged. This was the position taken up by a Full Bench of that Court in the case of Sullivan v. Norton (1). The basis of that decision has been very fully stated in Potaraju Venkata Reddy v. Emperor (2), another Full Bench case of the same High Court. No doubt that was a case not of an Advocate, but of a witness. But the learned Judges came to the conclusion that it was not the intention of the Legislature, in enacting the Indian Penal Code, to exclude the application of the English doctrine of "absolute privilege" from the law of defamation in India.

Speaking personally, I should be glad if I had been able to find myself in agreement with the Madras decision, as I think that the legal profession might very well be left to the control not merely of the Judge before whom they plead, but also to the very real supervision and powers which this Court enjoys through the provisions of the Legal Practitioners Act and the Letters Patent. But I am unable to find any valid basis for the doctrine that the Legislature, in enacting the Indian Penal Code, intended to leave untouched the provisions of the English Common Law on the question of defamation.

It has been urged that, as s. 5 of the Indian Penal Code states: "Nothing in this Act is intended to repeal vary, suspend, or affect any of the provisions . . . of any special or local law"; and that, as the English Law with regard to defamation was in existence at the time of the passing of the Code in 1860, it comes under the head of special or local law. I am unable to accept this argument. As I understand it the types of law covered by this phrase are such as the Opium Act, or the Gambling Act, and not a vast system like the English Common Law. If the argument were well-founded, there would not seem to be any occasion for inserting s. 77, which gives protection to a Judge and which, though wide, is not quite absolute. If he were absolutely privileged by reason of the application of the English Common Law, it would be idle and confusing to insert in the Code the provisions of s. 77.

This argument has been dealt with and dismissed in the judgment of a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Satis Chandra Chakrabarti v. Ram Dayal De (3). No doubt this was a case of a party or witness, but on this particular point it is equally applicable to the case of an Advocate. There are decisions of Single Judges in this Province, viz., Mya Thi v. Henry Po Saw (4) and Meer Burks v. Maung Hla Pe (5) to the like effect.

I am consequently of opinion that s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code is meant to be universal in its application. That being so, the English Law of absolute privilege does not apply in this country to statements of Advocates in judicial proceedings. Nor do I think it is necessary that it should, if the position of an Advocate is clearly grasped by the various tribunals of this country.

In the words of Lord Brett, M. R., in Munster v. Lamb (6): "A Counsel's position is one of the utmost difficulty. He is not to speak of that which he knows; he is not called upon to consider whether the facts with which he is dealing are true or false. What he has to do, is to argue as best as he can, without degrading himself, in order to maintain the proposition which shall carry with it either the protection or the remedy which he desires for his client. If amidst the difficulties of his position he were to be called upon during the heat of his argument to consider whether what he says is true or false, whether what he says is relevant or irrelevant, he would have his mind so embarrassed that he could not do the duty which he is called upon to perform."

A Bench of the High Court of Bombay, in the case of Emperor v. Purshottamdas Ranchhoddas (7) observes: "Therefore when a Pleader is charged with defamation in respect of words spoken or written while performing his duty as a Pleader, the Court ought to presume good faith and not hold him criminally liable unless there is satisfactory evidence of actual malice and unless there is cogent proof that unfair advantage was taken of his position as Pleader for an indirect purpose."

I do not think I could get anything which more correctly summarizes the position than the following passage from the judgment of Imam and Chapman, JJ., in the case of Nikunja Behari Sen v. Harendra Chandra Sinha (8).

"In our opinion the Magistrate should have dismissed the complaint. It is not defamation to make an imputation on the character of another provided that the imputation be made in good faith for the protection of the interest of the person making it or of any other person (Indian Penal Code, s. 499, Exception 9). A Pleader is entitled to the presumption that the questions he asks in cross-examination are asked in good faith for the protection of the interest of his client. The presumption, therefore, is that a question asked in cross-examination making an imputation affords no ground for a criminal prosecution. To rebut this presumption it is not sufficient merely to allege that the client knew the imputation to be untrue for the duty of the Pleader is to present his clients' case. So far, at any rate, as the purposes of a prosecution for defamation are concerned, it would be wholly unreasonable to say that it is the duty of a Pleader to enquire whether his client's case is true or false. To rebut the presumption of good faith in such a case there must be convincing evidence that the Pleader was actuated by an improper motive personal to himself and not by a desire to protect or further the interests of his client in the cause. No such motive was suggested in the present case.

"The view which we have taken is supported by the case of Upendra Nath Bagchi v. Savi (9).

It is for the public good that a person charged with the responsibility of an Advocate should, so far as may be, feel unfettered by any control other than that of the Presiding Judge, in the use of every weapon placed at his disposal by the law for the defence of the liberty of his client. The provisions of the Exception 9 to s. 499 of the Indian Penal Code must be interpreted accordingly."

The learned Judges were, in that case, dealing with a question put in cross-examination, but it applies equally to an answer as in the present case made by an Advocate to a question from the Court, or, indeed, to any remarks made by an Advocate while addressing the Court.

It is the duty, therefore, of a Court when a complaint is made against an Advocate or Legal Practitioner for defamation that it should presume that the remark was made on instructions and in good faith; and unless circumstances clearly show that it was made wantonly, or from malicious or private motives, the complaint should not be entertained. I go further and say that even if the circumstances suggest recklessness or malice, further enquiry should be made and an opportunity, if possible, should be given to a Legal Practitioner to offer an explanation before summons is issued.

If Courts should entertain cases under s. 500 of the Indian Penal Code, as in this case, without any such safeguard, I agree with the petitioner and Mr. Cowasjee that the position of an Advocate in this country would become intolerable.

For the above reasons, I am of opinion that the proceedings must be quashed.

Brown, J.—I concur in the order proposed, and also in the finding that the law as to absolute privilege is not applicable to the Criminal Law of defamation in India. The Indian Penal Code is a complete Code in itself. It is to a large extent founded on the Common Law of England, but the ordinary criminal offences in this country are punishable, not because they would be offences under the English Common Law, but because they have been declared to be offences punishable under the Indian Penal Code. Section 499 defines the criminal offence of defamation. The section is quite clearly wide enough in certain circumstances to make statements made by Advocates in the exercise of their profession amounting to criminal defamation punishable under s. 500. There are a number of exceptions set forth in s. 499, and any statement falling within those exceptions does not amount to criminal defamation. But any statement which does not fall within any of these exceptions, and which otherwise satisfies the terms of the general definition in the section is quite clearly declared by s. 499 read with s. 500 to be punishable. Section 2 of the Code states that every person shall be liable to punishment under this Code. When the Legislature has thus in definite terms declared that a person shall be punishable, it seems to me to be idle to reply that it is highly desirable in the public interests that in certain circumstances that person should not be punishable, as that person would not be punishable under the Common Law of England. I know of no authority for the view that a definite pronouncement of the Indian Legislature in clear and unmistakable terms is liable to be overridden by the provisions of the Common Law of England. I agree with the learned Chief Justice in his interpretation of s. 5 of the Code, and it has not been suggested that any other portion of the Code is an authority for the special privilege claimed.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council held in the case of Baboo Gunesh Dutt Singh v. Mugneeram Chowdhry (10) that so far as witnesses are concerned the law of absolute privilege did apply in any action for civil damages. But there is no enactment by the Indian Legislature as to the circumstances in which a civil action for defamation would lie, and there is nothing to bar the application of the general principles of justice, equity and good conscience in such case. It is true that in the course of their judgment their Lordships remark: "The ground of it is this: that it concerns the public and the administration of justice that witnesses giving their evidence on oath in a Court of Justice should not have before their eyes the fear of being harassed by suits for damages; but that the only penalty which they should incur if they give evidence falsely should be indictment for perjury." These words may suggest that witnesses would not be liable on a criminal prosecution for defamation. But that was not the question before their Lordships for their decision, and I do not understand it to be suggested that their Lordships did really decide that point.

In my opinion the provisions of the Indian Penal Code on the point are perfectly clear, and the rule obtaining in England as to the absolute privilege of Advocates, witnesses and parties in judicial proceedings is not applicable to a criminal prosecution for defamation in India.

But I am in entire agreement with the learned Chief Justice as to the applicability of the provisions of the ninth Exception to s. 499 of the Code to the circumstances of the present case. It is quite obvious that if an Advocate is to carry out his duties to his client, he must frequently have to make imputations or statements, the correctness of which he has not had the time or opportunity to verify, and it is a very fair presumption in ordinary cases that a statement or imputation so made by an Advocate in the course of judicial proceedings is made, not for the purposes of defamation, but in good faith, for the protection of the interests of his client. In such a case, therefore, to establish an offence of criminal defamation it is necessary not only to show that a defamatory statement has been made, but that it has been made maliciously, wantonly, or with some improper motive. It follows that a Magistrate should refuse to take cognizance of a complaint in such a case unless there is some allegation of malice, wantonness or improper motive. No such allegation has been made in the present case either in the written complaint or in the statement made by the complainant when examined by the Magistrate under the provisions of s. 200 of the Cr. P. C.

The Magistrate should, therefore, have dismissed the complaint under the provisions of s. 203.

And it is obvious that if Advocates are to be liable to promiscuous prosecutions of this nature, even though the ultimate result of the prosecution may be an acquittal, their position will be an impossible one. The case is, therefore, one in which the interests of justice call for interference by this Court in revision.

I agree that the proceedings in this case must be quashed.

It is not probable that the owner and the mukhtar am came to know all the circumstances of the prosecution. In spite of this conviction a Constable again found the bullock being worked in a cart on the 3rd of April last while severely wounded. This time the driver was one Mania Singh who was prosecuted and a fine imposed on him. In the course of the trial the learned Magistrate came to know the names of the proprietor and his mukhtar-am and issued summonses to them. They have been convicted and sentenced by the same learned Magistrate.

The learned Sessions Judge has pointed out three irregularities in the trial of this case. For the purposes of this reference it is sufficient to consider only one of these. There was no formal complaint before the Magistrate nor was there any report in writing made by any Police Officer against the present accused within the meaning of sub-cl. (a) and (b) of s 190 (1). The taking of cognizance of the offence must, therefore, have been under sub-cl. (c) of that sub-section. The learned Magistrate in his explanation has suggested that inasmuch as Police Officers were examined as witnesses in the case against Mania Singh he received information from them and not from any person other than a Police Officer. But if the case did not fall under sub-cl. (a) and (b) of s. 190 (1) then it must be deemed that the Magistrate took cognizance of the offence upon his own knowledge or suspicion that such offence had been committed. In that case also the taking of cognizance of the offence would fall under sub-cl. (c). In this view s. 191 became applicable and it was the duty of the Magistrate to inform the accused that he was entitled to have the case tried by another Court. This admittedly was not done. Section 191 is imperative and it says that the accused shall before any evidence is taken be informed, etc. It has been held in several cases by this Court that a failure to inform the accused under s. 191 is not a mere irregularity which is cured by s. 537, but that it vitiates the trial. I may refer only to the cases of Emperor v. Chedi (1) and Chander Sen v. Emperor (2).

It has been pressed upon me that no re-trial should be ordered, but in view of the fact that there was a previous prosecution of the driver Ramdeo which resulted in his conviction, I am of opinion that a re-trial should take place. The convictions of the two accused and their sentences are accordingly set aside and the case is sent back

A security bond given in pursuance of an order binding over a person both under ss. 109 and 110, Cr. P. C., is not void [p. 743, col 1.]

Where a person who has been put on security for good behaviour is convicted of an offence involving a forfeiture of the surety bond, it is not incumbent upon the Magistrate who convicts him to pass an order of forfeiture of the bond there and then. Such an order may be passed at any subsequent time. [p. 743, col 2.]

JUDGMENT.

Kincaid, J. C.—The facts of this case are shortly as follows:—

A certain Ramji son of Kishnomal was bound over by the Court of the City Magistrate of Sukkur under ss. 109 and 110 of the Cr. P. C. to be of good behaviour for a period of 12 months and two persons Jeomal who was Ramji's brother and one Jaromal Gurditsing stood sureties for him in the sum of Rs. 200 each. The bond was executed by the principal and by the sureties on the 12th of November 1923. On the 9th of August 1924 that is before the period of 12 months had expired Ramji was convicted by the same learned City Magistrate under s. 380, Indian Penal Code and was ordered to undergo 12 months' rigorous imprisonment. On the 20th of January 1925 the learned Magistrate forfeited Ramji's bond for Rs. 200 and on the 27th of June 1925 he forfeited the bonds of the two sureties. Against this decision of the learned Magistrate the sureties appealed to the District Magistrate, Sukkur. On the 5th of August 1925 the learned District Magistrate confirmed the order of the City Magistrate. The sureties have now moved this Court to revise the District Magistrate's order on the 5th August 1925.

The main point raised by the learned Pleader for the applicants is that the order of forfeiture should have been passed at the same time as the order of the 9th of August 1924 by which the learned City Magistrate convicted Ramji under s. 380. The learned Pleader finds support in his argument in the Full Bench decision of the Punjab Chief Court, Emperor v. Mawaz (1). The learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court observed as follows:

"We think it is a legitimate inference that, if a Magistrate, who has knowledge of the fact that the person before him has, by his conduct, forfeited his bond, does not make any order for forfeiture, he must be taken to have decided not to take action on the bond in respect of that particular breach of the peace, and that he cannot thereafter reconsider and add to his order by directing forfeiture of the recognizance."

With the utmost deference to the learned Judges who delivered the judgment we find ourselves unable to agree with it. We notice moreover that the learned Judges themselves made the following admission:

"There is, it is true, nothing in s. 514 of the Code to debar a Magistrate, who has convicted a person of an offence which involves the forfeiture of the bond, from subsequently taking action against that person by forfeiting the bond in question, but, in our opinion, the spirit of the section is in favour of the view taken by Sir William Clark and by the Judges of the High Court of Calcutta in In re Ram Chundra Lalla (2) and In re Parbutti Churn Bose (3)."

We are most respectfully of the opinion that if there is nothing in the section to debar a Magistrate from taking a particular line of action it does not lie within the province of a superior Court to reverse his decision. We are supported in our view by the considered judgment of Mr. Justice Knox and Mr. Justice Aikman of the Allahabad High Court in the case of Emperor v. Raja Ram (4). Their Lordships referred to the two Calcutta rulings. In In re Ram Chunder Lalla (2) and In re Parbutti Churn Bose (3) but they went on to make the following remarks.

"In both these cases it was laid down that when the Magistrate deciding a case of an offence attended with violence is cognizant of the fact that the person convicted is under a recognizance to keep the peace, and does not proceed at once to take steps to forfeit the recognizance, he cannot do so subsequently. With all deference to the learned Judges who decided these cases we find ourselves unable to follow them. We find nothing in the language either of the Cr. P. C. of 1872 or in the wording of the present Code which lays down any such limitation".

The wording of s. 514 is indeed of the widest character. "Whenever it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court, etc."

The next point raised by the learned Pleader was that under the ruling, In re Rangasami Pillai (5) a person cannot be bound over both under ss. 109 and 110. That, no doubt, was the view of the learned Judges of the Madras High Court, nevertheless they did not hold that a bond under both ss. 109 and 110 was void. They merely set aside the order binding the persons concerned under s. 109 and they confirmed the order under s. 110. The matter, therefore, seems to us purely a technical one and in any case we are not dealing with the order but merely with the surety bond and its execution.

Lastly the learned Pleader has urged that we should reduce the amount which the learned Magistrate has sought to recover from the sureties. We, however, do not think that we should interfere with the learned Magistrate's discretion. This is not a case where the sureties have bound themselves to pay the principal's bond in case he makes default. The sureties here have bound themselves that the principal shall be of good behaviour for a period of 12 months. If during those 12 months the principal misbehaves himself and is convicted like Ramji was on the 6th of August 1924 we cannot see why his sureties should not forfeit the Rs. 200 each as they agreed to do when he was bound over on the 12th of November 1923.

We, therefore, reject this application and confirm the order of the learned City Magistrate.

Kennedy, A. J. C.—I agree. I am fortified, in my opinion, as to the time when the bond can be enforced by the consideration of cl. (7) of s. 514. If the bond is broken by the commission of a criminal offence by a person so bound cl. (7) provides that commission of that offence may be proved by a production of a certified copy of the judgment of the Court convicting him. If as laid down by the Punjab Chief Court it was the duty of the Court so convicting him to enforce the bond and if no other Court could do so cl. (7) would be meaningless.

As regards the question of limitation the man bound and his sureties contract that he will not commit an offence within the fixed time. If he does so commit an offence or cease to be of good behaviour then there is nothing in the Code to prevent the penalty being executable at any time. It would be preposterous to suppose that the principal and his sureties should go free because the principal commits some grave offence with such skill that he is not detected till after the period of the bond had elapsed yet that is the conclusion which necessarily follows if we accept the ingenious argument of the applicant's Pleader. It may be the hardship might possibly be caused by the exaction of stale claims against the subject but if that becomes the general practice no doubt the Legislature will interfere.

In the meanwhile I would dismiss this application.

Section 435, Cr. P. C., does not authorise a District Magistrate to make a reference to the High Court questioning the propriety of an order passed by a Sessions Judge. His proper course when he considers that action is necessary in such a case is to move the Government to file an application in revision.

Criminal Reference made by the District Magistrate, Bareilly, dated the 10th October 1925.

Mr. Saila Nath Mukerji, for the Opposite Parties.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Reference by the District Magistrate of Bareilly submitted through the Sessions Judge asking this Court to modify in revision an order passed by the Additional Sessions Judge in a case under s. 110 of the Cr. P. C. Section 435 does not authorise the District Magistrate to make any such reference. He can refer the proceedings of any inferior Court but he is not entitled to question the propriety of an order passed by a Court of Session. His proper course when he considers that action is necessary is to move the Government to file an application in revision. This has been pointed out many times by this Court and by other High Courts, e. g., Emperor v. Jamna Bai (1), Emperor v. Ganga (2) and Emperor v. John Francis Lobo (3). The reference is also made very late. The order complained of was passed on 22nd October 1924. The reference of the District Magistrate was not made till the 10th October 1925. The period for which the accused were originally bound over had already expired when the reference was made. The delay is not explained and would in itself be a sufficient ground for refusing to interfere.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 171—Factor, meaning of—Factor's lien.

The word "factor" in India as in England means an agent entrusted with the possession of goods for the purpose of selling them [for his principal. [p. 329, col 1]

A factor is entitled under s. 171 of the Contract Act to retain as security for a general balance of account, any goods bailed to him. [p. 745, cols. 1 & 2.]

Criminal Revision against an order of the District Magistrate, Partabgarh, dated the 12th November 1925, issuing notice to the applicant to show cause against his prosecution under ss. 183 and 186, Indian Penal Code.

Messrs. J. Jackson and Ram Prasad Varma, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.—This is an application by E. H. Parakh, proprietor of the firm Eduljee and Co., Motor Engineers and Coach-builders to set aside an order issued by the District Magistrate of Partabgarh directing him to show cause why he should not be prosecuted under the provisions of ss. 183 and 186 of the Indian Penal Code for offering resistance to the taking of property by the lawful authority of a public servant, and voluntarily obstructing a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. The facts are these: In the year 1922 Raja Amarpal Singh a taluqdar of the Partabgarh District entrusted the applicant's firm with a motor car of American make called a "Moon." Car apparently under verbal instructions for sale. The exact terms which governed the transaction will be found in a letter of the 18th April 1923 from the Raja to the firm which is as follows:—

"Dear Sirs,

As to the Moon Car I have placed with you for sale, please sell it at a figure between Rs. 8,000 and Rs. 9,000 and credit proceeds that you realise towards payment of Chevrolet Car account which has not yet been paid." I am informed by the learned Counsel for the applicant that the firm was unable to sell the car as at that time it was very difficult to sell a second hand car and as the Raja had placed a high reserve upon it. The car is said to have been worth about Rs. 12,000 when new and in these circumstances it would, of course, be difficult to sell it at a reserve of 2/3rds of its original cost. The car remained with the applicant's firm unsold till September of this year when the Court of Wards took over the management of the Raja's estate. On the 23rd September 1925 the Manager of the Court of Wards wrote to the applicant's firm stating that the Raja's affairs were now under their management, and asking whether the car in question had been repaired, and when it would be expected back. The Manager of the Court of Wards was clearly under a misapprehension in respect of the suggestion as to repairs, for the car had not been sent to the applicant's firm for repair but for the purpose of being sold. On the 30th September 1925 the applicant wrote to the Special Manager stating that the car had been placed with his firm for sale and enclosing a copy of the Raja's letter of the 18th April 1923. By this date the account in connection with the car amounted, according to the applicant, to Rs 1,008 13-0. On the 23rd October 1925 the Special Manager replied to the applicant directing him to submit his claim in accordance with the provisions of s. 17 of the Court of Wards Act. This section lays down that creditors of a ward must notify their claims in writing within six months of the date of notice of assumption of management. The applicant replied on the 26th October to the Special Manager that he considered that he had already notified his claim and he further said that he would not deliver the car until the account was paid. His refusal to deliver the car until the account was paid was clearly based upon a factor's lien under the provisions of s. 171 of the Indian Contract Act (IX of 1872). The word "factor" in India as in England means an agent entrusted with the possession of goods for the purpose of selling them for his principal. Before this letter of the 26th October 1925 had been received the Deputy Commissioner had sent a letter to the applicant dated 27th October which was in continuation of the letter of the 23rd October in which he said that the estate being in charge of the Court of Wards it was necessary to consider his claim in a judicial manner as laid down in the Court of Wards Act, and also stating that it was not open to the applicant to detain the car which he said he understood was being used by the applicant's firm for its own purposes. The letter concludes with the remark that if the car were not delivered immediately civil and criminal proceedings would be started against the applicant. As this letter from the Deputy Commissioner ignores the provisions of the Indian Contract Act upon the subject it is well to note what these provisions are. In s. 171 it is stated that factors may, in the absence of a contract to the contrary, retain as security for a general balance of account, any goods bailed to them. It was open to the Deputy Commissioner of Partabgarh, as it will be open to him still, to question the applicant's claim to retain the car as a factor until the balance of his account has been paid. But this letter does not question his claim, it ignores it. The applicant replied to this letter of the 27th upon the 29th and here he recorded his inability to deliver the car until his account was settled. He modified his position in the later part of his letter by stating that he did not want an immediate settlement but only a recognition that his charges were not excessive. He denied absolutely that he had used the car for his own purposes, and asked to be furnished with the name of the Deputy Commissioner's informant so that he might be able to deal with him. The next letter that I find is one from the Deputy Commissioner which although dated the 6th October was clearly sent on the 6th November. It apparently is a reply not to the letter of the 29th October but to the letter of the 26th October. It states that it is a reply to the letter of the 28th October. I cannot find that there was any letter of the 28th October. In this letter the Deputy Commissioner lays down his views as to what is the necessary amount of proof before the Court of Wards can, in his opinion, settle the debts of their wards, and indicated his intention of questioning the applicant's bill upon every item. Apparently after this letter was sent the applicant's letter of the 29th October was put up before the Court of Wards office for consideration. I find upon the file a Head Clerk's report of the 12th November 1925 suggesting that action should be taken against the applicant under s. 174 of the Indian Penal Code. This is a section under which a person can be prosecuted for non-attendance in obedience to an order from a public servant, and its applicability is not easily seen because at that period the applicant had never been ordered to attend anywhere. The Head Clerk's note was placed before the Special Manager who noted thereon "this is a very serious matter and means wilful disobedience to Court's order." The reference to the Court is presumably the Court of Wards. The Deputy Commissioner on the same date directed as District Magistrate a notice to issue to the applicant to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. The notice was issued and the 2nd December 1925 was fixed for proceedings. The applicant who is the Manager of a large business in Lucknow sent a Counsel to show cause why he should not be prosecuted. The Railway journey from Lucknow to Partabgarh takes about 3½ hours. The Deputy Commissioner as District Magistrate refused to listen to the Counsel passing the following order: "Application is rejected. The man must put in an appearance personally. I also notice that he has not yet complied with the orders issued to him to deliver the car. He is represented by Counsel, who has been directed to instruct his client to arrange for the delivery of the car at Partabgarh at once. I am refraining from issuing a warrant for his person as it is possible that he may have been under some delusion about his liability. His Counsel has been instructed to inform his client for personal appearance on the 8th at Baispur." Baispur, I am given to understand, is distant 20 miles by road from Partabgarh. At this period the applicant filed an application before this Court which directed stay of proceedings.

I do not express an opinion as to the amount which is due to the applicant in respect of the Moon Car, but there can be no doubt as to the fact that his plea that under a factor's lien he is entitled to retain the car until the general balance of his account is settled is a plea which cannot be ignored. In respect of the criminal charges which the Deputy Commissioner proposes to make against him it is sufficient to say that the applicant cannot possibly be considered to have offered any resistance to the taking of any property by the lawful authority of any public servant nor can he be considered to have voluntarily obstructed a public servant in the discharge of his public functions. I find it hard to understand how the District Magistrate was able to convince him that anything done by the applicant could possibly have rendered him liable to prosecution under the Criminal Law. I, therefore, quash the whole proceedings and direct the record to be returned.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 193—Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 195, 476—Perjury—Statement literally true—Complaint, whether should be made

A Court is not justified in making a complaint of perjury against a person in respect of a statement which is literally and strictly speaking true.

Criminal appeal from an order of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 7th August 1925.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellant.

Mr. D. R. Sawhney, Public Prosecutor, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from an order of the District Judge of Sialkot accepting an application under s. 476-A, Cr. P. C., for making a complaint against the appellant under s. 193, Indian Penal Code.

The facts are briefly as below:—

Two cross-cases between the same parties, one for a specified sum and the other for rendition of accounts, were pending in two different Courts:—Chaudhuri Chiragh Din appellant being the plaintiff in the former and defendant in the latter. In the case in which he was the defendant the plaintiffs offered to abide by his statement if made on the oath proposed by them. He agreed to make the statement on that oath and a Commissioner was appointed to record his statement after administering the oath. But he omitted to appear before the Commissioner and subsequently when questioned in the other Court whether he had agreed to make a statement on oath he stated that he had agreed to do so in that case only but not with regard to the one instituted by him. This was literally and strictly speaking true, but as the two cases were interdependent the decision in the one would have governed the other also. Such being the facts, the Court below was not justified in ordering prosecution of Chiragh Din for perjury. I, therefore, accept the appeal and direct the withdrawal of the complaint.

Penal Code (Act XLV of 1860), s. 405—Criminal breach of trust—Nominal sale of engine by person entrusted, whether amounts to offence.

Accused who was entrusted with an engine executed a nominal sale-deed therefor to a third person but the engine was not removed from its place and was still available to the true owner who suffered no loss by the sale.

Held, that on these facts a conviction of the accused for criminal breach of trust was not sustainable [p 748, col. 1.]

Petitions, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the judgment of the Court of the Sub-Divisional Magistrate, Cuddalore, in Criminal Appeal No. 66 of 1924, preferred against that of the Court of the Stationary Second Class Magistrate, Cuddalore, Taluk, in C. C. No. 108 of 1924.

Mr. V. L. Ethiraj, for the Petitioner.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—The petitioner has been fined Rs. 50 (Sub-Magistrate and Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Cuddalore, in C. C. No. 108 and C. A. No. 66 of 1924) for criminally misappropriating an agricultural engine valued at Rs. 2,000. Admittedly he borrowed this engine under Ex. A from his relation Muthuswami Reddi, P. W. No. 1, who says that he was looking after it for the real owner Muthuswami Reddi, P. W. No. 4. The petitioner says that he also had a lease of the engine from Muthuswami Reddi Ex. II, which the lower Appellate Court seems prepared to concede, para. 4. The alleged breach of trust was the sale of this engine by petitioner to his aunt, the wife of Muthuswami Reddi's brother, D. W. No. 1. This witness says that the engine is family property. He is disbelieved but unless the lower Courts accepted some theory of a family quarrel, it is difficult to understand why they inflicted such paltry sentences. The Sub-Magistrate fined the petitioner Rs. 100 which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate reduced to Rs. 50. If a man criminally misappropriates property of another worth Rs. 2,000 it is not an extenuating circumstance to plead that he and his victim are closely related; the extenuating circumstance would be that there has been no real misapplication.

This is the point taken in this petition. Petitioner was given domination over the property by Muthurama Reddi and it is urged he has not converted it to his own use, or disposed of it by selling it to his aunt, a mere paper transaction nor has he caused any wrongful loss to its owner Muthuveera Reddi for whom the engine is still available. No one complains that the aunt has suffered wrongful loss.

The question for determination may be pinned to illustration (b) of s. 405, Indian Penal Code. If A sells the furniture by a deed of sale to B but does not remove it, and if B makes no complaint, can Z complain that there has been criminal breach of trust.

How far wrongful loss or gain has resulted to A or B from the sale to B is not in question. Therefore it would not be a dishonest sale, unless it could be proved that A intended B to remove the furniture and so cause loss to Z. In the case of furniture it would not be difficult perhaps to prove such dishonesty; but it is more difficult in regard to an engine which no one moved or apparently intended to move from the place where Muthurama Reddi allowed the petitioner to put it.

Suppose that instead of an engine it had been land over which the petitioner had been given dominion and in respect of which he executed a sale-deed to a third person, would that be criminal breach of trust as defined by s. 405? Section 403 refers in terms to moveable property, and it has been ruled that s. 404 must be read with it as also limited to moveable property, Reg. v. Girdhar Dharamdas (1). In Jugdown Sinha v. Queen-Empress (2) it has been held that property referred to in s. 405 must as in s. 403 be moveable property and that, as it has been ruled in Reg. v. Girdhar Dharamdas (1) criminal breach of trust cannot be committed in respect of immoveable property. As matter of fact the Bombay ruling as I have shown above, makes no reference to criminal breach of trust, and the Calcutta ruling must, I think, be based on the general assumption that if a man cannot move a thing away, he cannot dishonestly convert it to his own use. In the majority of cases that assumption may be correct but the wording of s. 405 is very comprehensive and I think it dangerous to lay down any absolute rule. For the purpose of this case, it is sufficient to find that although the lower Courts have not said so in so many words the sentences inflicted show that they regarded the case as essentially civil in character, and, moreover, there is no clear proof of intention to cause wrongful loss either to Muthurama or to Muthuveera Reddi. In fact the lower Appellate Court has given no finding of dishonesty; it merely records that the petitioner disposed of the engine "in violation of the trust" obviously something more than breach of trust is necessary to bring the case within the purview of a Criminal Court. For the above reason, I set aside the conviction and order the fine to be refunded. No order under s. 577, Cr. P. C., is necessary in these circumstances and the propriety of that passed by the Sub-Divisional Magistrate (which I now cancel) need not be questioned. I would only observe that before passing it he would have been well-advised to give notice to the parties concerned.

(1) 6 B. H. O. R. Cr. 33.

(2) 23 C. 372; 12 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 248.

*Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), s. 350—
Transfer of case—De novo trial, what is—Procedure*

Where a case in which a charge has been framed is transferred to the Court of another Magistrate and under the proviso to s. 350 (1) of the Cr. P. C. the accused claims a de novo trial the Magistrate must re-commence the trial and not merely allow further cross-examination of the complainant and other prosecution witnesses and generally proceed with the case from the stage where the charge was framed.

Hnin Yin v. Than Pe, 44 Ind. Cas. 337; 9 L. B. R. 92; 19 Cr. L. J. 321; 11 Bur. L. T. 58, relied upon.

Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor, 12 C. W. N. 138; 6 Cr. L. J. 431, referred to.

Application, under s. 439, Cr. P. C., directing the Resident Magistrate, Kotri, to proceed with the case pending before him under s. 363, Penal Code, from the stage of charge.

Mr. T. V. Thadhani, for the Applicant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—In this revisional application the facts are that the applicant filed a complaint before the Sub-Divisional Magistrate of Kotri on which the Sub-Divisional Magistrate on 1st September 1924 issued process under s. 363, Indian Penal Code. Apparently after hearing the evidence for the prosecution, the Sub-Divisional Magistrate framed a charge against the accused in the case on the 1st of June 1925. On 16th June 1925 he transferred the case to the Resident Magistrate, Kotri, he being himself under orders of transfer. Before the Resident Magistrate, the accused in the case exercising the option given to them by the proviso to s. 350, Cr. P. C., claimed what is usually known as a de novo trial. The learned Resident Magistrate has acceded to their request and proposes to hold a de novo trial. Against this order, the applicant who is the complainant in the case, applies, in revision to this Court and the point made by his Counsel before us is that the learned Resident Magistrate has no right to re-examine and re-cross-examine the prosecution witnesses in the case; that under s. 350 all he can legally do is to allow further cross-examination of the complainant and the other prosecution witnesses, and generally to proceed with the case from the stage where the charge was framed.

Section 350 of the Cr. P. C. appears to us to be perfectly clear as to what the duties of a Magistrate are to whom a case has been transferred by another Magistrate who has heard it in part. Under cl. (1) of that section the Magistrate has a discretion to re-summon the witnesses and re-commence the inquiry or trial. If, however, he does not do so  suo motu, he is bound to do so if asked by the accused under proviso (a) to s. 350 which states "In any trial the accused may, when the Second Magistrate commences his proceedings, demand that the witnesses or any of them be re-summoned and re-heard." Whether, therefore, the Second Magistrate acts under sub s. (1) of s. 350 and exercises his discretion in allowing a de novo trial or whether the accused demands a de novo trial under the proviso it is clear that the Second Magistrate has to re-summon the witnesses and re-hear them. It is argued that the word "re-hear" is to be interpreted as equivalent to "hear further." We do not find anything in s. 350 to support such a contention.

Counsel for the applicant argued that the ruling reported as Tanguturi Sriramulu v. Nalam Krishna Row (1) supported his interpretation of the section. A perusal, however, of the ruling makes it clear that this is not so. All that is then decided is that the Second Magistrate cannot ignore the charge framed by his predecessor and that whatever order he passes after re-summoning and re-hearing the prosecution witnesses is an order of acquittal and not one of discharge.

On the other hand the case reported as Hnin Zin v. Than Pe (2) a decision of the Lower Burma Chief Court which followed the ruling of the Calcutta High Court in Sobh Nath Singh v. Emperor (3) is directly against the contention of Counsel for the applicant. In that case, a Magistrate after hearing the evidence of the prosecution had framed a charge. The case was then transferred to another Magistrate who re-summoned the witnesses for the prosecution, read over to them their previous depositions and allowed them to be further cross-examined. It was held that this was clearly no compliance with the law; that the right given to the accused by s. 350 was in order that he might have the very great benefit of the Magistrate having the witnesses examined and cross-examined in his presence so that he might see and note their demeanour and manner of giving evidence, and that when the accused claims a de novo trial the Magistrate must re-commence the trial.

We are of opinion that there is no substance in this revisional application which we, therefore, reject.

*Legal Practitioners Act (XVIII of 1879), s. 36,

dence*

Section 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act being drastic and somewhat exceptional, a great deal of care and caution is necessary before taking action under it and the person affected must be given full opportunity of producing defence evidence.

Petition for revision of an order of the District Magistrate, Gujrat, dated the 13th October 1924.

Mr. Anant Ram, for the Petitioners.

The Government Advocate, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—On the complaint of the Bar Association, Gujrat, the petitioners were called upon to show cause why their names should not be included in the list of touts. The petitioners filed written statements and in support of their defence they applied to the Court to summon a large number of witnesses out of whom only some were examined by the Court and the rest were not. Twenty-six witnesses were put down in the list of Abdul Hak petitioner out of whom only two were summoned and examined. Out of eighteen witnesses of Diwan Chand petitioner four only were summoned and examined. Seventeen witnesses were common to both the petitioners out of whom only seven were summoned and examined. As to the rest the Court probably acting under s. 257 of the Cr. P. C. held that as the petitioners intended to cause delay and vexation the summoning of all the witnesses was not necessary. After considering the case on the materials before it the Court declared the petitioners to be touts.

The provisions of s. 36 of the Legal Practitioners Act are somewhat exceptional and of a drastic nature, and a great deal of care and caution is necessary before action is taken against anybody. The petitioners complain that full opportunity was not given to them to meet the case for the prosecution. In my opinion there is force in this contention. I, therefore, accept this petition for revision and send this case back to the learned District Magistrate with the direction that it may be placed upon its original number, that the petitioners be given full opportunity to produce evidence and that the case should be decided after the consideration of their full defence.

Where a Sessions Judge in rejecting an application by the Public Prosecutor, under s. 494, Cr. P. C., to withdraw a case, exercises a judicial discretion in a proper way, the High Court will not interfere with his order in revision.

Petitions, under ss. 435 and 439 of the Cr. P. C., 1898, praying the High Court to revise the order of the Court of the Additional Sessions Judge, Coimbatore, dated the 26th June 1925, and made in Sessions Cases Nos. 51, 52 and 53 of 1925.

Dr. Swaminathan, for the Petitioners.

The Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

ORDER.—These are applications to revise the order of the Additional Sessions Judge of Coimbatore refusing permission to withdraw Sessions Cases Nos. 51, 52 and 53 of 1925. Dr. Swaminathan contends that the learned Judge has misdirected himself as to what he should do in a case of this kind. The application was made by the Public Prosecutor under s. 494 and he gave certain reasons for the withdrawal of the cases. The Sessions Judge has considered the reasons and has come to the conclusion that these cases were not fit cases for withdrawal. He relies upon the decision in Rajani Kanta Shaha v.

Idris Thakur (1), and says that where there is evidence against the accused which, if believed, would end in conviction, it would not be proper to give permission to withdraw a case under s. 494. But that is not the only reason which would guide a Court in granting or refusing permission. In this case the learned Additional Sessions Judge has exercised his discretion in refusing permission and we cannot say that he has improperly exercised his discretion. The reasons that he gives may not be the only reasons for an order of this kind but that is no ground for saying that he has not exercised a judicial discretion in granting or refusing permission to withdraw a case where a Judge has exercised judicial discretion in the proper way, the High Court will be very reluctant to interfere with his discretion and we, therefore, decline to interfere with his order. The petitions are dismissed.

Appeal against the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Hyderabad, (Sind), dated the 25th August 1925.

Mr. Motiram Idanmal, for the Appellant.

Mr. T. G. Elphinston, Public Prosecutor, for the Crown.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case have been dealt with exhaustively in the able judgment of the learned Additional Sessions Judge. They are shortly these:

The complainant Assanmal was going to Mehar village on the 1st of February 1925. He had taken with him his wife and his son, a little boy aged five. On the 2nd of February they were going through the jungle when they were stopped by a man who caught hold of the reins of their horse and robbed them of Rs. 12 in cash, a trunk, some clothes and some ornaments.

That night Assanmal took his wife and his son to a village called Razi Jatoli. There he informed the mukhi Duhladinomal, Bansimal a zemindar and one Umed Ali kamdar of Mahomed Khan not only that he had been robbed but that he had been robbed by the accused Nazar Shah. The next morning he went to Kazi Ahmed where he made a similar report to the mukhi Gianmal. The third day he went to Nawabshah reaching it in the evening. On the 4th day he told the story to mukhi Hotchand, who took him to the District Superintendent of Police, Nawabshah. The District Superintendent of Police recorded Assanmal's complaint (Ex. V) and forwarded it for investigation to the Sub-Inspector of Kazi Ahmed, Abdul Rehman (Ex. 14). Assanmal showed him the scene of the crime and the Sub-Inspector prepared a marshnama, recorded various statements and arrested Nazar Shah. The Police sent Nazar Shah to the First Class, Magistrate, who convicted him under s. 394 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to undergo 12 months' rigorous imprisonment. The learned Sessions Judge thinking that the offence was graver than that for which the accused had been tried ordered his committal. On the 25th of August 1925 he convicted Nazar Shah under s. 397 of the Indian Penal Code and sentenced him to undergo rigorous imprisonment for seven years.

Against this decision the present appeal has been filed. We have listened with great interest to the arguments advanced on the appellant's behalf by his Pleader, Mr. Motiram. We do not think, however, that on the facts it is possible to differ from the views of the learned Additional Sessions Judge and of the learned Magistrate, who held that it was Nazar Shah who robbed Assanmal. Enmity has been alleged but that has been very ably dealt with by the learned Additional Sessions Judge. As regards the late reporting of the crime, it must be borne in mind that the complainant had received a sharp blow from the handle of the axe and that both he and his wife must have suffered a severe shock, when robbed in broad day-light in the jungle.

The legal point pressed with great ability by the learned Pleader deserves more consideration. The learned Pleader's argument amounts to this. Although a hatchet is a deadly weapon, still it was not used as a deadly weapon by the appellant. He did not use the axe head but used the axe-handle. An axe handle is not, in any sense, a deadly weapon. Giving the matter our best consideration, we do not think that we can accept this argument. Had the axe-handle been separated from the axe head, it might have been said that it was not a deadly weapon. But the evidence is that it was an entire axe and an axe cannot be described in any other way than as a deadly weapon. The whole point has been amply and carefully considered by Mr. Justice Twomey in the case of Nga I v. Emperor (1). The learned Judge observed "It may be argued that to 'use' a stabbing weapon is to stab some person with it, to 'use' a cutting weapon is to cut some person with it, and to 'use' a gun is to shoot at some person with it

..... But it is not clear that the word 'uses' in s. 397 should be interpreted with such strictness. The very next s. 398 imposes a minimum punishment of seven years' imprisonment on persons convicted of merely carrying a deadly weapon when attempting to rob. It seems probable that the Legislature intended to impose the same minimum where the robbery is actually completed. I am inclined to think, therefore, that the word 'uses' in s. 397 should be construed in a wide sense so as to include not merely cutting, stabbing, shooting (as the case may be) but also carrying the weapon for the purpose of overawing the person robbed."

In this case, we have but little doubt that had Assanmal offered any serious resistance, Nazar Shah would have used the axe head and not the axe-handle. Overawed by the deadly weapon carried by Nazar Shah, Assanmal made no resistance, so Nazar Shah effected his purpose by a mere blow with the handle. Now, if the offence committed by Nazar Shah falls under s. 397, the Legislature requires his imprisonment for not less than seven years. This is the sentence which the learned Additional Sessions Judge has passed upon the appeal.

lant and it is not in our power to reduce it.

We, therefore, confirm the lower Court's finding and sentence and dismiss this appeal.

EMPEROR—RESPONDENT.

Criminal Procedure Code (Act V of 1898), ss 256, 342, 537—Examination of accused—Further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses—Omission to examine accused—Illegality

The examination of a witness cannot be regarded as completed until the last stage at which the law authorizes its continuance has been passed, that is to say, until any supplementary cross-examination which the Court may allow is over. So that under s. 342, Cr. P. C., an accused person has a right to be examined and to state his case after the further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, even though he has already been examined before the charge was framed and he was called on for his defence. This right is fundamental and an omission to so examine the accused is an illegality which vitiates the trial and not a mere error or irregularity which can be cured by s. 537 of the Code.

Criminal appeal from an order of the Second Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, in Cr. Reg. No. 312 of 1925.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant in this case was convicted by the Second Additional Magistrate, Rangoon, under s. 326, Indian Penal Code, of causing grievous hurt to one Ah Sein by stabbing him with a knife, and was sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment on the 15th May 1925.

It is contended on his behalf on appeal, firstly, that the trial is vitiated by the failure of the Magistrate to comply with the provisions of s. 342, Cr. P. C., and secondly, that the evidence generally does not warrant the conviction. Section 342 provides, amongst other things, that the Court shall, for the purpose of enabling the accused to explain any circumstances appearing in the evidence against him, question him generally on the case after the witnesses for the prosecution have been examined and before he is called on for his defence.

From the Magistrate's record it appears that the appellant was examined and questioned on the case on the 28th April and was charged and called on for his defence on the 2nd May. On the 13th May, however, he re-called for cross-examination the principal witness for the prosecution and was not further examined by the Court thereafter. This is the non-compliance with the provisions of s. 342, Cr. P. C., complained of. Those provisions are clearly obligatory; but the difficulty arises when read in conjunction with the provisions of s. 256, Cr. P. C., which provides for the recalling of witnesses for the prosecution by an accused for cross-examination and under which it has been held that it is discretionary with the Court to allow them to be recalled for that purpose at a later stage and at any period of the defence. As pointed out by Oldfield, J., in In re Madura Matha Vannian (1), the examination of a witness cannot be regarded as completed until the last stage at which the law authorizes its continuance has been passed, that is to say, until any supplementary cross-examination which the Court may allow. So that an accused person would have a right to be examined and to state his case after the further cross-examination of prosecution witnesses, even though he has already been examined before the charge was framed and he was called on for his defence. That is the conclusion come to by the learned Judge in that case, and he further points out that that right is fundamental and that the omission to so examine him cannot be regarded as a mere error or irregularity, which could be cured by s. 537, Cr. P. C. The same view has been adopted in Gulzari Lal v. Emperor (2), where it was held that the omission vitiated the conviction, and in Remembrancer of Legal Affairs, Bengal v. Satish Chandra Roy (2), where the Court came to a like conclusion.

For the reasons before appearing and upon these authorities it is clear that the appellant's conviction must be set aside. I am not prepared to hold, however, upon the evidence as it stands that there is no case against him as it is urged and I accordingly set aside his conviction and direct his re-trial. It would obviously be undesirable in view of this direction to discuss the criticisms that have been offered on the evidence. The re-trial should, of course, be before another Magistrate.

Prima facie a tenant, whatever his status as a tenant may be, i.e., whether he is an occupancy tenant or a tenant from year to year or a tenant-at-will, is entitled to the produce of the land included in the tenancy so long as the tenancy subsists [p 756, col 1]

The lands in a jaghir in certain hilly tracts in the South Arcot District were classified according as the cultivation was permanent or shifting. The revenue of the jaghir was not derived on any system of land assessment. The land which each cultivator cultivated from time to time was not measured and assessed to rent. The cultivators paid a plough tax, an impost of a fixed amount per plough being collected on the number of ploughs a man used. They also paid a poll tax levied on the individuals of the male sex. Each man cultivated where he liked and as much as he liked reclaiming the land by clearing the jungle and leaving it for a new plot when the fertility of the soil was exhausted.

Held, (1) that the revenue described as poll tax and plough tax must be regarded as rent and the relationship of landlord and tenant subsisted between the jaghir and the cultivators. [p 755, col 1]

(2) that in the absence of a custom to the contrary, the cultivators were entitled to the minor produce from the lands brought under actual cultivation and the fact that before cultivating new lands formal permission was taken from the jaghir made no difference [p. 756, cols 1 & 2]

Where a number of villages in hilly tracts were granted in inam and there was no evidence to show either that only the revenue of the hills was granted or that the grantee did not own the kudivaram.

JUDGMENT.

Ramesam, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit for the declaration of the plaintiffs' right to the whole minor produce in the villages of Pudur Jaghir, and for injunction and damages. The jaghir of Pudur otherwise known as Ariya Goundan Jaghir is one of the five estates situated in the Kalroyan Hills. The Hills are partly in the Salem District and partly in the South Arcot District. This suit jaghir also is partly in the South Arcot District and partly in the Salem District. The first defendant is the present *jaghir*dar or the proprietor of the estate. The plaintiff was the lessee for six years from the first defendant of the minor produce of the jaghir under a registered lease-deed, Ex-A dated 24th August 1908, which took effect from 10th July 1909 to 9th July 1915. The lease has since been extended under another deed dated 5th December 1918, Ex. B, for 25 years, i.e., from 9th July 1915 to 10th July 1920. Defendants Nos 6 to 63 are the cultivators of the entire lands in the jaghir. They claim a right to the minor produce and defendants Nos. 6 to 63 have entered into an agreement to sell it exclusively to the second defendant. The plaintiff alleges that the action of the defendants amounted to a denial of the plaintiff's right and caused damage to him and sues for the declaration and the other reliefs already mentioned. The first defendant, Polighar supports the plaintiff.

The lands in the jaghir are classified as (1) Olavakkadu that is, actually cultivated, permanently with ploughs; (2) Ponalkadu, i.e., lands under shifting cultivation, (3) Natham, i.e., house sites and backyards, (4) Alankadu, i.e., jungles. The suit was originally for a declaration of the plaintiff's right to the minor produce in all the lands of the jaghir and the defendants have similarly asserted their right to the minor produce in all the lands including even Alankadu. But in the course of the trial before the District Munsif, the defendants have given up their right to the lands comprised in the description Alankadu. Before us the plaintiff has given up the right claimed in respect of Natham, so that the dispute before us relates only to Olavakkadu and Ponalkadu lands. Both the District Munsif and the District Judge granted the declaration and injunction prayed for by the plaintiff. As to damages while the District Munsif gave a decree, the District Judge reversed it in appeal. In this second appeal the appellants are either defendants Nos. 3 to 63 or their legal representatives,

The revenue of the Polighar is not derived on any system of land assessment. The land which each cultivator cultivates from time to time is not measured and assessed to rent, nor is the value of the produce he raises computed and a share taken by the Polighar. The cultivators pay a plough tax, an impost of Rs. 1-4 0 per plough being collected on the number of ploughs a man uses. They also pay a poll tax levied on the individuals of the male sex. Married men pay Rs. 2 and bachelors annas 8. Each man cultivates where he likes and as much as he likes reclaiming the land by clearing away the jungle and leaving it for a new plot when the virgin fertility of the soil is exhausted. Land under such shifting cultivation is known as Ponalkadu. Near the village some more lands have come under permanent cultivation and these are called Olavakadu, the natural development of shifting cultivation.

The first point raised before us by the learned Vakil for the appellants is that the suit jaghir is an estate within the meaning of the Madras Estates Land Act of 1908. The District Munsif held that it is not an estate. On appeal the District Judge thought that it was unnecessary to give any definite finding on this point and he discusses the question of occupancy right on both alternative positions, i. e., whether the Estates Land Act applies or does not apply. An estate is defined in s. 3, cl. (2) of the Estates Land Act. As the suit jaghir is not a permanently settled estate or a temporarily settled zemindary, (or a sub-division of such an estate or zemindary) it does not fall under cls. (a) and (b). As it is not an unsettled jaghir, it does not fall under cl. (c). Therefore, it does not fall also under cl. (e). The only possible clause under which the suit estate could fall is cl. (d). Clause (d) runs thus:—

"Any village of which the land revenue alone has been granted in inam to a person not owning the kudivaram thereof, provided that the grant has been made, confirmed or recognised by the British Government, or any separated part of such village."

Here there is no grant of a single village but an estate consisting of several villages. The South Arcot Gazetteer says at page 30 that the Ariya Goundan Estate consists of fourteen villages. Assuming that the fact that the grant was of a number of villages and not of a single village does not stand in the way of their satisfying the definition in cl. (d), we have next to see whether the other parts of the clause are satisfied. The learned Vakil for the appellants points out that the suit estate is a jaghir. It has been so described in the Schedule to the Madras Impartible Estates Act both under the heading of South Arcot and the heading of Salem. He refers to the decision in Raghoji-rao Saheb v. Lakshmanrao Saheb (1), where their Lordships of the Privy Council say:

"The lands had been formerly jaghir. But this term implied no grant of the soil, but a personal grant only of the revenue to the grantee. The marathi equivalent to the term jaghir, namely, saranjam, came in course of time to be applied to the lands."

He also refers to Baden Powell and Logan's Salem Manual (II). The suit estate was enfranchised in 1866. (See Exs. C and D). Exhibit D is headed "account relating to the villages which have been assigned and are being enjoyed by Polighar, Ramappa Ariya Goundan." Column 3 refers to the 14 villages which are enjoyed in the hilly tracts. In col. 12 we have got "There are no documents of title." There is a footnote as follows:—

"As the said 14 villages are situate on the hills, they have never been surveyed and no thiva has been fixed". Exhibit C is the inam register and there is a footnote in it similar to that in Ex. D column 3 is headed "The annual income derived from the 14 villages in the hilly tracts of Kallakurichi Taluk". In col. 1 the plough tax and the poll tax are mentioned. In column 22 the entry is: "In the absence of any accounts showing the area of the villages and their assessment, the only course to adopt the revenue raised by the Polighar as the assessment on the villages."

These documents, Exs. C and D, do not refer to the suit estate as a jaghir, nor is there any trace in them of the fact that only the revenue of the hills was granted as inam to the original grantee. As the District Judge observes much reliance cannot be placed on a name especially where the earlier history of the jaghir is involved in considerable obscurity. The District Munsif thought that the original grantee was a bandit or a robber chief; but as already observed we have no information as to the origin of the estate except that Ariya Goundan held no karali under the Government, but he paid a small nazzar or peshkash of Rs. 37-5-2 which was probably imposed in consequence of his holding no office. On these facts I am unable to distinguish this case from the case in Suryanarayana v. Patana (2), and the entries in Exs C and D of this case from Oake's Inam Register of that case (see page 1020)*. If so all the 14 villages must be regarded as granted to the original grantee and cl. (d) becomes inapplicable. But assuming for a moment that the grant was of the revenue and not the villages, the next question is whether the grant was to a person "not owning the kuduvaram thereof". The burden of proving this is upon those who contend that the Estates Land Act is applicable. [Vide Nainapillai Marakayar v. Ramanathan Chettiar (3)]. There is no evidence in the case, nor can there be having regard to the history of the estate and the only information we have about the suit estate. In these circumstances it is difficult to hold that it has been proved that the suit estate is an estate to which the Estates Land Act applies.

The learned District Judge considered the question whether the defendants paid any rent to the jaghirdar and whether the relationship of landlord and tenant existed between the jaghirdar and the cultivating defendants; and he found that so far as Olavakadu lands were concerned there can be no occupancy right in them. As to Ponalkadu lands in connection with this point the defendants relied on two former judgments of this Court, Ex. XVI and XVIII. Exhibit XVIII was the only judgment considered by the District Judge. The District Judge after quoting the judgment of the High Court says, "The actual circumstances of those suits are not disclosed.....In any case it has no application here, where the poll-tax is not the equivalent of rent." Exhibit XVIII was a judgment in a batch of second appeals which arose in Salem District where a number of suits were filed for enforcing acceptance of pattas, the plaintiff being a mortgagee from Annamalai Goundan, the owner of Chinna Kalrayan Nad which is also one of the estates mentioned in the schedule to the Madras Impartible Estates Act under the heading of Salem. On a perusal of the South Arcot Gazetteer page 3, we find that the nature of the jaghir in South Arcot or Salem is practically the same. It is observed that "a great part of the Kalrayans is indeed situated within the Salem District and the boundary line between the latter and South Arcot passes along the top of them". Then the author gives the tradition of the five brothers dividing the hills among themselves, then he observes: "The south and south-western parts which happen to be the highest of the whole, were taken by Peria Kalvi Rayan and so were called after him the Periya Kalvi Rayan or Periya Kalrayan Hills, the lower slopes to the west of Salem, which chance to be the less elevated part, similarly became the Chinna Kalrayan Hills . . . . Ariya Goundan becoming the name of the northern part of the range."

Thus there is no doubt that the Chinna Kalrayan Hills and the suit jaghir were similar in tenure, and Ex. XVIII which related to the former shows that the High Court regarded the relationship between the cultivators and the jaghirdar as one of tenant and landlord. It is true that Ex. XVIII was passed in second appeal by a single Judge of this Court under O. XLI, r. 1. Benson, J., observes:

"I think the District Judge is right. The payments are evidently made as rent for the occupation of land calculated at so much per head, instead of so much per acre, which is the ordinary way in most cases. The second appeal is dismissed". That this is the true view of the revenue derived by the jaghirdar is also seen from the inam account, Ex. D and Register, Ex. C already referred to. In col. 3 of Ex. D we have. 'The tirra which is collected in respect of the punja land for 53 ploughs at Rs. 1-4-0 per plough is Rs. 66-4-0". Then the poll-tax is referred to per head and both the items are totalled as Rs. 209-4-0 and referred to as the revenue. Though the revenue is described as poll-tax, it must be regarded as rent, this method of assessment being found convenient by the cultivators and the jaghirdar. Exhibit XVI was not referred to by the District Judge but was referred to by the District Munsif. It is the judgment in Second Appeals Nos. 2033 of 1910 and 260 and 261 of 1911. The suit was by the assignee of the Poligar for the enforcement of patta with certain restrictions relating to the cutting of trees and related also to the Chinna Kalrayan Hills. This judgment also leads to the same conclusion as Ex. XVIII. In the face of Exs. XVI and XVIII it is difficult to say that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between the Poligar and the defendants and the District Judge is wrong in saying that "the ruling has no application where the poll tax is not the equivalent of rent." He has started with the assumption that the poll tax is not the equivalent of rent, and having said this, was of opinion that Ex. XVIII has no application to the present case; but Ex. XVIII shows that the poll-tax should be regarded as the equivalent of rent. Thus his judgment is vitiated by his misconstruction of Ex. XVIII.

We, therefore, start with the footing that the defendants are the tenants of the jaghir-dar and we have to consider the question of right to the minor produce from this footing. The lower Appellate Court found on a discussion of the oral and documentary evidence that the Poligar is entitled to all the minor produce in the Palayam. In the form in which the Courts below discussed the question no doubt it is a question of fact; and if we are not satisfied with the findings of the lower Appellate Court we can only call for fresh findings. But as I have already pointed out the findings are vitiated by the conclusion of the Courts below that there is no relationship of landlord and tenant between the Poligar and the cultivators. I have come to the conclusion that there is such a relationship and starting from that footing, if there is any question of fact to be found we have to call for a finding. But it seems to me that what remains is a pure question of law. Prima facie a tenant, whatever his status as a tenant may be, i. e., whether he is an occupancy tenant or a tenant from year to year or a tenant-at-will, is entitled to the produce of the land, included in the tenancy so long as the tenancy subsists. This is too elementary to need discussion. It is difficult to conceive what a tenancy is for, if the tenant is not to be entitled to the produce of the land. We are not concerned here with the right to cut trees, as to which the question may be a little more difficult. The suit before us relates only to the minor produce, viz., Murabolams, Muradu, Pungan seed, Nux Vomica, Takarai seed, Seeran seed, Poochan seed, Konnai bark, Honey, Honey Wax, Sombai bark, Kapilipodi, Sural bark. In the case of such produce which can be gathered from land, prima facie the tenant is entitled to it. Is there any reason why in this particular case the cultivating tenants are not entitled to it? If any question of usage or custom can arise in this case, it is the plaintiff who claims to be the lessee from the Poligar that has to show such usage or custom by which he and not the cultivating tenants are entitled to the minor produce of the land actually under the tenant. The District Munsif found that under the custom prevailing in the jaghir the first defendant is entitled to the minor hill produce. The District Judge also gave a similar finding. The fact, that before cultivating the Ponalkadu land formal permission of the jaghir-dar is taken proves nothing, nor is there any question of acquiring prescriptive rights. Both the District Munsif and the District Judge rely on certain leases of certain minor produce. The District Munsif relied upon Exs. P and S which are dated 1866 and 1872 for the purpose of making out a usage extending over a considerable period of time. But these documents, Exs. P and S, are so perfectly general that it is impossible to infer any right to minor produce from them. Exhibit P is a lease for cutting teak wood, spokes for wheels and for felling Vengai and other trees produced within certain boundaries. It makes no reference to the minor produce at all. Similarly Ex. S refers to all kinds of trees inclusive of those of Galnut, Sural, save those of jack fruit and tamarind as grown on "Pendakarainadu". Here again there is no specific reference to the minor produce. It is very difficult to see how these documents militate against the tenants' right to the minor produce. If these two are excluded, the documents relating to minor produce begin from Ex. Y dated 1890. But it is impossible to make out from the documents beginning from 1890 and ending with 1904 that an ancient, valid and binding usage is proved. We have got only four documents, Exs. Y, Y1 and M and N. Even these documents are general as to the area of the land covered by them. For instance Ex. Y refers to the produce in certain villages in Irugarainadu of Jagirmalai in Puduralailka. Particulars of villages are given; about 21 villages are enumerated. But it is possible that the minor produce covered by the lease related only to Alankadu i. e., the hills and the jungle outside the cultivated land (Olavakadu and Ponalkadu). Alankadu is so much more in extent than the cultivated land that it is scarcely worthwhile to specially mention Olavakadu and Ponalkadu for the purpose of exclusion. At any rate a document like this does not bind the cultivating tenant, nor can it prove who took the produce of the lands under an individual tenant. Similar remarks apply to Y(1), M and N. The oral evidence is useless as it was adduced to prove enjoyment in accordance with the documents. I have, therefore, come to the conclusion that it is impossible to find in the evidence any usage by which the ordinary presumption of law entitling the tenant to enjoy the produce of his own land was displaced and the Poligar first defendant became entitled to collect all the minor produce even in lands under the tenants. Of course when I say that the tenants are actually entitled to minor produce on Ponalkadu, I refer to land which was actually under the cultivation of a tenant and therefore, which has not been abandoned. The moment a Ponalkadu land is abandoned, it is absorbed into the general Alankadu.

For all the above reasons, the plaintiff is not entitled to the declaration of his rights to the minor produce of Olavakadu lands and Ponalkadu lands during the time they retain that character. The plaintiff has given up his right to Natham. He is entitled only to a declaration in respect of the produce of Alankadu.

The decree in favour of the plaintiff will, therefore, be modified accordingly. The plaintiff will bear the costs of the appellants here and in the lower Appellate Court. In the first Court each party will bear their own costs as they put forward extravagant claims which they afterwards had to modify.

Phillips, J.—I agree with the order proposed by my learned brother but I prefer to reserve my opinion on the question whether the suit jaghir is or is not an estate within the meaning of the Estates Land Act, as its determination is not necessary for the decision of this appeal which is based on the ordinary law of landlord and tenant.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL No. 12 OF 1924.

December 10, 1925.

Pre-emption—Vendor, title of, assertion of—Vendor not in possession at time of sale—Sale, what amounts to—Conveyance in consideration of price and promise to do certain things, whether sale—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), s 54

In order to succeed in a suit for pre-emption, the pre-emptor must assert title in the vendor, and the fact that there was a conveyance by the vendor to the vendee which amounted to a sale. The vendee qua vendee and as against the pre-emptor is estopped from denying the title of his vendor, and so, for the purposes of a pre-emption suit, the title must be assumed to exist in the vendor, if it is alleged by the pre-emptor to exist [p 758, cols. 1 & 2]

The deed of conveyance, however, must clearly profess to sell the property, and not merely be a promise to sell the property in the future. It makes no difference whether the vendor was out of possession or in possession at the date of the sale, nor does it make any difference whether there was a small or large chance of his getting his title acknowledged in Court [p 758, col 2]

In order, however, that a transaction should amount to a sale it is necessary that there should be a price paid or promised or part paid and part promised, which means that the price must be stated in or ascertainable at the time of the deed [ibid]

A conveyance in consideration of a price and also a promise to do certain things, the doing of which will cost an indefinite sum of money, is not a sale [p 759, col 1]

Appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Sultanpur, dated the 22nd October 1923

Mr H Husain, for the Appellants.

Mr A. P. Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This first appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs-appellants for pre-emption on the basis of a sale-deed dated 18th January 1922, Ex. 1, executed by Musammam Jagwanta Kuar, widow of Parag Singh, in favour of defendants respondents Nos. 2 to 6. This sale-deed sets forth that the vendor was entitled to the property of her husband, Parag Singh, but that two persons, Kelka Singh and Mahadeo Singh, had fraudulently obtained from the widow an agreement allowing the greater part of her husband's estate to be entered in their names in the village papers, only a small portion being entered in the widow's name. It goes on to say that she wanted to get this agreement set aside but had not the funds. She, therefore, sold nine-tenths of her interest in the property of her husband to the defendants-vendees, who were to bear all the expenses of the litigation required to set aside the agreement. The lower Court held that this did not amount to a sale of interest in the property, but merely to a sale of her chances of success in a law suit, and on the authority of Privy Council cases, Ranee Bhobosonduree Dossee v. Issur Chunder Dutt (1) and Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (2), held that in such circumstances, the sale-deed gave the plaintiffs-appellants no right of pre-emption. It may be mentioned that the plaintiff-appellant, Bhagwan Bux Singh, is a son Mahadeo Singh, one of the persons in whose favour the agreement mentioned above had been made by the widow.

The appellants rely upon two decisions of a Single Judge [Mr. S. R. Daniels of the Judicial Commissioner's Court, Balwant Singh v. Lallu Ram (3) and Gajadhar Prasad v. Manra Khan (4)]. In these two cases it was held that a right of pre-emption may arise in cases in which the vendor is out of possession, and litigation is necessary to recover possession of the property, provided that the sale is a genuine sale of the property and not a mere sale of a share in a law suit. The respondents, on the other hand, rely upon the case Mirza Mohammad Abbas Ali Khan Bahadur v. A. Quieros (5), where it was held that pre-emption would not arise where the property sold was not in the possession of the vendor at the time, and the vendor had only a doubtful right to recover it. This case also was based on the contingent nature of the purchase price paid. It purported to be based on the Privy Council case of Abdul Wahid Khan v. Shaluka Bibi (2).

In order to succeed in a case of pre-emption, there can be no doubt that the pre-emptor must assert title in the vendor, and the fact that there was a conveyance by the vendor to the vendee which amounted to a sale (or a foreclosure on a mortgage). In the Privy Council case the pre-emptor denied at the outset the title of the vendor, and consequently their Lordships held that there could be no sale on the plaintiff's own admission, because according to the plaintiff-pre-emptor's own case, the vendor was not selling a right in the property, but merely a share in a law suit. The decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council must not be construed, as it appears to have been construed by one of the Judges in the case, Mirza Mohammad Abbas Ali Khan Bahadur v. A. Quieros (5), as meaning that, whenever the title of the vendor was in doubt, the sale should be considered a sale of a share in a law suit and not a sale of property. Again the deed of conveyance, must clearly profess to sell the property, and not merely be a promise to sell the property in the future. [See Ranee Bhobosonduree Dossee v. Issur Chunder Dutt (1)]. We agree with Mr. Daniels in Gajadhar Prasad v. Manra Khan (4), that it makes no difference whether the vendor was out of possession or in possession, nor does it appear to us to make any difference whether there was a small or large chance of his getting his title acknowledged in Court. The pre-emptor is bound to assert the title of the vendee in order to claim pre-emption. The vendee qua vendee and as against the pre-emptor is estopped from denying the title of his own vendor, and so, for the purposes of the pre-emption suit, the title must be assumed to exist if alleged by the pre-emptor to exist. But it is necessary in order for a transaction to amount to a sale that there should be, as stated in s. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act, IV of 1882, a price paid or promised or part paid and part promised, which means that the price must be stated or ascertainable at the time of the deed. Paragraph 7 of the sale-deed on which the claim to pre-emption is based is as follows;—

"Consideration money of this deed is the sum which the vendees shall have to spend in conducting this suit from the beginning up to the end as well as their labour and loss (in conducting their suit). Amount of expenses in the suit is at present estimated to be Rs. 2,500 but it must remain clear, that if more than this amount is required for the expenses the vendees shall have to meet that sum and if the expenses are less than this amount then I shall not be entitled to get the surplus from the vendees. For the purpose of stamp the entire consideration money of this deed is fixed to be Rs. 10,000 half of which amount to Rs. 5,000, this includes labour and trouble on the part of the vendees." This does not satisfy the condition just stated. The conveyance is not a sale-deed. At the best it is a conveyance in consideration of a price and also a promise to do certain things, the doing on which will cost an indefinite sum of money. It is unnecessary to consider whether such a deed of conveyance is one that can be held in India to operate as a transfer, or merely as evidence of a promise to transfer. It is not a sale-deed, and does not give rise to a right of pre-emption.

On these grounds, we hold that the lower Court rightly dismissed the suit, and we dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal from a decree of the Senior Sub-Judge, Lahore, dated the 28th May 1924.

Mr. Nihal Chand Mehra, for the Appellant.

Lala Tirath Ram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a case where a judgment-debtor Nur Din objected to the attachment in execution of a decree of his house in Lahore City on the ground that it was exempt under s. 60 (c) of the C. P. C.

The objector proved that agriculture was his chief occupation, that he cultivated land a mile or 1½ miles from the house in question and that every night he took his cattle home to this house and spent the night in it. It was, however, elicited in evidence that the objector owns two other houses in the vicinity of his agricultural land, but it was stated that one of them was in the possession of mortgagees.

The lower Court has rejected the petition on the grounds that the objector was bound to prove that the city house was occupied by him bona fide for the purpose of agriculture and that the bare fact that after doing his day's work in the villages he brings his cattle with him to the city house because the village is becheragh is not sufficient to show that the city house is occupied by him as an agriculturist, especially when he has got houses on his lands expressly meant to be occupied and used for agricultural purposes.

There is nothing in s. 60 to justify such an interpretation of its terms, and of the ruling quoted by the learned Senior Subordinate Judge in support of his finding Radhakisan Hakumji v. Balwant Ramji (1) and Jivan Bhaga v. Hira Bhaiji (2) are not in point at all, and Attar Singh v. Bhagwan Das (3) is in favour of s. 60 (c) being taken to mean what it says.

Mr. Justice Johnstone laid down that the words "occupied by" mean "lived in by" or "used for agricultural purposes by."

The present house is the permanent residence of the judgment-debtor who is an agriculturist and, therefore, even if the words of s. 60 (c) should be read as meaning belonging to an agriculturist and occupied by him as such, the house in question undoubtedly is occupied by an agriculturist as such, for agriculturists like other people must have some place to lay their heads at night, and if an agriculturist has a house in a city a mile from his land there is no reason on earth why he should not use it as his ordinary residence.

I accept the appeal and order that the house be exempted from attachment. The appellant will have his costs in both Courts.

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and B. Dube, for the Appellant

Messrs. George Lowndes, K. C., and E. B.
Raikes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Lord Blanesburgh.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment and decree, dated the 27th September 1922, of the Court of the Resident at Hyderabad, reversing a decree, dated the 22nd November 1921, of the Assistant Resident there, and restoring, albeit on other grounds, a decree made by the Civil Judge of Secunder-abad, dated the 8th July 1919.

The suit was commenced by the appellant in the Court of that Judge in September 1911. Its purpose was to recover money lent by him so long ago as 1891 to the grandfather of the first respondent with re-payment guaranteed, so it was alleged by the late Sir Asman Jah, Prime Minister of Hyderabad, whose estate is represented in the suit by his son, the second respondent. The borrower, the alleged surety, and their respective representatives were,
or are, all residents in Hyderabad, the capital of the Nizam's Dominions. The appellant, however, has a place of business at Secunderabad, a neighbouring British cantonment, and asserting that the loans were both made and re-payable there, he claimed that his suit in respect of them was cognizable by the local British Court.

But this was not the appellant's only reason for invoking that jurisdiction—if he could successfully do so. In the Courts of the Nizam his demands had long since been barred by lapse of time. In the British Court, however, he claimed to be entitled to escape from the operation of the Indian Limitation Act—an Act otherwise entirely applicable to the case—on the ground that the residence of the defendant in Hyderabad was a "foreign" residence which took his claim against them outside the Statute although their residence was in fact only six miles away.

In the Courts below many matters of fact were canvassed. Most of these, concluded by concurrent findings, were before their Lordships treated as settled, and the arguments were addressed to one question only, viz, was the Court of the Civil Judge of Secunderabad entitled to entertain the suit at all?

That learned Judge had held that he had jurisdiction in the matter, but he dismissed the suit, holding on the view taken by him of the facts, that the appellant had been re-paid all that was due to him.

The appellant appealed to the Assistant Resident at Hyderabad. His appeal was resisted only by the second respondent, and he, it is stated, did not there raise again his objection to the jurisdiction of the Court taken before the Trial Judge, and certain at least it is that the learned Assistant Resident made no reference to the point in his judgment, by which the claim of the appellant was in effect allowed in full. The second respondent then appealed to the Resident, and he, taking up the consideration of the question afresh, held that the Civil Judge of Secunderabad had no jurisdiction in the matter. On that ground he allowed the appeal and dismissed the plaintiff's suit, expressing, however, at the same time his concurrence with the findings of fact of the Assistant Resident where these were at variance with the findings of the Trial Judge. The plaintiff again appeals.

At the outset their Lordships would express their entire concurrence with the learned Resident in his observations upon the importance of this question of jurisdiction in such a case as the present. The respondents are both of them subjects of the Nizam, from whose cession, as the learned Resident points out, the jurisdiction of the Secunderabad Court practically proceeds. In the circumstances, and especially where, as here, the liability or non-liability of such defendants may actually depend upon it, the question of jurisdiction becomes of first importance, different in character from such a question when it arises merely as between one Court and another in British India. And, while their Lordships would not here have upheld, even if it had been pressed, the contention raised in his printed case by the appellant that this question of jurisdiction decided by the Trial Judge in his favour, and not re-opened before the Assistant Resident, must now be treated as concluded against the respondents, they are gratified to record that that contention was not persisted in before the Board. Indeed, as they have already said, the arguments before them were confined to its discussion.

Its determination turns solely upon the question whether, in this case, within the meaning of s 20 (c) of the C. P. C., the cause of action wholly or in part arose within the local limits of the Civil Judge of Secunderabad. The facts upon which the answer depends lie in a small compass.

In 1891 Muhammad Ala-ud din Khan, deceased, grandfather of the first respondent, was Silladar of Sir Asman Jah Bahadur, Prime Minister of the Nizam. Having agreed to purchase 100 horses to form part of the bodyguard of the Prime Minister Ala-ud-din borrowed from the plaintiff Rs. 40,000 to pay for them, and arranged with the Paigah of the Minister for repayment of the loan with interest by monthly instalments by means of deductions from his salary in the manner which is thus described in a communication addressed on the 29th July 1891, by the Secretary of the Minister to the Pay Office of the Paigah :—

"The said Silladar for purchasing the horses has borrowed from Rai Bahadur Bansilal Abirchand the sum of Rs. 40,000 with interest at  $1\frac{1}{2}$  per cent., and has assigned the liability, to pay the principal and interest by monthly instalments of Rs. 1,000 upon this Secretariat. Wherefore you had better pay to the person who may bring the chitti of the said Sowcar the sum of Rs. 1,000 every month."

The promise made to the plaintiff, the fulfilment of which was thus directed, was contained in a note which had been addressed by the same Secretary to the plaintiff on 21st July 1891 in which it is stated that "every month at the time of distribution of pay of the force, after taking receipt of Khan Sahib a sum of Rs. 1,000 will be paid from the ilaga to the plaintiff's ilaga-dar, who may bring chitti signed by the plaintiff without any objection or prevention from the Sarkari Treasury until the principal and interest are fully liquidated.

In these terms was the promise of the Treasury made, and their Lordships are willing to accept without deciding that, as alleged by the plaintiff, they constituted a contract of suretyship Ala-ud-din being the principal debtor

His own obligation as such is expressed in a bond of the 25th July 1891 in which he promises the plaintiff :

"That in re-payment of the said sum (Rs. 40,000) and until the principal and interest is re-paid one instalment of a sum of Rs. 1,000 will be reaching you every month from out of the distribution of the pay of the force. Accordingly I have also caused a guarantee to be made for the said sum of money by means of a rubkar dated the 21st July 1891 from the office of the Secretary of Revenue. The instalment of Rs. 1,000 which has been agreed will reach you directly from the Treasury irrespective of the fact whether there is any saving from out of the salary of the horses or not. There will be no failure in the instalments reaching you. If for any reason perchance one instalment is defaulted the said Sowcar will have power to sell immediately the horses by auction and recover and pay himself the total amount."

A further advance of Rs. 5,000 was made by the plaintiff on 9th August 1891 and a final advance of Rs. 7,628 on the 6th June 1894. These for present purposes may be treated as having been made on the same terms.

As to their meaning and effect their Lordships are not in doubt. The Treasury or surety repayment is to be made to the plaintiff or his representative at the office of the Treasury at Hyderabad and the instalments, which in the principal-debtor's bond are described as "reaching" the plaintiff are the very instalments of which payment is so to be made. There is no promise either by the principal debtor or the surety to make any payment at Secunderabad, and so far as the principal-debtor is concerned the bond above abstracted is the only promise on his part which is forthcoming. It is quite true that on failure of any instalment there is doubtless an implied promise by him to re-pay the loan. But there is no implied promise to re-pay it at Secunderabad. Even by British law the duty of a debtor to find and pay his creditor is only imposed upon him when the creditor is within the realm. And the plaintiff has not contended that if there be any such duty at all imposed by Indian Law upon a debtor it extends in this respect further than in England. Accordingly, so far as the principal-debtor is concerned there is no obligation upon him, either express or implied, to make any payment to the plaintiff at Secunderabad.

Nor so far is there any such obligation assumed by the surety.

But it is contended, and the Trial Judge took the view that such an obligation is to be found in two documents written in the year 1904, one on the 30th March, addressed by the Treasury Secretary of the appellant, and the other, on the 13th April, addressed by one department of the Prime Minister's establishment to another, a copy being forwarded to the appellant.

Their Lordships do not consider it necessary to discuss these documents in detail. They are satisfied that they were never intended to alter the contractual obligations of the surety. At most they indicated a substituted arrangement to be continued only so long as was convenient; there was neither intention to alter nor any consideration present for the alteration of the obligations as they then existed.

It follows that in their Lordships' judgment no part of the obligations either of the principal-debtor or of the surety was to be discharged at Secunderabad. And no obligation was assumed there. No part of the plaintiff's cause of action accordingly arose within the local limits of the Court of the Trial Judge. He had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, and in their Lordships' judgment the decree of the learned Resident was quite right.

Their Lordships accordingly will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal therefrom be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of Second Appeals Nos. 1335 and 1336 of 1924.

There were two suits for redemption of two mortgages of two plots of land which were executed on the 25th June 1906. One mortgage was for Rs. 500 in favour of Sohan Singh and the other was for Rs. 300 in favour of Ladha Singh. In both suits the mortgagees represented that a further charge had been created in the sum of Rs. 56 by an unregistered-deed of the 2nd March 1911. The lower Appellate Court has held that the unregistered-deed was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration and that the transaction recorded in it could not be proved. It held further that if the deed was admissible the interest claimed by the mortgagees on the principal sum of Rs. 56 was not a charge upon the mortgaged land. Redemption was allowed on payment of Rs. 800 due on the two former deeds but as the plaintiff had deposited Rs. 250 in Court this was actually the sum which the mortgagees obtained.

In both cases the mortgagees have appealed. Rupees 212 are claimed on the unregistered deed, i. e., Rs. 6, the balance of principal and Rs. 206 interest and this amount is equally divided between the two mortgagees. It has been urged that both the decisions of the lower Appellate Court described above are contrary to law.

In regard to the question of compulsory registration the learned Additional Judge has held that the document of the 2nd March 1911 effected a consolidation of the two previous mortgage-deeds and has the effect of increasing the charge on either plot by a sum certainly exceeding Rs. 100, the consequence of which was that the bond was inadmissible in evidence for want of registration. I do not comprehend the reasoning of the learned Additional Judge and no further light is thrown upon it by the learned Vakil for the respondent who has asserted that the finding is right but has not been able to quote me any authority in support of it. I have examined the terms of the document carefully and am unable to say that its effect is more than to create a further charge of Rs. 56 upon the two previously mortgaged plots. If it required registration it must have purported or operated to create, declare, assign, limit or extinguish some right, title or interest in immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 and I cannot see that it does this. In Attra v. Mangal Singh (1) the learned Judges declared it to be a well established rule of construction that s. 17 of the Registration Act being a disabling section must be strictly construed that unless a document is clearly brought within its purview non-registration is no bar to the document being admitted in evidence and that if there is no doubt on the subject the benefit of the doubt must be given to the person who wants the Court to receive the document in evidence. The contents of the deed in question are not those of a document superseding the previous mortgage contracts and substituting an entirely fresh contract and the words cited by the learned Additional Judge in his judgment mean no more, in my opinion, than that the redemption price of the two previous mortgages was increased by a further sum of Rs. 56. I hold that the document was not one which comes within the scope of s. 17 of the Registration Act.

The stipulation about interest immediately followed the words quoted by the learned Additional Judge and were as follows :—‘aur sud fi sadi do rupaya mahwari dena mukarir kiya hai’. The learned Additional Judge decided that this was a separate sentence which had nothing to do with the previous sentence providing for redemption and that there was not the remotest indication in the deed that interest had also to be paid before redemption could be effected. For this conclusion he relied upon Aulia Khan v. Kanshi Ram (2) and Jwala Singh v. Teja Singh (3). The latter case certainly supports him, but in my judgment it must be taken to have been overruled by the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Gangai Ram v. Natha Singh (4). It was there held that a mortgagee is entitled to treat interest due under a mortgage as a charge upon the mortgaged property in the absence of any contract to the contrary and that it is most important

Messrs. Haidur Husain and K. P. Misra, for the Appellants.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is the defendants' appeal from the decree of the District Judge of Gonda, dated the 31st of October 1924, which reversed the decree of the First Subordinate Judge of Bahraich, dated the 21st of April 1923.

The decision of this case has been made difficult by the manner in which the Trial Court as well as the Court of Appeal has dealt with it. The case as set forth in the plaint is extremely simple and is free from any controversial point of law if its true nature were understood and firmly grasped. The plaintiffs-respondents' case was that the property in suit belonged to Baba Janki Das and that on his death they were entitled to succeed under the ordinary Hindu Law to the estate of Baba Janki Das. Baba Janki Das was admittedly a Bairagi faqir or in other words a sanyasi. The title, on which the plaintiffs rested their claim of inheritance, consisted of the fact that they were the disciples of Baba Janki Das. To this simple case the defendants replied that the property in suit originally belonged to one Baba Ram Charan Das, that it was held by Baba Janki Das with the permission of the defendants and that the defendants were the rightful heirs of the estate of Baba Ram Charan Das.

In order to appreciate the relevancy of the defence to the suit we have to state some facts antecedent to the title of Baba Janki Das to the property in suit on which the plaintiffs rely. One Baba Ram Charan Das was a sanyasi bairagi or a yati. That he belonged to such a sect of mendicants leads to the presumption that he must have been a member of the twice born classes. On his death in 1894, he was buried by his two disciples, Ram Ghulam Das and Baba Janki Das, who erected a samadh or tomb over the place where the body was lain. It is found by both the Courts below that Ram Ghulam Das and Baba Janki Das also set up a temple and then established an annual fair at the spot. Ram Ghulam Das died in 1897. He was succeeded by his co-disciple brother, Baba Janki Das, in the possession and management of the estate, which the two disciples had brought into existence. Baba Janki Das died on the 20th November 1918 and, as already stated, the plaintiffs claim succession to Baba Janki Das.

The Courts below have introduced into this case the question of custom regulating the succession to this temple as if it were a mutt or asthan of ancient times, the succession to which would be regulated by the rules of practice that were observed in such institutions. We think that that was a diversion which was not permitted by the pleadings in the case. At the hearing of the appeal before us the line of attack taken was that the custom, on which the finding of the Court of Appeal rests, was not established. In support of this argument which, according to our judgment, was irrelevant, a large number of cases decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council were cited to establish the proposition that the succession to a particular mutt depends upon the rules of usage applicable to that mutt.

The findings of the Courts below are not clear on certain questions, but in the circumstances of the case and having regard to the evidence, there can be no doubt that the following facts have been established:—

The property in suit consists of certain moveables in the shape of clothes and other articles of domestic needs and of certain items of immoveable property, for instance, the temple, garden, tank and other appurtenance of a similar nature. The immoveable property, to which reference has just now been made, was the outcome of the joint exertions of Ram Ghulam Das and Baba Janki Das. On the death of Ram Ghulam Das in 1897 Baba Janki Das entered into undisputed possession of the estate then in existence and finally Baba Janki Das having held possession of all these properties from the year 1897, died, in 1918. There is no proof, direct or indirect, of any dedication of these properties in the true sense of the term. We must, therefore, hold that the plaintiffs have succeeded in establishing this fact that the properties in suit belonged to Baba Janki Das as his private property. Baba Janki Das being himself a faqir naturally treated the temple and its appurtenances in a spirit of religious devotion, but that fact did not deprive him of his ownership in those properties. It is further admitted that the plaintiffs are the chelas of Baba Janki Das. The simple question of law which, therefore, arises in the appeal is whether properties held by Janki Das can be inherited by the present plaintiffs under any rule of Hindu Law. It is not denied that a bairagi faqir or an ascetic or even a yati may hold private property of his own and we have found, as already stated, that Baba Janki Das held the properties in suit in that character.

The rule of inheritance applicable to the present case is given in all the books of Hindu Law. We will first of all refer to the Institutes of Yajnavalkya. In the Chapter relating to the division of property among heirs the 140th couplet is translated as follows:—

“The preceptor, a qualified disciple, a brother of the same religious persuasion and an associate in holiness (one living in the same hermitage and belonging to the same order), shall, in order, inherit (i.e., the next succeeding in the absence of the previous person), the properties (books, clothes, etc.) of a Vanaprastha, Yati, and a Brahmacharin (religious student).”

We have already held that Baba Janki Das was a yati. We have also held and indeed it is admitted that the two plaintiffs are the disciples of Baba Janki Das. We are, therefore, of opinion, that the plaintiffs have succeeded in making out their title to the property, to which they laid claim in this suit. The rule of law, which we have quoted from Yajnavalkya, is stated in other books of Hindu Law also. Sastri's Hindu Law, 1924 Edition, page 688; Ram Krishna's Hindu Law, 1913 Edition, page 166. Ghose's Hindu Law, 1st Edition, pages 917 and 918 and Gour's Hindu Code, 2nd Edition, page 1052. The view of law, which we have taken, is also supported by a decision of the late Court of the Judicial Commissioner in the case of Drigbijar Singh v Mahant Bishambar Das (1).

The appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Dewan Mehr Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. Lalchand Mehra, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This second appeal arises out of the following situation:—

The plaintiff in the suit applied to the Notified Area Committee, Taran Taran, on the 13th of November, 1922, under s. 189 of the Punjab Municipal Act for permission to erect a certain building. The building included a certain chhajja. The Municipal Committee passed an order refusing permission but this was on the 15th of January 1923, after the expiry of the two months referred to in the proviso to s. 193. The plaintiff proceeded to build the chhajja and the Committee then demolished it acting under s. 172 of the Act. The demolition was actually carried out after the plaintiff had filed his present suit for an injunction restraining the Committee from interfering with his chhajja.

The Trial Court held that s. 172 did not apply since the chhajja was not a projection over a street and the plaintiff was given a decree for the injunction prayed for and the defendant Committee was ordered to re-build the chhajja. Appeal was made to the learned District Judge. He held firstly that the well and thara overhung by the chhajja came within the definition of a street as contained in Punjab Act III of 1911. Secondly, he held that under s. 183 (proviso) the Municipal Committee by failure to pass orders on the plaintiff's application for two months were to be deemed to have sanctioned the building of the chhajja absolutely and thirdly the learned District Judge altered the injunction for re-building the chhajja into a decree for Rs. 100 compensation.

The Committee have come to this Court in second appeal. The learned District Judge with reference to his second finding wrote in his judgment: "As the Committee failed to pass orders and thus sanctioned the proposed building absolutely, it was in my opinion unnecessary for the plaintiff to receive any further permission, whether written or otherwise, for the purposes of s. 172. There is no authority for interpreting the very wide expression relating to 'absolute sanction' in s. 193 in such a way as to exclude the 'written permission' required by s. 172."

The learned District Judge's attention was not directed to Municipal Committee of Delhi v. Devi Sahai (1) a decision by a Division Bench of the Chief Court which contains the direct authority which he found lacking. It was there ruled that a tacit sanction provided for by what corresponded then in the law to s. 193 covers only erection, or re-erection of buildings entirely within the bounds of a person's own land, but does not cover a projection or structure overhanging or encroaching upon any street or road.

The learned Counsel for the plaintiff-respondent has not attempted to distinguish Municipal Committee of Delhi v. Devi Sahai (1) but has supported the learned District Judge's decision on the ground that his finding about the thara and well being a street is incorrect. There can, however, be no interference with this finding. The definition of street in the present Act is extraordinarily wide, and the learned District Judge held on evidence that the well and thara are an erection which lies on the side of the roadway upto the boundaries of the adjacent property and that they are not private property.

The result is that the case came within s. 172 of the Act and the plaintiff is entitled to no relief. The appeal is accepted and the plaintiff's suit is dismissed with costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.—The defendant-appellant is the son-in-law of one Mg. Po Sin. On the 28th August 1922 he purchased the house and land in question from his father-in-law. The site was leased from the Development Trust and the lease is in favour of Po Sin alone. On the 4th of December 1922 the defendant-appellant purported to convey this property to the respondent for Rs 7,500 and a registered deed was executed and the purchase price paid. Then the respondent, who had bought the property with a view of enlarging an adjoining property of his, sought to obtain possession. He found that one Ma Kin was in possession of a part of the house. We are informed by the appellant's Counsel that his client gave the respondent such possession as the property admitted of by taking him to Ma Kin, who agreed to attorn to the respondent. As, however, Ma Kin would not vacate the premises, the respondent brought a suit in the Small Cause Court alleging that she was his tenant. This was apparently done because the conveyance having been executed and registered, no title remained in the appellant on which he could sue. He, however, gave evidence in favour of the respondent in the respondent's case that Ma Kin was his tenant. That suit was dismissed and the respondent, being unable to obtain possession of the property, has brought the present suit to recover the purchase price paid with interest and including stamp fees and registration fees. The plaintiff alleges that Ma Kin claims to be the wife of Mg. Po Sin and that she refuses to give possession. He further alleges that the defendant was aware of Ma Kin's claim and fraudulently concealed the fact when purporting to sell the house to him. The learned Judge in the Court below has held that there is no defence to the suit and has granted a decree as prayed. He held that the allegation of fraud was unnecessary. It is admitted that the appellant was bound to give possession had the respondent demanded it; but it is urged that he never demanded it and so the appellant was relieved of that duty. It is further urged that a plea of fraudulent concealment was essential in that the conveyance had been executed.

The matter falls within the purview of s. 55 of the Transfer of Property Act. By sub-s. (1) (a) the seller is bound to disclose to the buyer any material defect in the property of which the seller is, and the buyer is not, aware and which the buyer could not, with ordinary care, discover.

By sub-s. (1) (f) the buyer is bound to give such possession of the property as its nature admits. By sub-s. (2) the seller is to be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same and the last sentence of the section lays down that an omission to make such disclosure as is mentioned in sub-s. (1) (a) is fraudulent.

As has been pointed out, the title to the property as disclosed in the title-deeds from the beginning lay in Mg Po Sin. The fact that there were tenants who occupied the house may have been known to the respondent; but we are unable to hold that he must have been put on an enquiry as to whether Ma Kin was the legal wife of Mg. Po Sin or whether she was laying claim to any portion of the property. The defect in this case was a defect in the title and that is included in the words "material defect." [Haji Essa Sulleman v. Dayabhar Paramanandas (1)] We must, therefore, hold that this material defect would not have been discovered by the respondent and that the duty rested on the seller to disclose this defect and that his omission to do so is, therefore, fraudulent. In the next place by sub-s. (2) the seller must be taken to have contracted that he was the owner of this property and that he had power to transfer it. It seems impossible to hold that the appellant was not required to give possession to the respondent. The purpose for which the property was bought was one which required complete possession and it is admitted that appellant went to the respondent to give him possession, but respondent did not take any possession. There was thus a contract between the parties which is in effect tantamount to a covenant for a title. [Basaradd Sheikh v. Enajaddi Moleah (2)]. There was the duty to give possession which has not been given and there was fraudulent concealment of a material defect in the title.

Under these circumstances the decree of the Court below must be confirmed and this appeal dismissed with costs throughout. The respondent must return to the appellant the conveyance that has been executed.

With regard to collections in villages the word "profits" includes realisations of arrears of past years as well as for current years

Defendant was in wrongful possession of plaintiff's village properties and made realisations. Plaintiff obtained a decree against the defendant "for future mesne profits from the date of the suit." During the period subsequent to the institution of the suit, defendant had made collections of arrears of rent for past years and also rents for the current year Execution first appeal against a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Mainpuri, dated the 17th of March 1925.

Mr. A. Sanyal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Baleshwari Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an execution first appeal by the defendant judgment-debtor arising out of a suit in which the plaintiff obtained decree for "future mesne profits from the date of the suit" to be ascertained in the execution department. The defendant was in wrongful possession of the plaintiff's village properties and made realisations. During the period subsequent to the institution of the suit he made collections of arrears of rent for the past periods and also rents for the current year. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that under the decree the plaintiff is entitled to recover whatever rents have been realised by the judgment-debtor in the years in question irrespective of the fact whether those were arrears of rent for previous years or whether they were on account of the current year. In appeal before me it is contended that only such arrears as were collected by the defendant for the period subsequent to the institution of the suit should have been decreed. It is urged that there was no decree for the previous years and the defendant, therefore, was entitled to appropriate those rents even though he collected them subsequently during the year of the pendency of the suit.

Under s. 2 (12), C. P. C., the expression "mesne profits" of properties is defined as being profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom together with interest on such profits. It is clear, therefore, that the decree-holder is entitled to whatever profits the defendant in wrongful possession did actually receive. Had he not been in wrongful possession he would not have been allowed to realise the arrears of rent. The total amount realised by him during the period is, therefore, the amount which he actually received as profits of that property. Furthermore, it may be pointed out that with regard to collections in villages the word "profits" has always been intended to include realisations of arrears for past years as well as for current years. In the case of Nand Kishore v. Ram Ratan (1) Mahmood, J., pointed out that under the Rent Act the word "profits" meant "not only rent in respect of the years to which the rent relates but also to such arrears of rent as are actually realised by the lambardar during the year to which such suit may relate." The same conception of profits is the basis of the decision of the Full Bench case of Sheo Ghulam v. Salik Ram (2) where collections of arrears for past years were deemed to be a part of the profits for the year during which they were collected so as to give a fresh start of limitation to co-sharers. The same meaning is also attached to "profits" in Art. 109 of the Limitation Act.

I am accordingly of opinion that the view taken by the learned Subordinate Judge was correct. I dismiss this appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

A decision on a mixed question of law and fact cannot be re-agitated in a subsequent suit [p 769, col 2]

The question whether by custom the right to receive the offerings at a shrine is alienable or not is a mixed question of law and fact [ibid]

First appeal from a decree of the District Judge, Sialkot, dated the 8th February 1924, confirming that of the Sub Judge, Fourth Class, Sialkot, dated the 27th February 1923.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Sheikh Mahomed Munir, for Sheikh Niaz Mahomed, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—A preliminary objection that no appeal lies has no force. It is suggested that the suit is of the nature cognizable by Courts of Small Causes, and since the value of the subject-matter does not exceed Rs. 500, s 102 of the C P C applies. The plaint, however, contains a prayer for an injunction and as framed the suit for that reason could not have been tried by a Court of Small Causes. The objection is overruled

The origin of the suit is as follows:—

Nur Din, the father of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 and Abdul Qadir and Abdul Aziz, defendants Nos. 3 and 4 who are majawars of a certain Muhammadan shrine in Sialkot, on the 2nd of July 1903, mortgaged to a Hindu—one Chuni Shah—certain property including their share in the offerings made at the shrine. The suit is based upon that mortgage and is brought by the successors in interest of Chuni Shah for Rs. 278 which is alleged to represent the mortgagee's share of the offerings for a certain period.

The principal plea of the defendants was that the rights in these offerings were inalienable and amongst others the three following issues were framed:—

(2) Is the right in the offerings alienable?

(3) Cannot the defendants raise objections as to the right being non-transferable?

(4) Whether s. 11 of the C. P. C. operates as a bar to this suit?

The previous suit referred to was one brought in 1912 by Chuni Shah for Rs. 310, the mortgagee's share of the offerings, and the defendants were Nur Din and Abdul Qadir, Abdul Aziz and a fourth man, Taj Din, who was said to be the person who actually collected the offerings. The third issue in that suit was, is the income from the offerings of the khankah not alienable? and this was decided in the negative, namely, that the offerings were alienable. It has been held by both the Courts below that this decision is res judicata. In the present suit, on the issues above quoted the suit has been dismissed in consequence. The only question for decision in second appeal is whether there is in fact any res judicata

It was argued before the learned District Judge and repeated in the present memorandum of appeal, that the transfer of a share in the offerings in suit was an act opposed to public policy and contrary to the trusts of the Muhammadan religion, and the case for the appellants is that because the previous decision was on a point of law there is no res judicata. Mr. Tek Chand for the appellants concedes that the case law on s 11 of the C P C, may be summarized as follows. When the previous question in issue which has been decided is one purely of fact all High Courts are agreed that it cannot be re-agitated. They also agree that it cannot be re-agitated when the question is a mixed one of law and fact, but when it is a question of pure law there is a distinct conflict of opinion, and there is no direct authority in any pronouncement by this Court or by the Chief Court.

Mr Badri Das contends that the question is a mixed one of law and fact, and I think that he is right. The Court in the previous suit decided that the rights in the offerings were alienable because a custom prevailed sanctioning such practice, and the origin of the custom lay in certain instances of alienation which were held to have occurred. According to s 5 of the Punjab Laws Act in questions regarding any religious usage or institution the first rule of decision must be any custom applicable to the parties concerned, and thus the former decision was that by reason of the existence of a custom the alienation then in question and now in question was legal. The question of the existence of a custom or at any rate of this particular custom is, in my view, a mixed question of law and fact, because the instances which are the basis of the finding are undoubted facts. Therefore, I come to a contrary decision to that of the Court which decided the case of 1912.

On the question of the alienability of the rights to the offerings would involve disturbance of a finding of mixed law and fact and indeed principally of fact, namely, the existence of a particular custom applicable to this particular religious institution.

The decision, therefore, of the lower Appellate Court was correct and the appeal must fail. It is dismissed with costs.

An assignee decree-holder can apply only to the Court which passed the decree for being recognised as the assignee of the decree and he cannot make an application only for the purpose of being recognised as an assignee decree-holder. His application must be one for execution and, therefore, if he does not apply for execution, his application would not be considered to be a proper application [p. 770, col 2].

An application by an assignee decree-holder to the Court executing the decree, stating that the decree had been transferred to him, and requesting it to send back the records of the case to the Court which passed the decree "for the purpose of further conducting the suit" is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of cl. (5) Art. 182 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. [ibid.]

Petition, under s. 25 of Act IX of 1887, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tanjore, dated the 15th September 1923, in E. P. No. 356 of 1923 in S. C. No. 493 of 1915.

Mr. Ramaswami Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. K. R. Rangaswami Iyengar, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a petition to revise the order of the Subordinate Judge of Tanjore recognising the assignment of the decree in favour of the petitioner in the lower Court. The contention of Mr. Ramaswami Iyer for the petitioner is that it was not competent for the assignee decree-holder to make the application he did to the Court executing the decree. The decree was passed on 12th April 1915 by the Subordinate Judge's Court, Tanjore. It was transferred for execution to the District Munsif's Court of Tanjore by an application, dated 18th July 1916. The assignee decree-holder applied to the District Munsif's Court on 10th February 1920 for the issue of notice to the defendant under O. XXI, r. 22, and asked "that the records may be transferred along with a certificate to the Subordinate Judge's Court, Tanjore for the purpose of further conducting the suit". In it he also stated that the decree had been transferred to him by assignment. The question is, whether this is an application which it is competent for the assignee decree-holder to make. If he was competent to make the application it would be a step-in-aid of execution under Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act. It is well-settled that an assignee decree-holder can apply only to the Court which passed the decree for being recognised as the assignee of the decree and it is also settled that he cannot make an application only for the purpose of being recognised as an assignee decree-holder. His application must be one for execution and, therefore, if he does not apply for execution, his application would not be considered to be a proper application. In this case, he asked that the records be sent to the other Court for the further conduct of what he calls a suit and I suppose he meant by it for the execution of the decree. It has been held in Krishnayyar v. Venkayyar (1) that if a decree-holder applies to the Executing Court to send the records to the Court which passed the decree, that application is a step-in-aid of execution and saves limitation. Whether a transferee decree-holder can make a similar application is the question. In order that his claim as assignee decree-holder may be recognised, it is necessary that the papers should be sent back to the Court which passed the decree. It is admitted that the assignee decree-holder was subsequently recognised to have got a proper assignment of the decree by the Subordinate Judge's Court, Tanjore which passed the decree. In order to get that relief, his application to the Executing Court to send back the papers to that Court is a competent one. I think, in order to enable the Court which passed the decree to recognise him as the assignee decree-holder, it was necessary for that Court to have the records sent up by the Executing Court and an application for that purpose, I think, comes within the expression of "step-in-aid of execution". In this case, the application was not by the assignee decree-holder for execution to the Executing Court which no doubt he was incompetent to make till his assignment was recognised. But in order that the Court which passed the decree may pass an order under O. XXI, r. 16, it was necessary though it might not be so in every case, at least in this case, that the papers should have been sent back. I hold, therefore, that this application was a proper one which the assignee decree-holder was competent to make in this connection. I would like to refer to the case reported as Manorath Das v Ambica Kanta Bose (2). In that case an application which was made by a person who got a title to a decree by operation of law and who made an application before the Court which passed the decree recognised him as being entitled to execute the decree, was a proper application. In this view of the case I think the order of the lower Court is correct and this petition is dismissed with costs.

(1) 6 M. 81; 2 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 334.

Rangoon Rent Act (II of 1920), s. 13—Enhance- ment of rent—Consent of tenant, effect of—Illegal excess recovered by landlord—Set-off, tenant whether entitled to

Neither acquiescence nor consent on the tenant's part can entitle the landlord to make an enhancement of rent in contravention of the provisions of the Rangoon Rent Act.

Where a landlord has recovered rent in excess of the rent legally payable under the Act, the tenant is entitled to set off the amount so recovered by the landlord as against the rent which accrues due subsequently.

Special first appeal against the decrees of the Rangoon Small Cause Court, in C. R. Nos. 5246 and 4957 of 1924.

Mr. J. C. Ray, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rahman, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In the first of these cases the defendant-appellant appeals from a decree of the Small Cause Court and in the second petition by way of revision against a decree of the same Court ejecting him from rooms E and L of No 31, Lewis Street, Rangoon, on the ground that the defendant was not ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Rangoon Rent Act.

The case has not been satisfactorily tried and the then learned Judge seems to have overlooked very important provisions of the Rent Act. In his judgment he remarks that "the plaintiff's conduct was rather reprehensible in that he had enhanced the rent frequently and by leaps and bounds." But the law is on the plaintiff's side.

It seems that the defendant has been a tenant of the premises for 11 years and from the Rent Controller's finding the rent of room E on 1st April 1918, was Rs. 45 a month and room L was Rs. 50. The plaintiff purchased the building in which these two rooms are, in March 1922, and at the time he admits that the rent of room E was Rs. 50. By January 1923, he increased the rent to Rs. 70 and by July 1923, to Rs. 100. In January 1923, he increased the rent of room L from Rs. 50 to Rs. 70. He pleads that the tenant consented to these increases. We dare say he may have done so under threat of eviction. But it is clear that neither acquiescence nor consent on the tenant's part can make the landlord's action legal. The only rent allowable to the landlord was Rs. 45 for room E and Rs. 50 for room L until he got the Rent Controller to fix a different rent. It is clear that he never went to the Rent Controller. And when the tenants, in February 1923, petitioned the Controller, the landlord took eviction proceedings against the leader, one Petit, with the result that several of the others, including the present appellant, signed petitions consenting to the increased illegal rents and asked that their petitions for fixing standard rents be withdrawn. None of these proceedings seem to have put the then Small Cause Court on enquiry, and he assumed that there was a free consent on the part of the tenants. For one reason or another the cases dragged on before the Rent Controller from 3rd February 1923, till 5th September 1924, over 18 months, when he fixed the rent of room E at Rs. 56-4-0 and room L at Rs. 50.

The defendant's case is that he was ready and willing to pay the rent allowable by the Act and that he has stopped payment because the amount illegally obtained by the landlord he was entitled to set off against the accruing rent. Section 13 undoubtedly gives him this right subject to the conditions therein expressed. The Court below ought to have gone into this question and decided whether there was still a balance due after deduction of the amount for which defendant was entitled to credit. The materials before us are not sufficiently ample to allow this to be done now. Nor, in our opinion, is it necessary. The landlord's behaviour in increasing the rent and in trying to prevent the tenants from availing themselves of the redress which the law gives them is extortionate and reprehensible to the last degree.

Taking all the facts into consideration we hold the appellant-petitioner was ready and willing to pay rent to the full extent allowable by the Rangoon Rent Act and had not lost the protection of that Act. The judgment and decrees of the Small Cause Court are set aside and the plaintiff-respondent's suits are dismissed with costs in both Courts. Advocate's fees in this Court, five gold mohurs.

JUDGMENT.

Boys and Banerji, JJ.—(June 5, 1925).—This is a plaintiff's appeal. The suit was by one Shib Narain, who had purchased the rights of the mortgagor, for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage dated the 21st of May 1864 made by Govind Prasad in favour of Chaudhri Behari Lal.

This mortgage was for a sum of Rs. 500 and was admittedly a usufructuary mortgage.

It had been followed by a second mortgage on August 14th 1864 for Rs. 200 in favour of the same mortgagee. It recited the first mortgage for Rs. 500 and further declared that the mortgagor should not be entitled to redeem without discharging the second loan also.

This was again followed by a third mortgage on June 1st, 1867, in favour of the same mortgagee. It recited the prior total debt of Rs. 700; it referred to a subsequent "mashrut ul rahn" document for Rs. 200 which was being taken back (and with which we are no further concerned) and then said that Rs. 99 was being taken in cash and for this total Rs. 299 the mortgagor was executing this fresh mashrut ul rahn (the deed itself contains this description) document, and it was further declared that the executant would pay this Rs. 299 first before discharging the earlier debt, and would pay up all interest before taking possession.

These three mortgages we will refer to hereafter as the first, second and third mortgages.

On the 23rd of August 1880 an agreement was signed between one Baldeo, the father of Gajadhar, the principal defendant-respondent in this case, and Chaudhri Behari Lal, the mortgagee above named, in which Chaudhri Behari Lal is said to have recognised Baldeo as half owner in at any rate the first mortgage, and one of the questions we have to decide is whether this agreement recognised him as half owner of the second and third mortgages also.

On the 6th of December 1914 the heirs of Govind Prasad, the mortgagor, sold the equity of redemption to Shib Narain, the present plaintiff, who is the son of the deceased Chaudhri Behari Lal the mortgagee. The result of this transaction was that Shib Narain became the sole owner of half the property, and owner of the equity of redemption in regard to Baldeo's half.

On the 5th of December 1919 Shib Narain filed this suit for redemption, in respect of the first mortgage, of the half mortgaged to Baldeo. He alleged that he had deposited certain monies under s. 83 of the Transfer of Property Act; that the defendant refused to withdraw the amount; and that now, on the other hand, there was due to him, Shib Narain, a sum of Rs. 650. The defence was that the defendant Gajadhar, son of Baldeo, now deceased, was also entitled to a half share in the second and third mortgages, and further that the first mortgage could not be redeemed without prior or at least simultaneous discharge of the second and third. Both points were decided against the plaintiff by both Courts and the suit was dismissed in toto.

Three points arise for determination in this case.

First, whether the defendant Gajadhar, son of Baldeo, is entitled under the agreement of the 23rd of August 1880 to a half share only in the first mortgage, or also to a half share in the second and third mortgages.

The second question is, whether the defendant could insist upon the discharge of the second and third mortgages at the same time as the redemption of the first usufructuary mortgage.

The third question is, if it be held that the plaintiff could only obtain redemption of the first mortgage on condition that he also discharged the second and third, could he now be given a decree in respect of all three mortgages when he had only asked for redemption in regard to the first.

We will consider first the agreement of 1880. That contains the words:—"Girwi ki 70 bighas 4 biswas", and later the words:—"Hamaro tumharo jo hissa brabar ka hai". It is urged for the appellant that the word "girwi" indicates that this acknowledgment of equal shares could refer only to mortgages of the nature of a usufructuary mortgage and could not refer to the second and third mortgages. We see no justification for this restriction of the term, but we may add that even if that were a justifiable interpretation of the word, there is authority in the judgment of Mr. Justice Banerji in Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (1), for holding that even the second and third mortgages in this case may be regarded as usufructuary mortgages. It is not, however, necessary to press that, for, as we have said, there is nothing in the word "girwi", so far as we are aware, to restrict it to a usufructuary mortgage. On the other hand we think that the words "girwi ki" were here only used as descriptive of all the mortgagee rights of the parties in the property specified as distinguished from their vendee rights in other property referred to as "bainamah ki."

Further for the appellant reliance was placed on an admission said to have been made by the defendant Gajadhar in cross examination, that his right to possession was only based on the first usufructuary mortgage-deed. This would clearly not be sufficient to preclude him from maintaining that the three mortgages were really one. It is obvious that in one sense his claim for possession would be based on his first usufructuary mortgage. The statement was, moreover, brought out in cross-examination, but in examination-in-chief he had already definitely asserted his claim to be based on all the three mortgages. We hold, therefore, that the defendant had in fact a half share in all three of the mortgages, and we decide this question against the appellant.

The second question is, can the defendant compel simultaneous redemption of the second and third mortgages. The plaintiff-appellant claims that he cannot. It is urged for him that he need not redeem simultaneously the later mortgages, unless they "consolidated the old and the new transactions." It would seem that of this class of case there may be three types:—Where it is suggested (1) that the first mortgage cannot be redeemed unless the second mortgage is first or simultaneously redeemed; (2) that the second mortgage cannot be redeemed unless the first mortgage is first or simultaneously redeemed, and (3) that neither the first nor the second can be redeemed separately. The present case is alleged by the defendant to be of the first type, with this addition that there is a third mortgage which bears to the first two the same relation that the second bears to the first.

We will consider first whether the first mortgage can be redeemed without redeeming the second.

We have set out at the commencement of this judgment the terms of the deeds sufficiently for the present purpose.

In support of his claim to redeem the first mortgage alone, the appellant relies on Bhartu v. Dalip (2) and Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (3). In Bhartu v. Dalip (2), it is clear that the restrictive agreement embodied in the later mortgage was misread and the effect of the particular decision was explained away in the later decision by the same learned Judge in Brij Lal Singh

v. Bhawani Singh, (4) which we shall notice later when considering the cases that support the respondent. The other case reported as Kesar Kunwar v. Kashi Ram (3) relied on for the appellant helps him no more. In that case it was only held that (assuming that, if the second mortgage was not time-barred, the defence would be a good one that it must be paid off before redeeming the first mortgage) where there was a provision that the first mortgage should not be redeemed without paying off the second, and the second was in fact barred by limitation, the Court could not possibly allow the defendant to rely on the condition as to first discharging the second mortgage and so in fact enable him to secure payment of a debt which he had allowed to become time-barred.

For the defendant-respondent reliance was placed on Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan Singh (5), Brij Lal Singh v. Bhawani Singh (4) and Har Pershad v. Ram Chander (1). We are perfectly satisfied that on the terms of the second mortgage it is governed by the principles laid down in the three cases that we have quoted; that it is in the nature of an additional mortgage hypothecating the property, and that on the principles laid down in those three cases the plaintiff mortgagor was not entitled to redeem the first mortgage without at the same time discharging the second.

The case of the third mortgage is even more clear. In that the expression "mash-rut ul-rahn" specifically occurs, and as regards this mortgage Counsel for the appellant has not found it possible to resist seriously the contention of the defendant that this third mortgage must be discharged before or simultaneously with redemption of the first.

As to the third question it has similarly not seriously been contended that the plaintiff could obtain redemption of the first mortgage and discharge the second and third on his prayer as at present framed, in which the relief asked for has only referred to the first mortgage. But it is urged on his behalf that we should allow him now even at this stage to amend his plaint, and remand the case to the lower Court for determination of the question as to how much is due on all three mortgages together. This course was permitted in Brij Lal Singh v. Bhawani Singh (4) though it appears not to have been followed in the earlier case reported as Ranjit Khan v. Ramdhan Singh (5).

(3) 30 Ind. Cas. 777; 37 A. 634; 13 A. L. J. 889.

(4) 7 Ind. Cas. 115; 32 A. 651; 7 A. L. J. 821.

(5) 2 Ind. Cas. 859; 31 A. 482; 6 A. L. J. 654.

We think that such a prayer should not be too readily granted; that in view of the decisions to which we have referred the law as interpreted by this Court at any rate should be well enough known. In the present case, however, we are prepared to accede to the prayer. We have, therefore, given the appellant permission to amend the plaint so as to ask for relief as regards the second and third mortgages also, and, that amendment having been made, we remand this case to the Court of first instance through the lower Appellate Court under O. XLI, r. 25 with directions to take such further evidence as may be necessary, and to determine the amount that may be due by the plaintiff to the defendant on foot of all three mortgages. On return of the finding the usual ten days will be allowed for filing objections.

On receipt of the finding Dalal and Boys, J.J., on December 1, 1925, delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This suit was remanded by this Bench under O. XLI, r. 25 of the C. P. C. to permit the plaintiff-appellant to amend his plaint and include the other mortgages therein. This was done and the lower Appellate Court has decided that Rs. 4,913 is due by the plaintiff for the purpose of redemption of all the three mortgages. The plaintiff is owner of half the mortgagee rights and he has sued for the redemption of only half of the property. The amount, therefore, which he will have to pay will be half of Rs. 4,913.

The other objection to the finding of the lower Appellate Court relates to the amount of interest payable on the bond of 14th August 1864. Interest is calculated on that amount at the simple rate of Rs. 1-4 0 per cent. per mensem from the date of the bond, 14th August 1864 up to the date on which the lower Court prepared the account that is 21st of July 1925. The amount of interest comes to Rs. 1,828. It is argued here on behalf of the plaintiff appellant that interest would be recoverable by the defendants only for 12 years, that is, Rs. 360. The bond contains a stipulation that the mortgagee may sue for the interest due on this bond separately. On this ground the plaintiff's case is that the suit for interest for a period of more than 12 years is time-barred. We have read the terms of the bond and do not accept this contention. In the bond the amount borrowed is stated and then the rate of interest and it is stated after this that the money shall be paid when the amount due on the prior mortgage is paid and the prior mortgage is redeemed. The words used are yih rupiya, this money. According to the plaintiff's Counsel this term denotes only the principal amount and not the interest because as pointed out by him there is no stipulation that the interest was to be added to the principal. Finally, there is the permission granted to the mortgagee to sue for interest separately. We are of opinion that this is an additional privilege granted to the mortgagee and he was not bound to sue separately for interest. If he was satisfied with the security and permitted the interest to accumulate there was no bar to that procedure according to the terms of the bond. In ordinary acceptance of the term "this money" would include the principal amount together with interest. We disallow objection No 1.

In the result we decree the plaintiff's suit for redemption on payment of Rs. 2,456-8-0. A preliminary decree for redemption shall be prepared under O. XXXIV, r 7 of the C. P. C. Interest shall run at bond rates on the two bonds of 1864 from the 21st of July 1925 up to six months from to-day's date. On non payment of the money within the time specified the usual result shall follow. The mortgagee-respondents shall receive their costs of all the Courts—costs according to the valuation of the property including fees here on the higher scale.

CIVIL REVISION No 224 of 1924.

June 18, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Justice Das.

MA SHEWE U—APPLICANT

versus

MA SHIN AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s 115—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s 6—Application dismissed as barred by time—Benefit of minority ignored—Revision

Petitioner's application for leave to sue in forma pauperis was rejected on the ground that the suit was barred by time, but in arriving at this conclusion that Court overlooked the provisions of s 6 of the Limitation Act to the benefit of which the petitioner was entitled:

Held, that the order rejecting the petitioner's application was liable to be set aside in revision.

Civil revision from an order of the Sub-Divisional Court, Thaton, in C. M. No. 5 of 1924.

Mr. Hla Pe, for the Applicant.

Mr. Auzam, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case petitioner had applied for leave to sue as a pauper in the Court of the Sub-Divisional Judge of Thaton. Her suit was based on a claim to a share of inheritance left by her parents. The defendants in that suit admitted that the petitioner was a pauper but contested her right to sue as a pauper on the ground that her claim was barred by limitation. The lower Court dismissed the application on the ground that the petitioner's claim was barred by limitation. The lower Court entirely overlooked the provisions of s. 6 (1) of the Limitation Act. Admittedly the petitioner was a minor when her cause of action arose and she came of age less than 12 years before the filing of the suit. Section 6 (1) of the Limitation Act clearly applies in her case and her suit is within time.

The order of the lower Court is set aside, and the petitioner is granted leave to sue as a pauper.

It is not an invariable rule that the absence of a Pleader owing to his engagement elsewhere is a sufficient cause for setting aside an ex parte decree, but the High Court will not in revision interfere with the discretion of the Court of first instance in setting aside an ex parte decree on that ground [p. 777, col. 1.]

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Tinnevely, in I. A. No. 10 of 1924, in O. S. No. 120 of 1921 (in O. S. No. 73 of 1923 on the file of the Court of the Second Additional Sub-Court, Tinnevely).

Mr. S. Rajagopalachari, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Ramasami Iyer, for the Respondents.

ORDER.—This was a suit by the plaintiff against seven defendants. I understand that the suit is for specific performance of a contract entered into by the husband of the 1st defendant and the plaintiff. The suit is also in the alternative for the value of the land. The deceased was one Nambi Khone, the 1st defendant is his widow, the 2nd defendant his nephew, 3rd defendant is the son of the 2nd defendant, defendants No. 4 to 6 are the sons of a brother of the 2nd defendant and the 7th defendant is the daughter of the deceased. These persons are all said to have in their hands certain assets of the deceased Nambi Khone under some arrangement made in his lifetime, called a settlement. The suit was called on for trial on the 24th October 1923 before the Subordinate Judge, Mr. N. S. Natesa Iyer. The defendants No. 1 and 7 and defendants Nos. 2 to 6 had different Vakils on the record. When the case was taken up, the Vakil for the plaintiff was not there and neither of the Vakils for the defendants was there. The plaintiff, however, went into the box and examined himself and one other witness and an ex parte decree was the result. A petition was then put in to the succeeding Subordinate Judge Mr. R. Nageswara Iyer on the 7th February 1924 by the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 only to set aside the ex parte decree and restore the suit to file. The learned Subordinate Judge was inclined to believe that the petitioner's Vakil was engaged elsewhere when the suit was taken up and was of opinion that that amounted to a reasonable cause for non-appearance of the petitioners on the days in question. He, therefore, set aside the ex parte decree obtained as against all the defendants.

Two points have been argued before me in revision. The first is that the Judge has no jurisdiction to treat the absence of a practitioner as a sufficient cause for not appearing when the suit was called on for hearing under O. IX, r. 13 (a) and consequently that even if the petitioner-plaintiff is wrong on this point the ex parte decree ought not to have been set aside as a whole but only with regard to the defendants Nos 2 to 6 who requested that it should be so set aside. I am far from saying that if I were hearing this case on the Original Side I should hold as an invariable rule that the absence of a Pleader is a sufficient cause for setting aside the ex parte decree. But it is a very different thing to say that the learned Subordinate Judge acted without jurisdiction or with material irregularity in regarding that as a sufficient cause for doing so. With regard to the absence or presence of Pleaders, the parties were in much the same boat before the Subordinate Judge, and I am not inclined to interfere in revision with his discretion in regarding the absence of the Pleader of the defendants Nos. 2 to 6 as a sufficient cause for non-appearance. I, therefore, think that with regard to this part of the case the civil revision petition must be dismissed. But there is one point where I think the Subordinate Judge had made an omission with regard to the defendants Nos. 2 to 6. The defendants Nos 2 to 6 should pay the plaintiff's costs up to date before the suit is taken on the file in the Sub-Court.

With regard to defendants Nos. 1 and 7, I am not prepared to say that the cause of action is necessarily joint and indivisible as against them. The plaintiff has, I dare say, quite wisely made defendants everybody that he can possibly conceive would have any assets of the deceased Nambi Khone, and there is no doubt that he hopes to catch some of the assets any how in the hands of these defendants. I think the case really falls within the principle laid down by Mr. Justice Krishnan in the case reported as Narayanaswamy Iyer v. Doraiswamy Pathar (1). There the suit was one to obtain possession of separate items of property from separate sets of defendants. I think really that is the case here as it is perfectly plain that although the defendants are related by blood, they are, of course, in no sense a joint family nor is there any allegation as far as I know that they are living together or anything of the kind so that I think that with regard to defendants Nos. 1 and 7 the learned Subordinate Judge was wrong. They did not petition either in the lower Court or here. The ex parte decree, therefore, is not set aside as regards them. The petitioner will get his costs from defendants Nos 1 and 7 in this Court.

Special second appeal from a decree of the District Court, Tharrawaddy, in C. A. No 112-A of 1923.

Mr. Robertson, for the Appellants.

Mr. Paw Tun, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—Appellants sued respondents for a declaration that they were owners of a plot of paddy land, part of holding No. 47 of 1922-23 of Kyakatdan Kwin. Their case was that that holding belonged to one Maung Shan who mortgaged it to the 1st appellant's mother, the respondent Ma Yeik, that in 1917 Maung Shan agreed to sell seven acres out of that holding, being the land now in dispute, to appellants for Rs. 1,000, that appellants then paid Rs. 50 as part of the price, that at that time it was agreed between Maung Shan, Ma Yeik, and appellants that the balance of the price should be payable by appellants by yearly instalments and that appellants should pay interest on it, that in accordance with that agreement appellants paid an instalment of Rs. 200 to Ma Yeik and received possession of the seven-acre plot, that since then he had been in possession of that plot and had been paying revenue on it, that, thereafter, on the 3rd of March 1918, Maung Shan sold the whole holding to Ma Yeik by registered deed, that the mutation of names was effected so that the holding now stands in the name of Ma Yeik, that Ma Yeik agreed to convey the seven-acre plot to appellants on payment of the price in full, that appellants had paid the price in full, that Ma Yeik had duly executed a registered conveyance of the seven-acre plot in favour of appellants, that the plot was accordingly put into appellants' names, that thereafter one Po Tu, agent of the 1st respondent, a transferee of a decree against Ma Yeik, brought the whole holding to sale in execution of that decree, that the 3rd respondent, Paw Tun became the purchaser of the holding at the Court auction, and that appellants were owners of the seven-acre plot and were entitled to a declaration of their title.

Ma Yeik did not contest the suit, but gave evidence for appellants.

The respondent, Pa Tun, suggested that the sale of the land by Ma Yeik to appellants was a sham and fraudulent transaction. He said that he bought the land at the Court auction and was put into possession and that he thereby acquired a good title.

The 1st respondent also pleaded that the conveyance by Ma Yeik to appellants was fraudulent and collusive and that appellants were never in possession of the property.

The Trial Court found that appellants succeeded in proving that Maung Shan agreed to sell the plot to them for Rs. 1,000 that appellants then paid Rs. 250 as part of the price, that they subsequently paid the price in full, that Ma Yeik conveyed the plot to appellants, that although that conveyance was made after the holding had been attached in execution, the attachment was illegal and invalid, and that appellants had acquired a good title to the land.

The 1st respondent appealed and the lower Appellate Court agreed with the Trial Court that appellants succeeded in proving the agreement to sell and the payment of the price in full, but held that the Trial Court was not entitled to consider the validity of the attachment because appellants had not themselves questioned it, and that because the conveyance from Ma Yeik to appellants was made after the property had been attached, the conveyance was void under s. 61 of the Code.

Appellants appeal on the grounds that the District Court was wrong in holding that the conveyance was void under s. 61, and ought to have held that the attachment was invalid.

The conveyance from Ma Yeik to the appellants, Ex B, was registered on the 25th June 1921. From Ex. 2, which is a certified copy of the diary in Civil Execution No. 25 of 1921 of the District Court of Tharrawaddy, the attachment of the property was effected on or before the 8th June 1921, when the warrant is stated to be returned duly executed. But some years before this date, the judgment-debtor had agreed to sell the land in question to appellant and he had been given possession and had paid for the same at the time, partly in cash and, as to the balance of Rs. 750, by a promissory note bearing interest at Rs. 1-8-0 per cent. per mensem. And this promissory note from the evidence had been discharged some months before the attachment. Consequently at the time of the attachment Ma Yeik had no beneficial interest in the land in question. She was at most possessed of the bare legal title which she was bound to convey on demand to her purchaser. [Transfer of Property Act, s. 55 (1) (d)].

In these circumstances, appellant was owner with a good possessory title.

In our construction of s. 64 of the O. P. C. what is aimed at is the transfer of a beneficial interest, delivery of property or any payment. None of these things took place in the present case. And we consider that to hold the section to apply so as to defeat the appellants' present claim would be stretching the letter of the section so as to defeat the spirit.

For these reasons we allow the appeal and restore the decree of the Sub-Divisional Court. The appellants will have costs throughout.

Therefore, no second appeal lies in such a suit.

Lala Mehr Chanl Mahajan for Kanwar Dalip Singh, for the Appellant.

Lala Amar Nath Chona for Lala Fakir Chand, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will dispose of Civil Appeals Nos. 1603, 1604 and 1605 of 1924. In each case the value of the subject-matter of the original suit did not exceed Rs. 500 and the preliminary objection is raised that no second appeal lies by virtue of s. 102 of the C. P. C.

All three suits were of the same nature. The plaintiff, Taj Mohammad, is the lambardar of Mauza Burana in the Multan District. In 1903 he brought a suit against the Hindu panchayat of the village and against his co-lambardar Mohammad Khan for a declaration that he was entitled to Re. 8-6-0 per cent. of the dhart or weightment dues and he obtained a decree on appeal. Since then Mohammad Khan the co lambardar has died and the post held by him has been brought under reduction. The present plaint alleges that Farid Khan son of Mohammad Khan has gone on realising his father's share of the weightment dues since the latter's death, that is to say, another Re. 8-6-0 per cent. and the suits are for recovery from him of those realisations for various periods on the ground that the lambardar or lambardars alone have a right to them and that they have been improperly collected by Farid Khan who is not a lambardar.

The question for decision is whether the suits come within Art. 13 of the Second Schedule to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act. If they do not, a second appeal is barred by s. 102 of the C. P. C. read with s. 15 (2) of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act.

It has been held repeatedly that to apply Art. 13 the claim should be directly against the person who is primarily liable to pay the cesses or dues and by whom they are originally payable and that a suit against a person who has improperly collected the dues from the party primarily liable is not within the scope of Art. 13. This has been made clear, inter alia, in Harnam v Gandu (1), Jowahir Singh v Sardar Man Singh (2) and Pohla v. Pertap Singh (3). Indeed the previous suit referred to above was ruled by the Chief Court to be a small cause in spite of the fact that it was for a declaration [Vide Mohar Singh v. Taj Mahamed (4)]. Thus latter decision may or may not be correct but the other judgments are quite definite on the point.

The learned Counsel for the appellant can do no more than to rely upon an obiter dictum in Harnam v Gandu (1), which contains the observation that a claim of the kind dealt with where the bone of contention really is the title of the defendant to the dues received by him, might be framed in such a manner as not to be cognizable by a Small Cause Court as for instance, if the suit had been to establish an exclusive right as against the defendant to discharge the functions of the office to which the dues were payable during a specific period and for damages for infringement of that right. The present suits as framed, however, cannot be called suits to establish a right on the part of the plaintiff to discharge the functions of the office of lambardar. It is true that the plaintiff has inserted the word "harja" in describing the sums which he claims but that fact cannot help him.

I dismiss all the three appeals with costs.

City of Rangoon Municipal Act (VI of 1922), ss. 12, 14—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115—Reference to Small Cause Court—Revision—Agreement by Municipal Councillor to supply materials to Municipal contractor, effect of

The High Court has jurisdiction to revise a decision of the Chief Judge of the Rangoon Small Cause Court given on a reference under s. 14 of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act. [p. 780, col. 2; p. 781, col. 1]

A Municipal Councillor who was a brick manufacturer contracted to supply bricks to a contractor to whom the Municipal Corporation had given a contract to build a market. There was nothing to show that when the Corporation gave the building contract to the contractor the Councillor knew that the contract for the supply of bricks would fall to his share.

Held, that the Municipal Councillor was not disqualified by reason of the contract for the supply of bricks from sitting and acting as a Councillor. [p. 782, col. 1]

Civil revision from an order of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, in Municipal Reference No. 20 of 1925.

Mr. Eusoof, for the Petitioner.

Mr. Cowasjee, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Under s. 14 of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act, the Municipal Corporation of Rangoon made a reference to the Court of Small Causes, Rangoon, stating that Mr. M. A. Shakur was a Councillor of the Municipal Corporation and a large manufacturer of bricks; that, during the Councillorship of Mr. M. A. Shakur, the firm of Messrs. A. C. Martin & Co., obtained, from the Corporation, a contract for the erection of an extensive construction known as "part B" of the new Municipal Market, which would involve the use of a large quantity of bricks; and that Mr. M. A. Shakur had entered subsequently—If the terms of the reference given are actually correct—into a contract with Messrs. Martin & Co. to supply them with bricks and had been supplying bricks to Messrs. A. C. Martin & Co., to be used for the erection of the said buildings. The Municipal Corporation, therefore, desired the Small Cause Court of Rangoon to decide whether, under s. 12 (f) of the City of Rangoon Municipal Act, Mr. M. A. Shakur had become disqualified from being a Councillor, inasmuch as he had, directly or indirectly, a share or interest in the contract of Messrs. A. C. Martin & Co.

The learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court of Rangoon pointed out that s. 12 (f) reproduces the wording of a similar provision in the English Municipal Corporations Act of 1882. He admitted that reported cases on the question were relevant to the enquiry, but was of opinion that the question was one of fact, which, in each case, must be determined on its own merits. He quoted the words of Atkin, L. J., in Lapish v. Braithwaite (1) on the intention of the section, and held, on the principle enunciated by Atkin, L. J., that Mr. Shakur could not possibly be disinterested in the contract of Messrs. Martin & Co. on the ground that his advice as a Corporator on the quality of bricks used by Messrs. Martin & Co. would not be disinterested; and that his opinion, as regards the original giving of the contract to Messrs. Martin & Co., with the possible, if not probable, anticipation of a beneficial contract for the supply of bricks to come, could not also be disinterested.

On behalf of Mr. Shakur it is now urged that the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court erred in law in holding that the petitioner had a share or interest in the contract of Messrs. Martin & Co., with the Corporation; and that he failed to see that there was nothing on the record to show that any benefit flowed from the contract to the petitioner. It will be unnecessary to deal with the other grounds now taken in revision.

A preliminary objection was raised that under s. 14 of the Rangoon Municipal Act, the decision of the Chief Judge of the Rangoon Small Cause Court on the matter now under consideration was final and that, therefore, this Court has no jurisdiction.

I am unable to distinguish this case from the case of Mahommed Ebrahim Moolla v. Jandass (2), in which it was held that, although s. 18 of the Rangoon Rent Act enacts that the decision of the First Judge of the Court of Small Causes of Rangoon shall be final when disposing of a reference under the Rangoon Rent Act, this does not prevent the High Court from acting under s. 115 of the C. P. C.

(2) 70 Ind. Cas. 135; A. I. R. 1923 Rang. 94; 11 L. B. R. 387; 1 Bur. L. J. 138 (F. B.).

It is suggested that the reasoning on which the learned Chief Judge of the late Chief Court of Lower Burma based his decision in Mahomed Ebrahim Moolla v. Jandass (2)—a decision which was concurred in by the other two Judges who formed the Bench—had been impugned by the Full Bench judgment in Mohudeen v. Bukshi Ram (3); and that the present matter should, therefore, be referred for the decision of a Full Bench.

It is true that it can now no longer be held that the Rent Controller is a Court, but it does not, therefore, follow that the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, Rangoon, in deciding a reference, does not act as a Court, and I do not consider that the conclusions of the learned Chief Judge on this point have been in any way impaired by the recent Full Bench decision. The objection as to the jurisdiction of this Court can, therefore, not be sustained.

The learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court undoubtedly went beyond the record when he suggested that Mr. Shakur's opinion in connexion with the giving of the original contract to Messrs. Martin & Co. was likely to be impaired by his subsequent contract with Messrs. Martin & Co., to supply bricks.

In the absence of any evidence that Mr. Shakur had any knowledge that the contract for bricks with Messrs. Martin & Co. was likely to fall to his share—and it must be remembered that no allegation as to this has been made by the Municipal Corporation of Rangoon—no presumption could arise that Mr. Shakur's independence of opinion, when the original contract was being decided upon, was likely to be impaired.

As regards the principles on which the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court based his opinion that Mr. Shakur's Municipal probity was, in the future, likely to be tainted by the existence of the brick contract, it is perhaps unfortunate that the learned Judge, whose opinion he quoted, was in a minority in Lapish v. Braithwaite (1), in the course of which judgment Atkin, L. J.'s remarks appear.

The learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court was of opinion that certain circumstances might arise in the future in which Mr. Shakur would be placed in a position in which he would have to decide as to his duty to the Corporation or his duty to his own interests. There is nothing on the record to show how imminent that possibility is, and, in the event of the possibility being merely a remote one, the reasoning of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court loses most of its weight.

He has said that each case must be decided on its own merits as one of fact; but he himself has based his decision on surmise.

The case of Lapish v. Braithwaite (1) was a Court of Appeal case and the majority opinion in that case would not support the decision of the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court. The case of Norton v. Taylor (4), which was cited before the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court, but which was not adverted to in his judgment, a Privy Council case.

The principles on which the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in that case was based apply with equal or greater force to the case now under consideration.

In Norton v. Taylor (4), the circumstances were as follows—

Mr. Taylor was elected an Alderman of Sydney on 1st December 1902, and continued as such until 1st December 1908, when he was re-elected, being appointed Lord Mayor of Sydney on 9th December 1904. In 1902 the Sydney Municipality invited tenders from contractors for the execution of works, which included the supply of wood troughing. During the absence of Mr. Taylor and without his knowledge, his partner, in June 1902, entered into a verbal arrangement with Messrs. Henley & Co., for the supply of timber to them. In February 1903, Messrs. Henley & Co., tendered with others for the execution of works for the Municipality, and towards the end of 1904, Mr. Taylor's firm began to supply the timber to Messrs. Henley & Co.

Thus at the time when Mr. Taylor became an Alderman, and subsequently Lord Mayor of the Sydney Municipality, his firm was actually supplying timber to a firm which was engaged in setting up an electric lighting installation on behalf of the Sydney Municipality.

The argument which has been adduced by the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court to show how dangerous it was from the point of view of public policy for Mr.

(4) (1906) A. C. 378; 75 L. J. P. C. 79; 94 L. T. 591; 70 J. P. 433, 22 T. L. R. 450

Shakur to remain a member of the Rangoon Municipality would apply with greater force to the case of Mr. Taylor, who after a contract had been obtained by his firm for the supply of materials to the firm for setting up an electric lighting installation, became not only an Alderman, but actually the Lord Mayor of the Sydney Municipality. Nevertheless, the Lord Chancellor, in delivering judgment, said that he did not consider that Mr. Taylor was liable merely for supplying materials to the contractor who chose to buy them from him without any sort of understanding or arrangement that he should do so. "Courts of Justice," he added "in such cases would be vigilant to observe evidence of any concert to enable a civic officer to derive benefit from a contract". He concluded that, as there was no proof to show the liability of the respondent, the appeal to the Privy Council should be dismissed.

In the present case there is the same absence of evidence. Under the circumstances, therefore, I must set the order of the learned Chief Judge of the Small Cause Court aside.

On the reference I hold that Mr. Shakur is not disqualified from being a Councillor of the Municipal Corporation of Rangoon.

The costs of this reference, three gold mohurs, will be paid by the respondent Municipality.

JUDGMENT.

Devadoss, J.—The only question in this appeal is whether the decree-holder's application for execution is barred by limitation. The facts are briefly these: The respondents herein obtained a decree in O. S. No. 77 of 1903 on 28th September 1903. It is admitted that the application for execution in R. E. P. No. 323 of 1915 on 11th March 1915 was within time. The Court ordered delivery of the properties to the decree-holders on 21st July 1915. Three persons objected to the delivery. The objection was removed and item No. 3 was delivered to them on 27th March 1916 and the Court passed an order on that day "the 3rd item was delivered to the petitioners and the petition was recorded". A suit was filed by the obstructors and a temporary injunction was granted against the delivery of item No. 2. The suit was ultimately dismissed on 18th December 1916 and consequently the temporary injunction ceased to be in force from that date. The respondent filed an execution application on 3rd September 1921 and prayed for delivery of item No. 2 from the 10th defendant. Both the lower Courts dismissed the application as being barred by time and Jackson, J., held in Puttappa v. Puttanayya (1) that the application was within time. Hence this appeal by the 10th defendant.

The first contention is that the present application filed nearly six years after the application of 1915 is barred by limitation and it is urged that if this application is to be treated as an application to record the execution application of 1915 it should have been filed within three years of 18th December 1916 when the obstruction to execution was removed. The order of the District Munsif on the application of 1915 is "the third item was delivered to the petitioners and the petition was recorded." The question is whether the order amounts to a dismissal of the application. The present C. P. C. does not contemplate the passing of such an order. When an execution application is filed, if it is in order, it has to be disposed of on the merits; if it is barred by limitation or if the decree has been satisfied or if the applicant is not the decree-holder's assignee or his legal representative or if the decree-holder does not help the Court in executing the decree, or omits to do anything which the Court directs him to do, the application will have to be dismissed unless for proper reasons the Court adjourns the application. If the decree-holder is not able to do a thing allowed by the Court, the Court has to give him further time.

There is no provision of law by which the Executing Court could lodge the petition or record it, or strike it off for what is commonly called the statistical purposes. The Executing Court is bound to follow the procedure laid down in the Code and it cannot dismiss the application for the reason that it is long pending. If there is obstruction to the execution of the decree, the Court ought to adjourn the petition till the removal of the obstruction. It does not matter how long the obstruction continues. If a temporary injunction is issued against a Court executing a decree, the Court should stay its hands till the injunction is dissolved or till the suit in which it is granted is disposed of. If a permanent injunction is granted, against the execution of the decree, then the application for execution will have to be dismissed. If the Executing Court adjourns the petition from time to time, it will enable the decree holder to inform the Court as to the progress of the suit or proceeding in which the temporary injunction is granted and as soon as it is informed that the obstruction has been removed the Courts should proceed to dispose of the application according to law. It is to prevent dilatory proceedings and the long pending of execution applications that O. XXI, r 57 has been enacted. It lays upon the decree-holder the duty of helping the Court to execute the decree in his favour and if by reason of the decree holder's default the Court is unable to proceed further with the execution application, it shall either dismiss the application or for sufficient reasons adjourn the proceedings to a future date. Upon the dismissal of such an application the attachment shall cease. Under the old Code if the properties were once attached and the application for execution was subsequently dismissed, the attachment did not necessarily cease to have effect. If, instead of following the procedure laid down by the Code, the Executing Court orders that the petition be lodged or recorded, or struck off, such an order is not one sanctioned by the Code and it only amounts to this: petition is adjourned sine die. In this view the petition of 1915 is still on the record of the executing Court and the petition of 1921 is not a further application for execution, nor is it an application to revive that of 1915, for that is still on the file and no application is required to revive an application which is pending. It is an incorrect use of language to speak of reviving a petition which has not been dismissed. If the application has been improperly dismissed, an application would be necessary to revive it, viz., where the dismissal is not on the merits or for the default of the decree-holder but for the statistical purposes or on account of obstruction which would take time to remove. As the application of 1915 is still pending, the application of 1921 was only intended to call the attention of the executing Court to the fact that the execution application had to be proceeded with. The argument that if a Court lodges or records an execution application it should be regarded as pending and that there will be no time limit for asking the Court to proceed with it, obviously overlooks the fact that it was not the decree-holder that stood in the way of the execution being proceeded with but that the Court kept the matter pending without taking the necessary steps. When a Court keeps a matter pending, a party should not suffer by reason of the dilatoriness of the Court or by an action of the Court not sanctioned by the law. The remedy to prevent long pendency of applications for execution is to adjourn the applications from time to time and to have them brought up for orders. If that is done, the Court would be in a position to know whether the execution could be proceeded with or not, and as soon as the obstruction is removed the Court would be able to proceed with the execution according to law.

Great reliance is placed by Mr. T. M. Krishnaswami Iyer on Suppa Reddiar v. Avudai Ammal (2) where a Full Bench of this Court held that if an execution application is improperly dismissed, a subsequent application to revive or continue the application is governed by Art. 178 of the old Limitation Act corresponding to Art. 181 of the present Act. This case is distinguishable from the present, for here the application of 1915 was not dismissed. In Chalvadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah (3) the Executing Court dismissed an execution application without notice to the parties on the ground that the execution had been stayed by the order of the District Court. Miller and Munro, JJ., held that the order of dismissal amounted to no more than a direction to the officers of the Court to remove the proceedings from the pending list, and observed at page 76* :—

"that so long as proceedings initiated by the decree-holder are pending, his right to apply for their continuance accrues from day to day, i. e., on every day on which the Court does not suo moto continue them. The right to apply will then not be barred till three years have elapsed after the proceedings have ceased to be pending."

In Subba Chariar v. Muthuveeram Pillai (4) Benson and Abdur Rahim, JJ., follow the decision of Miller and Munro, JJ., in Chalvadi Kotiah v. Poloori Alimelammah (3). The principle of these cases is that if an execution application is pending, a subsequent application is not an application under Art. 181 but an application asking the Court to continue the proceedings in a pending application. The decision in Ayisa Umma v. Puttiyapurayil Kunnachunkandi Abdulla (5) to which one of us was a party is in point. It was held in that case that an order of dismissal of an execution petition for statistical purposes did not amount to a dismissal of the petition but that the petition should be considered as pending. I hold that the application of 1915 is still pending and, therefore, there is no bar to its being proceeded with.

In this connection I must express my strong disapproval of the practice of striking off or lodging an execution application for statistical purposes. The sooner it is stopped the better it would be for the parties as well as for the Courts executing decrees.

The next point urged is that the decree is not a joint decree and, therefore, the application of 1918 and of 1920 for execution against the 9th defendant do not save the bar of limitation, so far as the 10th defendant is concerned. In view of my decision on the first point it is unnecessary to deal with this point at length. The relevant portion of the decree is as follows:—

"Plaintiffs do recover from defendants Nos. 9 and 10 possession of the plaint property with buildings thereon described below; plaintiffs do recover from the 9th defendant future rental, etc., and plaintiffs do recover from the 10th defendant future rental, etc." The argument is that inasmuch as the decree directs the 9th and 10th defendants to pay mesne profits severally, it is not a joint decree but a several decree, and the application for execution against the 9th defendant cannot be treated as an application in a joint decree. Where a defendant is directed to pay a certain sum to plaintiff and another defendant is directed to pay a similar sum or a different sum to the plaintiff, the decree is not joint decree; but where a decree directs that A and B shall pay a certain sum to the plaintiff and further directs that A should pay another sum and that B should pay another sum and that A and B should bear their own costs, the decree is a joint decree against A and B. The decree is a joint decree if any one of the reliefs given in the decree is against the defendants jointly even though some other reliefs may be given against each defendant separately. Explanation I to Art. 182 of the Limitation Act is in these terms:—

"But where the decree or order has been passed.....jointly against more persons than one, the application, if made against any one or more of them, or against his or their representatives, shall take effect against them all."

This explanation should be liberally interpreted, and according to its terms the present decree is a joint decree. In Subramania Chettiar v. Alagappa Chettiar (6) it was held that where a decree awards mesne profits against A and B jointly and costs jointly against A, B and C, an application to execute the decree for mesne profits against A and B keeps alive the right to execute the decree for costs against C under part 2 of para. 2, Explanation 1 to Art. 179 of Sch. II to the Limitation Act. This case was followed by a Bench of the Calcutta High Court in Barada Kinkar Chowdhury v. Nabin Chandra Datta (7). The facts of that case are very similar to those of the present. The decree in this case is a joint decree and the present application against the 10th defendant is not barred by limitation by reason of the application of 1918 and 1920. I find this point against the appellant.

In the result the Letters Patent appeal is dismissed with costs.

Waller, J.—On the first point I agree that, on the authorities no other conclusion is possible, though the position does seem to me to be highly unsatisfactory if the decree-holder had presented an application directly after the close of the intervening litigation (as he should have been forced to do) and that application had been dismissed early in 1917, his present application would have been long out of time. Having done nothing to prosecute his first application for six years, he is, on the authorities, still in time.

Something should, of course, be done to put an end to this method of adjourning execution applications sine die. If they are held up by some other proceedings, they should be adjourned either for definite period of six months each, or till the date of the closing of the other proceedings.

On the 2nd point also I agree.

Application for revision of an order of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 23rd October 1925, in Civil Suit No. 2 of 1925.

Mr. G. R. Deo, for the Applicant.

Messrs. B. V. Pradhan and R. N. Padhye, for Non-Applicants Nos. 1 and 2.

ORDER.—In this case the Additional District Judge decided in his preliminary finding, dated 2nd March 1925, that the present plaintiff-applicant was liable to pay ad valorem Court-fees on his claim in view of the fact that he is admittedly in possession of part of the property in dispute but that his title thereto is denied: cf. Bhaddoo v. Saddoo (1). Thereafter, on his being ordered to pay ad valorem Court-fees, the applicant asked for permission to sue as a pauper; this application was dismissed by the Additional District Judge on 23rd October 1925.

The main contention urged on appeal is that the words "other than his necessary wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the suit" in the Explanation to r. 1, O. XXXIII, C. P. C., qualify the first part of the explanation as well. The contention seems an impossible one on a mere reading of the explanation in question. The latter words of the explanation only apply in a case where no specific Court-fee is prescribed. In the present instance it having been found that ad valorem Court-fees are exigible, the only question which arises is whether the applicant has sufficient means to enable him to pay the said Court-fee. If authority were required on this question, it is to be found in Krishna-bai v. Manohar (2).

On the question of whether the evidence on record justifies the conclusion that the applicant had no sufficient means to pay the Court-fee, it must be remembered that the onus to prove pauperism rests on the applicant himself. The oral evidence produced by him is worse than useless and, indeed, by implication injures his case. In addition to this there was a clear admission in para. 7 of the plaint that he was in possession of part of the property in suit, while in the plaintiff's rejoinder it was also admitted that he was living in one of the houses in suit and, as will be seen from the schedule attached to the plaint, the minimum value of any one of the seven houses concerned is Rs. 2,000.

The ratio decidendi in Bai Balagavri v. Motilal Ghelabhai (3) was entirely different. In that case Macleod, C. J., pointed out that the offer of the defendant to produce in Court certain ornaments and cash belonging to the plaintiff, the value of which was in excess of the sum required for payment of Court-fees, could not alter the position as regards the plaintiff's financial status at the moment when he applied for leave to sue as a pauper. It was, however, distinctly pointed out therein that it would still be open to the defendant to have the matter re-considered under r. 9 (b), O. XXXIII, C. P. C. Thus the decision quoted is in principle entirely opposed to the contention urged on behalf of the applicant, for in the said decision there was a clear admission that the cash and property in question, which formed part of the subject-matter, could be taken into account in calculating the plaintiff's means. I am unable to see how the decision in Chandan Singh v. Larman (4) gives the applicant the slightest help. That decision laid down that the ownership or possession of an occupancy holding does not operate as a bar to an applicant's suing in forma pauperis. The decision, in short, is entirely inapplicable to the facts of the present case.

It is true that in the present case the defendants have not been able to produce specific evidence as to the amount of the applicant's means, but the implications which arise from the oral evidence produced by the applicant himself, he, for example, stated in cross-examination that he is the sole heir of the property in suit and that its value is a lakh as well as his definite statements in the plaint and pleadings as to his being in actual possession of an appreciable part of the property in dispute, fully justify, in my opinion, the finding of fact arrived at by the Additional District Judge that the applicant is not a pauper in the sense that he has not sufficient means to file the suit in the ordinary way.

I, therefore, see no cause to interfere and dismiss the application. The applicant must bear the non-applicant's costs.

Appeal against the judgment and decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 25th September 1923.

Mr. Bisheshar Nath, for the Appellant.

Messrs Niamatullah, Motilal Saksena, Wasu Hasan and Naimullah, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal against an order of the Subordinate Judge of Bara Banki granting the plaintiff-respondent a decree for Rs. 10,037-80 with costs and interest on part of the decretal amount against the appellant Kallu Mal.

The appellant's father Jagmandhar Das on the 21st March 1917 executed in favour of the plaintiff-respondent a sale-deed in respect of a village Siroli Gang which he had himself acquired at a Court sale. The consideration entered in the sale-deed was Rs. 16,000 of which Rs. 6,000 was paid in cash, the balance Rs. 10,000 being left as a mortgage on the property in the vendor's favour. The mortgage deed provided for payment of Rs. 10,000 by instalments of Rs. 2,500 a year. The sale-deed contained a clause under which the vendor undertook to indemnify the vendee in the event of his losing possession of the village for any reason and empowering him to realize any money that might in such a contingency be found due to him from the vendor or his heirs and representatives together with costs and damages.

The plaintiff was placed in possession of the village and in the course of the next year paid Rs. 1,900 on account of the instalments due under the mortgage.

On the 19th March 1918 a suit was instituted against him by the brothers and nephews of the vendor Jagmandhar Das to have the sale set aside and to recover possession of the village on the ground that it was joint family property and that the sale was not for the benefit of the family. This suit was decreed and after an unsuccessful appeal the plaintiff-respondent lost possession of the village on the 15th of September 1920. On the 22nd of May 1922 he filed the present suit to recover the consideration, amounting in all to Rs. 7,900 which he had actually paid and for costs incurred in the litigation with the family of Jagmandhar Das and the expenses of the sale. In addition to this he claimed interest at 12 per cent. The total amount for which he asked was Rs. 12,617-12-3.

Jagmandhar Das died during the pendency of the suit and his son Kallu Mal, the present appellant, and a grand-son were substituted as his legal representatives. The lower Court has exempted the grand-son from liability.

The learned Subordinate Judge has granted a decree for the amount of consideration actually paid and for the greater part of the costs claimed in the plaint. He has allowed interest at 6 per cent. on Rs. 1,018-8-0 the amount of the costs which had so far been realized from the plaintiff.

Three grounds have been taken in appeal:—

1. That the lower Court ought to have deducted from the amount awarded to the plaintiff the sums which he realized from the village while he remained in possession of it.

2. That nothing should have been allowed to the plaintiff on account of expenses of litigation as at the time of the sale Rs. 2,000 was left with him for this purpose.

3. That in view of the finding that the sale-deed was not executed for legal necessity it should have been held that the joint family property would not be liable for the claim.

The second ground may be dealt with first. The consideration entered in the sale-deed was Rs. 16,000. The defendant, however, pleaded that the real consideration was Rs. 18,000 and that by an oral agreement between the parties Rs. 2,000 had been left with the plaintiff for payment of his expenses in the event of any litigation arising over the transfer. Such an oral agreement is obviously inadmissible in evidence under s. 92 of the Evidence Act. Further, the evidence which has been adduced to prove it is absolutely worthless. Even if accepted at its face value, it would prove no more than that five years before the sale took place there had been negotiations between the parties in which Rs. 18,000 was named as a price which the plaintiff would be willing to pay.

The first ground of appeal is the one on which most emphasis has been laid. The plaintiff was in possession of the village for about 3½ years from March 1917 to September 1920. During that period he enjoyed the profits and is alleged to have cut down large quantities of timber. In the written statement the defendant has estimated the amount realized by the plaintiff from the village at Rs. 9,774 4-0 and has claimed in para. 19 a set-off to this amount. The learned Subordinate Judge has held that the sum claimed is not an ascertained sum within the meaning of O. VIII, r. 6 of the C. P. C., and that the defendant has not paid any Court fee on it. He has further held that a claim for mesne profits might be made by the brothers and nephews of Jagmandhar Das who had the sale set aside. Accordingly, he has found that this money is not legally recoverable by the defendant in this case and has decided against him on this point without going into proof.

In the written statement this amount is claimed as a set-off, but it is contended for the appellant that it ought not to be so described but as a claim to deduction. In any case it has been held in numerous cases e g, Niaz Gul Khan v. Durga Prasad (1), Nand Ram v. Ram Prasad (2), Chisholm v. Gopal Chander Surma (3) and Kishorchand Champalal v. Madhowji Vishram (4), that O. VIII, r. 6, of the C. P. C., is not exhaustive but that Courts can allow an equitable set-off if the amount claimed arises out of the same transaction even though the sum claimed is not an ascertained sum. The transaction in the present case was the sale to the plaintiff and all the subsequent proceedings up to his dis-possession under the decree. The plaintiff has re-paid himself for his losses over the sale by the income which he had received from the land.

We are unable to accede to these propositions. This suit, as was held by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (5), is one under Art. 97 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act for money paid upon an existing consideration which afterwards failed. The transaction out of which it arose was a sale. Section 55, cl. (2) of the Transfer of Property Act provides that "The seller shall be deemed to contract with the buyer that the interest which the seller professes to transfer to the buyer subsists and that he has power to transfer the same." There was in addition a special indemnity clause in the sale-deed in suit. By virtue of the sale the plaintiff got possession of the land and the defendant received the purchase-money and had the use of it. It cannot be said that the plaintiff is liable to account to the defendant for the profits of the land during the period for which he held it as owner under the sale-deed. Nor can it be said that the claim for these profits is a cross-claim arising out of the same transaction such as could be described as a claim to an equitable set-off. Any claim to mesne profits might be made by the parties who had the sale set aside on the ground that it was voidable or void as against them but not by the vendor or his legal representative. We hold that the appellant is not entitled to set off anything against the plaintiff's claim.

With regard to the third ground of appeal the appellant's argument is that the sale was set aside as void. In effecting such a sale Jagmandhar Das committed an illegal act. For such an act his son, the present appellant, cannot be held responsible and is not liable for the consideration except to the extent of his father's assets which may be found in his hands. The joint family property is certainly not liable. The learned Subordinate Judge has passed a decree against the appellant Kallu Mal without any qualifications and has refused to decide against what property it can be executed. In this it is contended he was wrong.

For the doctrine that a sale of joint family property by father is void ab initio reliance is placed on Gayadhar Bikhsh v. Gauri Shankar (6). That, however, was a case of a mortgage and in it reference is made to the Privy Council ruling already referred to above [Hanuman Kamat v. Hanuman Mandur (5)] in which it was held with some hesitation that such a sale was not necessarily void but only voidable,

Durbar Khachar v. Khachar Harsur (7) and Ratan Lal v. Birjbhukan Saran (8) have been cited as instances in which a son was not held liable to pay debts due from his father on account of illegal acts committed by him. In the former, however, the father's act was a tort which it was found resulted in no benefit to the estate which came into the hands of the son, while in the latter the debt was a penalty incurred by the father and the Commentators on Hindu Law are all agreed that a son is not liable for fines inflicted on his father. These two cases are, therefore, readily distinguishable from the present case.

The test of liability would seem rather to be the purpose for which the father's act was committed than the legality of the act itself. In Natasayyan v. Ponnusami (9) was held that the sons were bound to discharge the debt due under a decree passed against their father for money dishonestly retained by him from persons to whom he was accountable in respect of it. It was observed in the judgment in that case that "the son is not bound to do anything to relieve his father from the consequences of his own vicious indulgences, but he is surely bound to do that which his father himself would do were it possible, viz., to restore to those lawfully entitled money he has unlawfully retained."

Again it is important to notice that the present case has been decided against the appellant as the legal representative of his father. It was instituted against Jagmandhar Das and it was only on his death that under O XXII, r. 4, of the C. P. C., the appellant was made a party as his father's legal representative. Under cl. (2) of that rule he could only make a defence appropriate to his character as legal representative of the deceased defendant. That is to say, he could put forward no plea which his father could not have put forward. The question of the property which can be affected by the decree is, as has been pointed out by the learned Subordinate Judge, one for the Execution Court to decide. Sections 52 and 53 of the C. P. C. are clear on this point.

The order of the lower Court is not as clearly worked as it might be in this respect. We amend it by making the decree one against Kallu Mal as the legal repre-

Under s. 78 of the Madras Village Courts Act, which empowers the Governor-in-Council to make rules to regulate the appointments or elections of Presidents and other members of the Panchayat Courts, it is a necessary part of this power of regulation that Government should appoint a Tribunal to enquire into and decide objections to such elections. [ibid.]

Under r 18 of the rules framed by the Madras Government under s. 78 of the Act objections to an election to a village panchayat have to be made within a prescribed time to the Revenue Divisional Officer, whose order, or that of the Collector, thereon is final and not liable to be contested by suit or otherwise. A Civil Court has, therefore, no jurisdiction to entertain a suit challenging the validity of such elections. [p. 791, col. 1.]

Revision petition to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada, in I. A. No. 203 of 1924, in O. S. No. 98 of 1924.

Mr. L. A. Govindaraghava Iyer, for the Petitioners.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This revision petition arises out of a suit filed in the Court of the District Munsif, Bezwada. The object of the suit was to obtain a declaration that the election of the defendants as members of the Panchayat Court of Bezwada was void. Pending the trial of the suit, the plaintiff applied for a temporary injunction restraining the defendants from entering upon their duties as panchayatdars. The District Munsif decided that he had jurisdiction to entertain the suit and proceeded to grant the injunction applied for. The result, but for the interference of this Court, might have been to deprive the citizens of Bezwada for several years of the services of a Panchayat Court. Rule 64 of the rules framed by Government under the Village Courts Act provides fully for the competency of the proceedings of Panchayat Courts despite defects in their constitution or in the qualifications of their members, so that it was as unnecessary as it was undesirable for the District Munsif to have passed the order he did.

Apart from that, we are of opinion that he had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit. Rules have been framed by Government under the Act to regulate the election of panchayatdars. Rule 18 (a) lays down that objections to an election shall be made within 7 days after the election to the Revenue Divisional Officer, who shall inquire and except in certain cases which are to be referred to the Collector, pass orders. Sub-s. (b) declares that the orders of the Revenue Divisional Officer and the Collector respectively shall be final and not liable to be contested by suit or otherwise. It does not appear that, the plaintiff made any attempt to comply with these rules. Instead of doing so, he has resorted to a method of contesting the election, which has been expressly excluded by the rules. The law on the subject has been stated in Kona Thimma Reddi v. Secretary of State for India (1) to which decision one of us was a party. It is this That when a public body has been created by a Statute and that Statute empowers Government to frame rules for its working, it is open to Government to create a forum for the purpose of deciding disputes as to elections directed to be carried out under the Statute and thereby to exclude the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts. The same principle is laid down in Bhaishankar Nanabhai v. Municipal Corporation of Bombay (2). "Where a special Tribunal, out of the ordinary course, is appointed by an Act to determine questions as to rights which are the creation of that Act, then, except so far as otherwise expressly provided or necessarily implied, that Tribunal's jurisdiction to determine those questions is exclusive. It is an essential condition of those rights that they should be determined in the manner prescribed by the Act, to which they owe their existence. In such a case there is no ouster of the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts for they never had any." In this case, the jurisdiction of the Courts has been excluded by express words.

It is, of course, argued that the rules framed under s 78 of the Act are ultra vires. That section empowers the Governor-in-Council to make rules to "regulate the appointments or elections of Presidents and other members of the Panchayat Courts." It is, we think, a necessary part of this power of regulation that Government should appoint a Tribunal to enquire into and decide objections to such elections.

The revision petition is allowed with costs throughout.

Bakhshi Tek Chand, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, R. B., and Sheikh Mahomed Munir, for Sheikh Niaz Mahomed, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The only question for decision in this second appeal is whether the lower Appellate Court has decided correctly that a certain lease is admissible in evidence and is not compulsorily registerable under s 17 (1) (d) of the Indian Registration Act.

The material portion of the lease is as follows.—

"Maian kih . . . ek kothri wa ek dalan bila saqf bamai sahn waqia Shahr Sialkot bakadar kiraya mabligh Rs 18 sal lekar ikrar mah bamah ada karte jawenge: ba adam adai kiraya murtahan mazkur ko ikhtiyar hoga kih makanat se bedakhil kar dewe"

It is argued by the learned Advocate for the appellants, that this lease unmistakably reserves a yearly rent within the meaning of s 17 (1) (d). For the respondents it is contended that on a proper construction, the lease reserves a monthly rent and is only a lease from month to month. I agree with the latter contention, because it is quite clear that no sum was to be paid as rent by the year and because the word "bakadar" used before the words "kiraya mabligh Rs. 18 sal lekar" is very indefinite.

In any case, I would say this is an instance to which the rule emphasised in Attra v Mangal Singh (1), applies, namely, that s 17 of the Registration Act must be strictly construed and that if there is any doubt whether a document is clearly brought within its purview, the benefit of the doubt must be given to the person, who wants the Court to receive the document in evidence.

I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs.

ORDER.

Spencer, J.—This was an application by the 4th defendant for mesne profits on the extent of land in the enjoyment of the plaintiff between the date of the decree in the first Court and the decision of the appeal. The matter was referred by the District Judge to a Commissioner to ascertain the amount of mesne profits due. The Commissioner directed the plaintiff to adduce her evidence first, on the ground that she had been in possession of the property and was thus in the best position to state how much profit she had obtained. The plaintiff's Pleader refused to open his case, upon which the petitioner's witnesses were examined and the case was closed. Meanwhile, the counter-petitioner (plaintiff) applied to the District Court to direct the Commissioner to record her evidence. The District Judge in an order on the interlocutory application decided that the Commissioner was right and refused the counter-petitioner's request.

The questions now before us are (1) whether the District Judge was right in giving the petitioner mesne profits upon 15 acres 42 cents of wet land and (2) whether he was right in not allowing the appellant an opportunity to adduce her evidence. As regards the extent of the land, the plaintiff's Pleader relies on an admission made by the 4th defendant in another suit, O. S. No. 393 of 1916, that she (plaintiff) was only in possession of 8 acres 47 cents, and he argues that the petitioner is not entitled to get mesne profits on a larger extent than what he admitted that she was in possession of. The circumstances under which the statement was made in the other suit have not been proved. The Judge relied on the extent as given in the delivery warrant and I think he was right in doing so.

On the second point, I am of opinion that the Commissioner and the District Judge were in error in requiring the plaintiff to open her case. Order XVIII, r. 1, C. P. C., which is applicable to miscellaneous proceedings through s. 141, lays down that the plaintiff has the right to begin unless the defendant admits the facts alleged by the plaintiff. In a case like the present, where the 4th defendant is the person claiming mesne profits, he is in the position of a plaintiff, as it is his petition that is the foundation of the proceedings and, if he adduces no evidence at all, no mesne profits can be awarded to him. Section 2, cl. (12), defines mesne profits as those profits which a person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might, with ordinary diligence, have received. The profit which a person actually received is a matter within the peculiar knowledge of that person and, under s 106 of the Evidence Act, the burden of proving the amounts actually received will lie on the person who received them; but the burden of proving the profits that the person in occupation might have received will lie on the person who claims them. The cases cited for the respondent, Brojendro Coomar Roy v. Madhub Chunder Ghose (1) and Dinobundhoo Nundee v. Keshub Chunder Ghose (2) do not go further than to show that it lies on the person who actually received mesne profits to show how much he received. These two cases are not authorities for saying that it is for the person in occupation to prove what mesne profits should be awarded, which is a very different thing. In Krishna Mohun Basak v. Kunjo Behari Basak (3) it was observed that there may be cases in which the defendants in a suit for mesne profits may properly be called upon to produce their accounts and to give information upon facts within their special knowledge, but that, under the provisions of s. 179, C. P. C. of 1879, which corresponds to O XVIII, r 1, the right to begin was with the plaintiff and the appellant's contention that it was for the defendant to begin was not entitled to any consideration.

The counter petitioner applied to the District Judge to be allowed to examine her witnesses and this application was refused. As the case cannot be satisfactorily disposed of without hearing the evidence on both sides, I think it is necessary that we should send the case back to the District Judge and ask him to record such evidence as the counter-petitioner may produce on her side and such further evidence as the petitioner may adduce on the same points.

Another error into which the Commissioner has fallen which has been referred to in the course of argument is the fact that he obtained information from certain persons whose evidence was not recorded by him. The Judge considered that this information was admissible. I am of opinion that the Commissioner was entitled to base his report on his local inspection and also upon the crop experiment conducted by him, but that any evidence that he took should have been recorded in writing. Order XXVI, r 10, requires that he should reduce to writing the evidence taken by him. Information given by witnesses which is not reduced to writing is not legal evidence upon which the Court can decide. If either of the parties desires to have the benefit of the statements of those persons from whom the Commissioner obtained information, they should now cite them as witnesses, otherwise, the District Judge should come to a conclusion on the rest of the evidence before him without any reference to such unrecorded statements. The District Judge is directed to return his revised findings within three months. Ten days for objections.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—I agree and I wish to add a few words. The plaintiff filed a suit for the recovery of certain property and obtained judgment. In pursuance of it she took possession of 15 acres and 42 cents of wet land with which we are mainly concerned. In appeal the judgment was reversed and the 4th defendant now seeks restitution of mesne profits. I may note that the 4th defendant by way of restitution already obtained 15 acres of wet land from the plaintiff. There is no need to refer to the dry land claimed so far as this judgment is concerned. The first question that had to be decided by the lower Court was whether mesne profits were to be given in respect of 15 acres of wet land or merely in respect of 8 acres which the plaintiff said was the extent of the land she had taken possession of from the 4th defendant. The lower Court, having regard to the plaint, the decree, the execution proceedings and the delivery warrant, came to the conclusion that the plaintiff was accountable for mesne profits in respect of 15 acres of wet land. The matter was fully dealt with by the District Judge and it is sufficient to say that the lower Court rightly allowed mesne profits in respect of 15 acres and odd so far as the wet land is concerned.

The next question is, what is the proper amount of mesne profits? The District Judge referred the matter of the ascertainment of the mesne profits to a Commissioner. This is, what the District Judge says in his preliminary order; "under O. XXVI, r. 9, C. P. C., I resolve to appoint a Commissioner to make a local investigation and ascertain the amount of mesne profits which may be awarded to the 4th defendant on the above mentioned extent of land comprised in the items specified in para. 2 supra after examining witnesses and receive any documentary evidence which the parties may produce before him." When the enquiry was taken up by the Commissioner the plaintiff contended that the 4th defendant should begin and adduce evidence on the ground that the burden was upon him to make out what the mesne profits allowable to him were. The Commissioner ruled that the plaintiff was the party who was to begin, thus implying that the burden of proof was upon the plaintiff. The plaintiff's Vakil declined to call evidence objecting to the ruling and allowed the 4th defendant to examine his witnesses. The latter's case was closed on 13th February 1921 when the plaintiff apparently made an application to be allowed to examine her witnesses at that stage. The Commissioner refused to request. Thereupon, on the 16th February 1921, the plaintiff applied to the District Court to be allowed to examine her own witnesses and the District Judge decided that the ruling of the Commissioner was right and rejected the plaintiff's application. Before I deal with the objection that relates to this, I may advert to certain other matters that transpired before the Commissioner himself.

The plaintiff desired to cross examine the 4th defendant with reference to a certain allegation made in the latter's written statement in another proceeding. The Commissioner disallowed the plaintiff's request and on application by the plaintiff to the District Judge, the order of the Commissioner was confirmed.

Exception is taken to the report of the Commissioner on another ground. Under the impression that he could gather information by instituting enquiries regarding the correct amount of mesne profits and act upon such information, he interviewed several rai-yots and others and collected their opinion and based his conclusions inter alia upon the information so obtained.

Next it is said that the Commissioner conducted certain experiments. He had the crop harvested. He confined himself to two small plots of land, and on the results obtained, he based his calculations in regard to the whole land. It has been argued before us that the Commissioner was wrong in adopting this procedure.

I shall deal shortly with these objections. In regard to the last objection it seems to be untenable. It has been pointed out that the two plots were selected out of the entire lands and it has not been shown that the yielding capacity of the other portions which are adjacent to the plots selected is different.

In regard to the objection that the Commissioner was wrong in refusing to allow the plaintiff to cross examine the 4th defendant in respect of a statement made by the latter in a previous proceeding, the objections must be upheld. Under s. 145 of the Evidence Act a witness may be cross examined as to previous statement made by him in writing without such writing being shown to him or being proved. Only if it is intended to contradict him by the writing his attention must, before the writing can be proved, be called to those parts of it which are to be used for the purpose of contradicting him. The Commissioner refused to allow cross-examination on the ground that the document which contained the previous statement was not produced. The plaintiff was entitled to cross examine the 4th defendant in regard to his previous statement without showing the latter the document. Only if it became necessary to contradict the 4th defendant his attention should be called to the writing. The Commissioner acted clearly wrongly in this respect. On another ground the Commissioner's order is sought to be justified. It is said that, when the preliminary order was passed, the Court refused to attach any weight to the 4th defendant's previous statement, and, for that reason, the Commissioner also was justified in refusing to allow questions to be asked in regard to it.

This position is entirely wrong. The Court when passing the preliminary order declined to make any inference from the previous statement as regards the extent of the land in the 4th defendant's possession. The writing was sought to be used before the Commissioner for altogether a different purpose, the purpose being to ascertain the probable yield.

The contention that the Commissioner was not justified in obtaining information in the absence of the parties must be upheld. The Court is not entitled to act on information received in the absence of the parties, nor can it base its judgment on its own knowledge of the facts. The law on this subject is well-settled, Lord Langdale, M R, observes in Harvey v. Shelton (4) "in every case in which matters are litigated, you must attend to the representations made on both sides and you must not in the administration of justice, in whatever form, whether in the regularly constituted Courts or in arbitrations, whether before lawyers or merchants, permit one side to use means of influencing the conduct and the decisions of the Judge, which means are not known to the other side." To say that the Commissioner could have come to the same conclusion on the other material before him is no answer. If the case is brought within the general principle that the Judge's mind may, by a possibility, have been biased, there is a sufficient objection. See Dobson v. Groves (5) and Walker v. Frobisher (6).

The only other point that remains to be dealt with has reference to the objection that the ruling of the Commissioner in regard to the right to begin is wrong. The District Judge expressed the opinion that the ruling was correct. The 4th defendant claims in this proceeding mesne profits from the plaintiff. Section 2, cl. (12) of the C. P. C., defines mesne profits thus.

"Mesne profits of property means those profits which the person in wrongful possession of such property actually received or might with ordinary diligence have received therefrom." It will be seen that mesne profits are not merely profits which a person in wrongful possession has actually received. The argument, therefore, that the amount of profits actually received is within the knowledge of the person in possession and that, therefore, the latter should, in the first instance, give evidence is clearly untenable. In a suit for mesne profits the burden is always held to be on the plaintiff to prove the amount. This is the recognized practice. The proceeding before us is really in the nature of a suit for mesne profits. No ground has been shown why this practice should be departed from. The Commissioner's ruling that the plaintiff should begin is tantamount to a decision that the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff. From the nature of the controversy, what the parties were disputing about, was not in regard to the right to begin but the duty to begin. I am of the opinion that the 4th defendant was bound to adduce evidence in the first instance regarding the amount of mesne profits.

[See Krishna Mohun Basak v. Kunjo Behari Basak (3)]

I, therefore, hold that the Commissioner as well as the District Judge were wrong in regard to this matter.

Now that we have decided that the ruling is incorrect what follows? It has been contended on behalf of the 4th defendant that the plaintiff's Vakil having refused to adduce evidence when he was called upon to do so, he should not be allowed an opportunity to examine his witnesses. This contention I am unable to understand. When the Commissioner gave a ruling, the plaintiff took a risk in refusing to accept it. But what is the extent of the risk that she took? She took the risk of the ruling of the Commissioner being ultimately pronounced to be correct. If it should be held to be correct by the final Tribunal the plaintiff not having examined her witnesses when she ought to have done so she would, of course, be completely debarred from adducing any evidence whatsoever. But this is the only risk that the plaintiff took. Immediately the 4th defendant's case was closed, the plaintiff's Vakil made an application that he should be allowed to let in evidence. The effect of our decision is that the plaintiff should give evidence only after the 4th defendant had closed his case. It, therefore, follows that the plaintiff should be allowed to examine her witnesses at the close of the 4th defendant's case. The following passage from Taylor on Evidence, Vol I, page 291, s. 388 has been relied upon by the 4th defendant: "The question respecting the right to begin is a matter of practice and regulation upon which the presiding Judge must exercise his discretion; and the Court will not interfere with his decision unless it be clearly proved, not only that the ruling on this point was manifestly wrong, but that it has occasioned substantial injustice." This passage would certainly be of assistance to the 4th defendant, if the plaintiff accepting the ruling of the Commissioner had given evidence in the first instance. In that case the Court, although it came to the conclusion that the ruling was incorrect, would not ordinarily interfere with the final decision in the suit. But here the plaintiff did not accept the ruling and refused to examine the witnesses before the 4th defendant gave evidence. In the circumstances, the passage relied upon has no bearing. I have disposed of all the objections taken to the procedure adopted by the Commissioner. I am of the opinion that it is clearly necessary to have another finding in regard to the amount of mesne profits.

I agree with the order that has been proposed by my learned brother.

In compliance with the order contained in the above judgment, the District Judge of Anantapur submitted the following

FINDING.—In A. A. O. No. 411 of 1921 the High Court has directed me "to record such evidence as the counter-petitioner may produce on her side and such further evidence as the petitioner may adduce on the same points," viz, on the question of the amount of mesne profits due from the one to the other, and to submit a revised finding

* * * * *

A sum of Rs. 295 4 0 has, therefore, to be deducted from the figure arrived at above, leaving Rs. 854-12-0. Interest at 6 per cent. per annum on the sum, from dates of realization up to the date of this finding amounts to Rs. 273-7-8—in all Rs. 1,128-3-8. My finding is that this sum is due from the counter petitioner to the petitioner in respect of mesne profits

These Appeals against Order Nos. 411 and 401 of 1921 coming on for final hearing after the return of the finding of the lower Court in Appeal against Order No. 411 of 1921, upon the issue referred by this Court for trial, the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—The District Judge's finding is based mainly upon the lease-deeds executed in respect of the lands upon which mesne profits accrued during the years that the defendant was out of possession. We have heard no good reasons for doubting the genuineness of these documents, and if they are genuine, they afford the best possible evidence of the amount of profits.

The counter-petitioner does not press her objections as to interest. We accept the District Judge's findings.

As regards the costs of the Commission and the costs of the proceedings in the District Court we think that each party may fairly be asked to pay a moiety of all the costs incurred in the lower Court including the Commissioner's fee, seeing that the Commissioner's enquiry was not wholly to the advantage of either side and that the petitioner in the result is to get about half of what he originally claimed.

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 401 of 1921 is dismissed with costs.

Civil Miscellaneous Appeal No. 411 of 1921 is allowed. Each side to pay and receive proportionate costs.

A cow shed erected on posts and having no foundations is a 'building' within the meaning of the word as used in the C P Municipal Act of 1903 [p 798, col 1]

Section 68 of the C P Municipal Act of 1903 refers to land and houses which are the property of the Government and can have no application in the case of a nazul plot leased out for a term of years for building thereon by a private individual [ibid]

Under s 66 of the C P. Municipal Act of 1903 a person whose application to a Municipal Committee for permission to build has not been sanctioned within a month of its being made has to remind the Committee of this fact and if after a further period of 15 days no reply is received, the Committee is to be deemed to have sanctioned the proposed building. This will not, however, entitle such person to erect another structure of an entirely different nature from that adumbrated in his application for permission to build [p 798, col. 2]

Section 66 of the C. P. Municipal Act of 1903 contemplates a sanction given by the Committee or Building Sub-Committee in its corporate capacity and it is not legal to dispense with a meeting of the body for obtaining a sanction by the expedient of obtaining the opinions of individual members by circulating the

Papers The omission to call a meeting is not curable by s 24 of the Act [p 799 cols 1 & 2]

The lease of a nazul plot by a Municipal Committee for the purpose of building thereon cannot supersede the statutory provisions contained in s 66 of the C P Municipal Act of 1903 relating to the grant of permission to build, and can in no way estop the Municipal Committee from refusing to allow any building to be erected on the plot or insisting on keeping it vacant, on grounds relevant under Ch VI of the Act [p 799, col 2]

Where a suit is partially decreed, and the plaintiff files an appeal against that portion of the decree by which his suit has been dismissed, the Appellate Court has no power to set aside the decree granted in favour of the plaintiff in the absence of an appeal or cross-objection by the defendant [p 800, col 1]

Appeal against a decree of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 28th April 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 84 of 1923

Mr M. R. Bobde, for the Appellant.

Mr R. N. Padhye, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant filed the present suit in the Court of the 2nd Munsif, Nagpur, for a perpetual injunction restraining the defendant-respondent, Municipal Committee of Nagpur, from removing the structure shown in the plan attached to the plaint and also for a direction to it to sanction the said construction. The suit was filed under the following circumstances —

Nazul plot No. 551 was put up to auction and the plaintiff being the highest bidder obtained a thirty years' lease thereof on payment of Rs 17 premium and an annual ground-rent of Rs 2-2 0. The lease applied for was for building purposes and it was let out for such a purpose, and under the terms thereof a dwelling house had to be commenced within one year from the date of the lessee obtaining possession and had to be completed within three years. On 10th January 1922 the plaintiff gave notice to the Municipal Committee of his intention to build a house according to a plan sent therewith. Having received no reply he sent a reminder on 11th February 1922. Thereafter, the defendant Committee on 23rd February 1922 informed the plaintiff that his plan was rejected as the locality was congested. The plaintiff appealed to the Municipal Committee which, by a resolution No. 130, passed on 19th August 1922, rejected the appeal. In the meantime, the plaintiff had erected on part of the site a cow-shed, and the Committee called upon him to demolish it. The plaintiff, under an apprehension that the Committee would enforce the said order, accordingly filed the present suit.

The pleas offered by the defendant-Committee are sufficiently clear from the 1st Court's judgment. On the issues which arose on those pleadings, the Munsif held that the lease granted to the plaintiff was for building purposes and that it was open to the lessor to forfeit the lease and claim re-entry if the terms thereof were not carried out. The Munsif further held that the Committee could refuse to sanction the construction of any particular building on the site in question on the ground that it would be prejudicial to the health, safety or convenience of the public or of people living in the vicinity, but, if this were done, the defendant-Committee would be liable for compensation. It was further held that the defendant-Committee was not estopped from declining to allow the building because of their consent given to the nazul officer that the site could be let out for building purposes. The cow-shed in question was further held to be a building and was unauthorised as well as undesirable in the interests of sanitation and public health. In those circumstances the Munsif passed a decree, dismissing the plaintiff's suit for an injunction and ordering him to remove the structure in question on payment of Rs. 70 compensation.

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the Additional District Judge, Nagpur, and that Court in the end dismissed the suit wholly and disallowed the Rs 70 compensation ordered to be paid to the plaintiff. This curious result was arrived at because the plaintiff in his appeal before the Additional District Judge urged that the first Court was wrong in awarding him compensation.

The plaintiff has now come up on second appeal to this Court. One or two preliminary points may at once be dealt with. An additional ground of appeal was filed on 2nd December 1925 to the effect that the cow-shed in question was not a building. It is said to have no foundations at all and merely stands on posts. It is true that in the old Municipal Act, which is the one applicable, there was no elaborate definition of "building" such as is contained in s. 3 (a) of the Municipal Act of 1922, but I find it wholly impossible to entertain this suggestion. As a glance at Ch. VI will show (cf., section 64) huts are regarded as buildings, and any contention that the cow-shed such as the appellant has raised is not a building seems to me contrary to the dictates of both Common Law and sense. What is a building, must always be a question of degree and circumstances, and in view of the number of houses in this country, which are erected of fragile materials apart from brick and stone work, there cannot be the slightest question, in my opinion, but that the structure in question amounted to a building for the purposes of the old Municipal Act. Decisions like those in Emperor v. Muhammad Yusuf (1) and Kamta Nath v. Municipal Board of Allahabad (2) are, it need hardly be said, entirely inapposite to the facts of the present case. In the one Allahabad case movable planks placed over a drain temporarily during the day were held not to constitute a building, and in the second one a canvas screen enclosing a certain space adjoining a house was similarly regarded. These cases, therefore, give the appellant no chance of success and it is perfectly clear that for the purposes of the Municipal Act of 1903 the cow-shed in question constituted a building.

Another contention offered on behalf of the appellant is, in my opinion, an equally useless one, that is, that as the nazul land in question is in reality the property of His Majesty, ss. 59 to 67 of the Municipal Act of 1903 had no application thereto. It seems to me that s. 68 cannot possibly protect the appellant in this connection. The reference is very obviously to land and houses which are the property of His Majesty, but the provision can have no application in the case of a nazul plot specifically let out for a long term of years for building thereon by a private individual.

As I have already pointed out, the plaintiff-appellant, first of all, gave notice of his intention to build on 10th January 1922: cf. D-1. Under s. 66 of the Municipal Act of 1903 the person giving such notice has to wait for a month. If at the expiry of that time no reply is received, he has to communicate once more with the Municipal Committee and draw their attention to the said fact. If after a further period of 15 days no reply is received, the Committee is to be deemed to have sanctioned the proposed building. In this connection I would, first of all, point out that the appellant in his notice (D-4), dated 11th February 1922 did not comply with either the spirit or the letter of s. 66 (3). On the contrary, in this notice he stated that as he had received no reply, he was proceeding with the erection of a hut on the spot in question. The hut erected by him was in no sense even approximately the house of which he had originally given notice to build. It was a kachcha erection or shed without foundations, for the erection of which no previous permission had even been solicited from the Municipal Committee. It is utterly impossible on any reasonable consideration to regard the said hut, as in any way, a commencement of the building for which he had originally applied for sanction. The original building was to be a pakka one with a foundation and was to be constructed of bricks. The cow-shed erected was of a totally different nature and, if the original building were ever to be constructed on the said site, it is perfectly obvious that the cow-shed would have first of all to be pulled down. The argument, therefore, that this cow-shed may be regarded as a commencement of the permanent building seems to me to be utterly beside the point and to be quite opposed to the facts on the record. From this point of view alone the appellant's case was obviously bound to fail, for it is perfectly clear that, without even soliciting permission he proceeded to build a structure of an entirely different nature from that adumbrated in his application of 10th January 1922. D-4, as I have already shown, cannot, in the circumstances, be regarded as a reminder within the meaning of s. 66 (3) of the Municipal Act of 1903. On the contrary, it was a document which amounted to an express defiance of the Municipal Committee that the appellant was forthwith proceeding with the construction of an utterly unauthorised building. From this point of view, therefore, the Municipal Committee was fully justified in treating the erection in question as one built without sanction and in ordering its demolition under s. 66, sub-s. (5).

On receipt of the notice (D-4), the Municipal Committee issued a warning (D-3) to the appellant not to proceed with the chhappar, while on 23rd February 1922 the appellant was informed that his request for building the house in question was refused on the ground that the site and the locality were congested.

While, on the view I have already taken above, the appellant was bound to fail in any event, it may be of interest to examine the case on the assumption of a very forced and fanciful view of the facts of this case that the cow-shed might be regarded as a commencement of the original building for which sanction was asked on the 10th of January 1922. In this connection my attention has been drawn to para. 2 of the written statement of the respondent filed in the lower Appellate Court on 14th March 1924. It is urged that the procedure adopted in rejecting the appellant's application was illegal in that admittedly there was no meeting of the Building Sub-Committee to whom the powers of sanction in this connection have been delegated and that all the Engineer did was to circulate the papers to a majority of the members of such Building Sub-Committee who endorsed on them their opinions that the application should be refused. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that this procedure was invalid and that, in the circumstances, the appellant was entitled to assume that the building was sanctioned. The lower Appellate Court has held that s. 24 of the Municipal Act of 1903 would have cured this irregularity. It has been urged on behalf of the appellant that the Building Sub-Committee as such passed no order and that there were, therefore, no proceedings taken under the Act, which would be curable under s. 24 of the Act. From the legal point of view I am of opinion that this contention urged on behalf of the appellant is, undoubtedly, correct. Section 66 obviously contemplates a sanction given by the Committee or Building Sub-Committee in its corporate capacity and it is not possible to dispense with such sanction given at a meeting of such Committee or Sub-Committee by the expedient of circulating the papers to individual members. For obvious reasons it would seem to me highly inexpedient that any such idea should prevail. On any question members consulted individually might well agree that the application should not be sanctioned, but, if they met together, it is perfectly possible that, as a result of the arguments or views of some or any of the members of the Committee or Sub Committee, when meeting and discussing the question together, such a body might well have taken a different view of the matter. In my opinion, therefore, although this finding on the legal question involved does not affect the final fate of the appeal, the lower Appellate Court was wrong in thinking that the defect in question was curable or cured by s. 24. I may further point out in this connection that when the doing of any act on behalf of the Municipal Committee becomes emergent, a special provision therefor exists in s. 22 of the Act of 1903.

Another argument was offered on behalf of the appellant to the effect that the defendant-Committee being a party to the lease given by Government in respect of the site in question a lease given for house building purposes it was incompetent to the Committee to refuse to sanction a construction on the site. This argument seems to me one which it is wholly impossible to accept and were there any basis whatever for it, it would lead to a reductio ad absurdum in Municipal administration. The lease in question can in no way supersede the statutory provisions contained in s. 66, and the letter (P-5) in no way estops the Municipal Committee from refusing to allow any building on grounds relevant under Ch VI of the Act. The fact that the Committee were on 19th August 1921 willing to approve of the lease of the land for building purposes, would in no way estop them from refusing to sanction any particular erection thereafter, and indeed, if circumstances had changed and it became in their opinion inexpedient to allow any building whatever on the site. I am equally of opinion that they would be entitled to enforce their later opinion, although in this instance the necessary concomitant would be the payment of compensation to the lessee in question.

It has further been urged on behalf of the appellant that the action of the Municipal Committee was in this case capricious and arbitrary, that they were in reality showing favouritism to S. N. Kulkarni who had originally applied for the lease of the site in question and it has been urged that on this ground this Court would be entitled to interfere: cf. Taluk Board, Bandar v Mallikarjuna Prasada Naidu (3). In this connection it has been urged that in April 1922 Kulkarni, who lives in an adjoining house, was allowed to erect a latrine on the site. For my own part, I am wholly unable to find any such circumstances as would give rise to any suggestion of capricious or arbitrary action in this connection. Latrines are a necessary evil in the case of the houses of persons of some standing who own or occupy houses in the Nagpur City. The two latrines which Messrs. Kulkarni and Deokar were allowed to build were apparently erected on the least objectionable site possible and it is a very different proposition indeed to suggest that because such conveniences have to be provided, however, intrinsically undesirable they may be, the plaintiff is equally entitled to erect a cow-shed on the open plot in the congested locality in question. I see not the slightest reason for holding in favour of the appellant on this point.

On the main grounds, therefore, the plaintiff-appellant must clearly fail in his suit. Even if there was a flaw in the way in which the Municipal Committee dealt with the appellant's application, he clearly failed to comply with the fundamental provisions of s. 66 (3) of the Municipal Act of 1903 in proceeding with the erection of the cow-shed as announced in his notice of 11th February 1922.

The last point to be considered was the disallowance by the lower Appellate Court of the compensation of Rs. 70 to be paid to the appellant. On this point I think the procedure of the lower Appellate Court was undoubtedly incorrect. No cross-objection had been filed by the Municipal Committee with reference to the allowance of Rs. 70 compensation, and I think such a cross-objection was a necessary precedent to the said relief having been granted: cf., Rangamlal v. Jhandu (4). It is true that in para. 4 of the petition of appeal to the lower Appellate Court it was alleged that the Munsif was wrong in awarding compensation, but what the appellant was obviously tilting at therein, was the fact that his main relief had been refused and that he had only been granted such compensation.

The decree of the lower Appellate Court will, therefore, be modified by the restoration of the provision for compensation contained in the decree of the first Court. On other grounds the appeal fails. As regards costs in view of the partial success and failure of the appellant in this Court I order the costs in this Court to be borne by the parties as incurred. Costs in the lower Courts will be borne as already ordered.

A. No. 857 of 1924, and C. M. P. No. 882 of 1924, respectively in O. S. No. 704 of 1923.

Mr. Chenchiah, for Mr. P. Venkatramana Rao, for the Petitioners.

Mr. V. Suryanarayana, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—In this case a certain suit, O. S. No. 704 of 1923, was filed in the Court of the Principal District Munsif of Ellore, for the recovery of certain properties. It was alleged that the suit had been under-valued and the District Munsif held a preliminary enquiry into the valuation of the items of property involved and came to the conclusion that the market value was over Rs. 5,000. The plaint was ordered to be returned to the plaintiff who was given 7 days' time for presentation to the proper Court. This order was made on the 31st March 1924. On the 1st April 1924 the plaintiff presented a petition asking for 15 days' time for filing additional stamp for the plaint. No notice of this application was given to the defendants and on the 2nd April the Principal District Munsif purported to review his decision of the 31st March and granted the prayer in the petition of the 1st April giving the petitioner 7 days' time in which to pay the Additional Court-fee. I am of opinion that as regards C. R. P. No. 500 of 1924 the learned District Munsif was clearly not entitled to review his order at least without notice to the other side. Therefore C. R. P. No. 500 must be allowed with costs.

A more important question arises in C. R. P. No. 501 of 1924. On the 3rd April, one day after the petition for review above referred to, the plaintiff asked to be allowed to withdraw his claim to 4 items of properties mentioned in the plaint schedules and to amend the plaint in such a manner that it would conform to the monetary jurisdiction of the District Munsif's Court, and the District Munsif by his order of the 26th April 1924 held that no final order had been passed on the plaint and that by his order of the 2nd April the District Munsif intended to set aside the original order for the immediate return of the plaint. The petition was allowed and the plaintiff was permitted to withdraw his claims and amend his plaint accordingly. The question is, had the learned District Munsif jurisdiction to pass the order he did? In passing I may state that I am very doubtful whether the District Munsif was right in his view as to the effect of the order of the 2nd April and I am more than doubtful as to the correctness of his view that no final order has yet been passed on the plaint. In this connection, I am pressed with two decisions of the Court. The first is the one reported in Karumbar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappundaram (1) which is a decision by Mr. Justice Abdur Rahim in a case which I am bound to say, strikes me as very similar to the present. In that case there was an enquiry as to the value. It was found that the suit was under-valued and the plaint was returned for presentation to the proper Court. The plaintiff amended his plaint by correcting the valuation and striking off some of the properties so as to bring the claim within the jurisdiction of the District Munsif. The District Munsif thereupon re-admitted the plaint and the question for decision was, had he power to do so. The learned Judge decided that he had and his decision was confirmed in Letters Patent appeal by a Bench of this Court. On the other hand, there are observations of Sadasiva Iyer, J., in Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal (2) in the course of which he says: "It also stands to reason and principle that a Court which has no jurisdiction over a suit cannot pass any valid orders in such a suit except orders which the Statute expressly empowers it to pass, such as the order returning the plaint to be presented to the proper Court which it is specifically empowered to pass by O. VII, r. 10, and orders as to costs incurred before it, as to which also there is a special provision in s. 35." And again, "the Court of first instance had no jurisdiction to pass any judicial order in the suit after it had once arrived at the conclusion that the suit as brought was beyond its jurisdiction except to return it for presentation to the proper Court." The other learned Judge, (Oldfield, J.) does not base his judgment on these grounds. Therefore, although if I may say so, I am in entire agreement with the extracts that I have quoted from the judgment of Sadasiva Iyer, J., and if the matter were res integra to me I should certainly decide it in the same manner, I feel that I cannot distinguish the facts of the present case from Karumbar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappundaram (1). Mr. Chenchiah endeavoured to do so by saying that what we have in Karumbar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappundaram (1) was practically two suits. The plaint was returned, then the matter dropped and then it was amended and presented again as an entirely fresh matter. I do not think that the statement of the facts as narrated by the learned Judge in his judgment bears out this distinction. The case was referred to by Mr. Justice Sadasiva Iyer and distinguished by him in Kannusami Pillai v. Jagathambal (2). It may be that it was distinguished on something like the same lines as I have indicated. The learned Judge in distinguishing the case seems to lay stress on the fact that the plaintiff put in an unnecessary petition stating that he relinquished his claim to the first property. On the whole and not without hesitation, I have come to the conclusion that I am bound by the decision in Karumbar Pandrapandaram v. Audimula Ponnappundaram (1) and that, therefore, this civil revision petition must be dismissed with costs.

Proceedings under O. IX, C. P. C., relate to questions independent of the suit, to be determined on evidence as to matters quite irrelevant to the suit and are, therefore, covered by s. 141, C. P. C. Order IX, therefore, applies to applications made under O. IX itself, so that where an application to restore a suit is dismissed for default, a petition lies under O. IX to set aside the dismissal.

Petition, under s. 115 of Act V of 1908, praying the High Court to revise an order of the Court of the District Munsif, Avanigadda at Masulipatam, in M. P. No. 1271 of 1923, in I. A. No. 2641 of 1922, in O. S. No. 825 of 1921.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana Rao, for the Petitioner.

Mr. P. Somasundaram, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The only question that arises here is whether O. IX applies only to suits or whether, by reason of s. 141, it also applies to applications made under O. IX itself. In this case an application to restore a suit was dismissed for default and a subsequent petition was filed to set aside that dismissal. The subsequent petition has been allowed and the original petition under O. IX is now under enquiry.

The contention for the appellant is that the Court has no jurisdiction to treat the second application as one to which O. IX is applicable. In Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (1) it was laid down by the Privy Council that s. 647 of the Code of 1882, which is equivalent to s. 141 of the present Code, included original matters in the nature of suits such as proceedings in probates, guardianships and so forth and did not include executions. The question at issue in that suit was whether execution petitions were included in that section, and it was definitely laid down that they were not so included. What was held to be included were original matters in the nature of suits but this statement is not exhaustive. It is argued that an application under O. IX is not an original matter in the nature of a suit. It certainly is not a petition in a suit, for the suit is no longer on the file. It relates to a question quite independent of the suit and one which has to be determined on evidence as to matters which would be quite irrelevant to the suit. In this sense it seems to me to come within the meaning of the Privy Council's observations that s. 647 includes original matters in the nature of suits. This view has been taken by the Calcutta High Court in Bepin Behari Saha v. Abdul Barik (2) by the Lahore High Court in Abdul Rahman Shah v. Shahana (3) and by the Bombay High Court in Lallabhai Vajeram v. Bai Magangavri (4). There is one authority to the contrary, i. e., Ramgulam Singh v. Sheo Deonarain Singh (5) which purports to follow a Full Bench of that Court reported at page 135* of the same volume [Bhubaneswar Prasad Singh v. Tilakdhari Lal (6)] but that Full Bench ruling in effect only repeated the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v. Fakir Ullah (1) where the question for determination was whether an execution petition would come under O. IX. The Division Bench which purported to follow the Full Bench ruling have not discussed the question at length but merely purport to follow the Full Bench which, with all respect, hardly covered the point in issue. With all respect, I agree with the rulings I have mentioned above and hold that the Court had jurisdiction to entertain this petition.

The revision petition must, therefore, be dismissed with costs.

Application for revision against the decision of the District Judge, Wardha, dated the 2nd March 1925, in Civil Suit No. 51 of 1923.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Applicant.

Mr. M. B. Niyogi, for the Non-Applicants.

ORDER.—A house belonging to Lakshman, the first opponent of this application for revision, was put to sale in execution of a decree against him by the second opponent Vishwanath, and was bought by the applicant Ramchandra on the 3rd of July 1924. On the 9th of the same month the judgment-debtor Lakshman lodged an objection under r. 90 of O. XXI of the C. P. C. based on allegations of irregularities in publishing and conducting the sale. The enquiry went on till the 20th of December 1924 on which day orders on the objection were to have been passed. It is mentioned in the case that in the interval the judgment-debtor had sold the house to one Sayaji, but that fact does not seem relevant.

On the 20th of December, nearly six months after the sale, a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase money was deposited in Court, and the decree-holder and the judgment-debtor informed the Court that the decree had been fully satisfied. The learned Judge, in accordance with the decision in Nilkanth v. Yeshwant (1) then dismissed the application for execution, thereby setting aside the sale. The appeal of the auction-purchaser Ramchandra was dismissed by the District Judge, who followed the same ruling, as he was bound to do, and Ramchandra has now applied to this Court for revision of that judgment.

Though the decision of the matter in Nilkanth v. Yeshwant (1) is undoubtedly correct, I am, with all respect, unable to agree with the reason stated for it. In that case the auction-sale was held on the 3rd of November 1919, and on the 17th of that month the decree-holder alone appeared in Court and said that he had given the judgment-debtor two months' time for payment. On the same day a sum equal to five per cent. of the purchase-money was deposited in Court, whether by the decree-holder or the judgment-debtor is uncertain and also immaterial. The contract between the objector and judgment-debtor would probably have to be regarded as full payment of the decree for the purposes of cl. (b) of r. 89 (1) of O. XXI, but anyhow the balance was paid on the 25th of November 1919, which is well within 30 days of the sale.

In that case it was held in the lower Appellate Court that as the application under r. 89 had not been made by any person having an interest in the property, the sale could not be set aside and the Court was bound to confirm it. Kotval, A. J. C., was inclined to the view that an application by the judgment-debtor was implied in what actually took place. But he refrained from deciding the case on that ground because there was another reason which gave the same result. My learned brother said: "Where a decree is admitted by the decree-holder to be satisfied it ceases to exist as a decree capable of execution. The very foundation of the powers of a Court to execute a decree, namely, the existence of a decree capable of execution, having disappeared, the Court's powers in execution also cease, and confirmation of the sale which is a proceeding in execution cannot be ordered: vide Khushalchand v. Nandram (2) and Mul Chand v. Mukta Prasad (3)". It may be mentioned that the first of these cases is also published in Volume 35 of the Bombay Series of the Indian Law Reports at page 516.

A decree is certainly dead as soon as it is satisfied as between the parties to it, but that cannot be allowed to affect the vested rights of others. If that view of the law is correct in its application to the present case, or as applied to that in which it is stated, then Art. 166 of Sch. I of the Limitation Act is a dead letter with reference to r. 89 (1) of O. XXI of the C. P. C., and indeed so is cl. (a) of that rule; at any time before a sale is confirmed, it may, or rather must, be set aside on payment of the decretal money, even after the expiry of the period of 30 days from the sale and without payment of the sum mentioned in cl. (a) of r. 89 (1).

The wide proposition stated does not seem to me to be supported by the rulings cited nor by that in Sonba v. Ganesh (4) in which Stanyon, A. J. C., cited with approval the Bombay case mentioned by my learned brother in Nilkanth v. Yeshwant (1). In Mul Chand v. Mukta Prasad (3) the Allahabad case mentioned, the decree was set aside in appeal some months after the sale, and the purchaser was the decree-holder himself. The latter fact, as will be shown later, distinguishes that case from this even more completely than the former.

Khushalchand v. Nandram (2), the Bombay case mentioned, was concerned with the proceedings of a Collector in execution, and a sale of the property in his hands by the judgment-debtor. The statement of the proposition under discussion here was obiter and the basis of the decision was the view that the re-transfer of the case to the Civil Court by the Collector must relate back to the date on which satisfaction of the decree was certified to him, because on such certification he could do nothing else but re-transfer the case. I have in another case respectfully dissented from even that view, but anyhow the decision has no bearing on the present case.

In Sonba v. Ganesh (4) the only reference to the Bombay case is as follows: "The moment the decree is satisfied in or out of Court, the Collector's power is at an end, and the incompetency to transfer created by s. 325-A of the 1882 Code ceases: Khushalchand v. Nandram (2)." This was a casual remark going beyond the matter for decision in the case itself and, taken literally, beyond the Bombay ruling.

But the question was settled long ago by the judgment of the Privy Council in Zain-ul-Abdin Khan v. Muhammad Asghar Ali Khan (5) decided in the same year and reported in the same volume of the Indian Law Reports as the Allahabad case that has been discussed. It is, therefore, not necessary to submit to a Bench the question of the correctness of the officially published ruling of this Court in Nilkanth v. Yeshwant (1). In that case their Lordships held that sales, made in execution of a decree which was set aside in appeal afterwards, must hold good if they are made to a person who was not a party to the decree, but not if they are made to a decree-holder or a person claiming under him.

If then the death of a decree by its being set aside in appeal cannot be allowed to interfere with a sale under it to a purchaser who was no party to it, still less can it do so when its death is due only to its satisfaction. The order of the lower Appellate Court will accordingly be set aside and the sale will be confirmed. All the applicant's costs in all three Courts will be paid by the opposite party. No costs were allowed to the applicant in either of the Courts below, as the application for execution was dismissed in the first Court and the appeal was dismissed without notice to the respondents in the lower Appellate Court, so that no Pleadar's fee has been stated. The applicant, however, did engage a Pleadar in both the Courts below, and the ordinary

Negotiable Instruments Act (XXVI of 1881), ss 28, 29—Pro-note executed by guardian of minor—Personal liability, whether excluded—Pro-note executed as executor—Liability, extent of—Sections 28 and 29, difference between

On a negotiable instrument only the executant is liable. The question that has in each case to be determined is, on a fair construction, who is the executant of the document? Is the executant in truth the principal although the agent's signature appears on the bill or is the executant the agent although the principal is named? The intention may be inferred from the whole of the instrument [p 806, col 1]

Under s 28, Negotiable Instruments Act, an agent signing a pro-note is prima facie liable on the note but he may exclude his liability by indicating on the note that he signs as agent or that he does not intend to incur personal liability. In each case the question is, are the words sufficiently unequivocal to indicate that the agent has not made himself personally liable? [ibid]

Section 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act in terms applies only to the single case of principals and agents, but the principle of the section is applicable to the cases of guardians and wards [p 807, col 1.]

Where the guardians of a minor who executed a pro-note on behalf of the minor recited in the body of the note that the debt was due by the minor's father and that they were appointed guardians by him but in the operative part they made themselves personally liable

Held, that their personal liability was not clearly and unequivocally excluded and the executants were personally liable. [ibid]

The language of s 29, Negotiable Instruments Act, is widely different from that of s. 28 of the Act. Firstly, under s 28 it is sufficient to indicate that personal liability is excluded, but under s. 29 there must be express words limiting the liability and secondly, under s. 28 the agent's liability may be altogether excluded whereas under s 29 the executor's liability can only be limited to the extent of the assets [p. 807, col 2]

The applicability of s 29, Negotiable Instruments Act, does not depend on the question whether the executant is in fact the legal representative of a deceased person. It is enough if the note purports to have been executed by the executant in his capacity as legal representative, such as that of an executor of the estate of a deceased person [p 807, col. 2]

A person who executes a pro-note as executor appointed under a Will, is personally liable thereunder, unless he expressly limits his liability to the extent of the assets received by him as such [p 807, cols 1 & 2]

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—These three appeals have been filed against the judgment of Krishnan, J. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are the executants of the promissory notes in question. In some notes they described themselves as the guardians of the first defendant, in others as executors under his father's Will. The first defendant was and continues to be a minor. The second and third defendants are respectively the maternal uncle and the brother-in-law of the first defendant. The plaintiffs in these suits asked for a decree against the first defendant to the extent of the assets of his father's estate and against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 personally. It is not necessary to say what the decision of the Trial Court was but the Subordinate Judge dismissed the suits against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 and passed decrees against the first defendant to the extent of the assets of his father. The plaintiffs preferred second Appeals to the High Court and Krishnan, J., in all the three suits passed decrees against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. As the first defendant had not appealed to the High Court, the decree against him was not disturbed. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 have filed the present Letters Patent Appeals. They contend that they are not liable on the promissory notes.

On a negotiable instrument only the executant is liable. This proposition admits of no doubt. The question that has in each case to be determined is on a fair construction, who is the executant of the document? As Chalmers says, "It is often difficult to determine whether a given signature is the signature of the principal by the hand of an agent, or the signature of the agent naming a principal". Section 22, Law of Bills of Exchange, 8th Edition, page 91.

The law relating to negotiable instruments differs from the ordinary law of contracts in several respects. The liability must be determined on the wording of the note and in each case the question is:—Is the instrument so drawn in form as to make the executant liable or the principal liable? In other words, who is the real executant of the document? Is the executant in truth the principal although the agent's signature appears on the bill or is the executant the agent although the principal is named?

So far as the Indian Law is concerned, s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act enacts the rule of law applicable to agents. The material portion of the section runs thus:—

"An agent who signs his name to a promissory note...without indicating thereon that he signs as agent, or that he does not intend thereby to incur personal responsibility is liable personally on the instrument".

Under this section an agent signing the note prima facie is liable but he may exclude his liability by indicating on the note that he signs as agent or that he does not intend to incur personal liability. In each case the question is, are the words sufficiently unequivocal to indicate that the agent has not made himself personally liable?

Section 28 of the Indian Act is in one respect strikingly different from s. 26 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. The English Act requires that the words indicating that the personal liability is excluded must be added to the signature itself. The Indian Act is less rigorous and from the whole of the instrument the intention may be inferred.

The most useful case on the subject is Firm of Sadasuk-Janki Das v. Kishan Per- shad (1). Their Lordships of the Judicial Committee point out that as the document passes from hand to hand it is of the utmost importance that the responsibility is made plain and can be instantly recognised. The English theory of bills, as Chalmers observes in his introduction to the work already quoted, is the banking or currency theory and in England, bills have developed into a perfectly flexible paper currency. It follows, therefore, that as the note passes from hand to hand the real name of the person liable upon it must be disclosed.

In the light of this principle, I shall first examine the promissory note in Letters Patent Appeal No. 66 of 1924. The note is signed by the two guardians. Their representative character is not disclosed in the signature. In regard to the body of the note, the following points are no doubt in favour of the appellants:

(1) The debt is mentioned as having been originally due by the minor's father.

(2) It is stated that their ward is a minor and that they were appointed guardians.

But the language in the opening portion of the note is ambiguous. It is susceptible of two meanings; literally it means that the guardians are executing the note because their ward is a minor. What may be said to be the idiomatic meaning is, that the guardians are executing the note on behalf of the minor.

In the operative part of the note, they make themselves unconditionally liable. They said "We shall pay, either of us on demand". Who are referred to by this word 'We'? The words in the preamble being doubtful and there being no ambiguity in regard to the signature, the proper view to take is, that any one reading the note will reasonably connect the word "we" with the names appearing at the bottom of the note.

It is true that the debt of the minor's father is mentioned in the body of the document. But, on this, does it necessarily follow that the executants are not personally liable? Supposing the guardians had been pressed for payment of the debt and they undertook to pay the amount personally themselves, can it be said that such a note as the present could not have been passed? In my opinion, a mere allusion to the pre-existing debt does not clinch the question. On the whole, I think that the wording does not clearly and unequivocally exclude the personal liability of the executants and that Krishnan, J.'s decision in regard to this note must be upheld.

Before passing on to the next note, I desire to make one observation. Unlike s. 26 of the English Act which deals generally with the liability of persons signing in any representative capacity, s. 28 of the Indian Act in terms applies only to the single case of agents and principals. But it seems to me that there is no reason to make the scope of the section so narrow and indeed their Lordships of the Judicial Committee in the case already quoted, Firm of Sadasuk Janki Das v. Kishan Pershad (1), first state the principles as of general application and then proceed to say that the sections of the Negotiable Instruments Act contain nothing inconsistent with those general principles. In Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Muthuswami Ayyar (2) and the unreported Appeal No. 306 of 1922 on the file of the High Court, the principle of s. 28 is tacitly assumed to be applicable to cases of guardian and ward.

Now I pass on to the note in Letters Patent Appeal No. 65 of 1924. This bears a very close resemblance to the note which I have just dealt with. But there is a striking difference in one particular, that in the signature portion it is made to appear that the guardians are signing the note on behalf of the minor. The point is thus left no longer in doubt, and on a construction of the note, I find that the guardians have clearly indicated that they did not intend to incur personal responsibility. In my opinion, therefore, Krishnan, J.'s decision in regard to this note is wrong, and cannot be supported.

I shall next deal with the promissory notes in Letters Patent Appeal No. 64 of 1924. To my mind, these present no difficulty. The appellants do not describe themselves as guardians but as executors and the section that applies is s. 29 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The relevant portion of that section is as follows:—

"A legal representative of a deceased person who signs his name to a promissory note...is liable personally thereon unless he expressly limits his liability to the extent of the assets received by him as such."

The language of s. 29 is widely different from that of s. 28. In the first place, under s. 28 it is sufficient to indicate that personal liability is excluded. Under s. 29 there must be express words limiting the liability. Secondly, under s. 28 the agent's liability may be altogether excluded but under s. 29 the executor's liability can only be limited to the extent of the assets.

These notes purport to have been executed by the appellants in their capacity as executors. When s. 29 specifically deals with the case, it is not permissible to invoke the principle of s. 28. The appellant's learned Vakīl has contended that his clients were not in fact executors because the minor's father could not have made a valid appointment of executors. Granting this to be so, it does not, in my opinion, make the slightest difference. We are concerned not with the fact whether they are executors but only whether they have described themselves as executors. It is not to be expected that when the paper passes from hand to hand every successive holder is to satisfy himself as regards the truth of the statement in the note, and I am not prepared to accept the contention that the section has no application unless the executant happens to be in fact a legal representative. I am, therefore, of the opinion that Krishnan's judgment in regard to this note is right and must accordingly be confirmed.

I feel that it is necessary that I must add one word. The lower Court has passed a decree against the minor and he has not filed an appeal challenging its correctness. We are, therefore, not concerned with the propriety or otherwise of the decree against the minor. But nevertheless it seems to me that although the agent is personally liable on the note, there is nothing to prevent the Court from passing a decree against the minor himself provided that the plaint is framed in an alternative form suing the guardian on the note and the minor alternatively on the consideration. see Firm of Sadasuk Janki Das v. Krishan Pershad (1) and Krishna Ayyar v. Krishnasami Ayyar (3). This question, however, does not here arise and need not be pursued further.

I may state in conclusion that Mr. Alladi Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakīl for the appellants, desired to raise a new point, one relating to rule of election as laid down in French v. Howie (4) and Moore v. Flanagan (5) but that we did not permit him to raise this point as he did not raise it before Krishnan, J., and attempted to do so for the first time before us.

The result is that Letters Patent Appeals Nos. 64 and 66 of 1924 are dismissed with costs and Letters Patent Appeal No. 65 of 1924 is allowed and the suit dismissed with costs throughout against defendants Nos. 2 and 3.

Madhavan Nair, J.—These Letters Patent Appeals are directed against the decision of Krishnan, J., in three second appeals which arose out of suits instituted by the plaintiffs for the recovery of the money due to them on promissory notes executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The first defendant is the minor son of one Veeranna who died leaving debts. Though the property belonging to him is joint family property, Veeranna nevertheless executed a Will naming defendants Nos. 2 and 3 as executors. Though the document is invalid so far as it purported to deal with joint family property, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 entered upon the management under the Will and executed the various suit promissory notes to Veeranna's creditors. The plaintiffs in these suits claimed decrees against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 personally as the makers of the promissory notes and against the estate of the first defendant. The District Munsif gave a decree against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 personally and dismissed the suits against the minor's estate. Both the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 2 and 3 preferred appeals to the Subordinate Judge who gave decrees against the estate of the minor dismissing the suits against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The minor, i.e., the first defendant, did not appeal to the High Court but the plaintiffs preferred second appeals claiming personal decrees against defendants Nos. 2 and 3. The learned Judge, Krishnan, J., set aside the decrees passed by the Subordinate Judge with the result that the plaintiffs in the High Court, succeeded in obtaining decrees against defendants Nos. 2 and 3 personally.

(5) (1920) 1 K. B. 919, 89 L. J. K. B. 417; 122 L. T. 739.

The question for determination in all these Letters Patent Appeals is the same, namely, whether defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are personally liable under the suit promissory notes.

L. P. A. No. 64 of 1924.

As there is some difference in the language of the promissory notes in the various suits and as the argument advanced by the learned Vakils on both sides had reference to the language it will be useful to refer to these promissory notes at the very commencement. Exhibits A, B, E and F are the four promissory notes in this Letters Patent Appeal against Second Appeal No. 998 of 1921. Exhibit A states in its preamble that it is "executed by Subbanna and Satyanarayana (defendants Nos. 2 and 3) jointly as executors appointed in accordance with the registered Will of the late Chinna Veeranna, his son Viswanathan being a minor .....". In its body it states, "on demand we promise to pay to you or to your order the sum of Rs 113-2-0 only the amount borrowed to serve our need, i. e., the amount we have agreed to pay on behalf of the aforesaid Chinna Veeranna... ..". This promissory note is signed by the two defendants without the qualification as executors being added to their signatures. Exhibit B is similar to Ex. A except that in its body the statement "the amount we have agreed to pay on behalf of the aforesaid Chinna Veeranna" is absent. It simply says, "on demand we promise to pay to you or to your order the sum of Rs. 585-10-6 only the amount borrowed to serve our need, i. e., the amount of principal and interest on the promissory note executed by the late Chinna Veeranna." The preamble of Exs. E and F are similar to those of Exs. A and B, with this difference that in the preamble of Ex. F "his son Viswanathan being a minor" is absent. In the body of these two promissory notes, Exs. E and F, we find the expression "We both individually promise to pay to you or to your order the sum of Rs. ...." which does not appear in Exs. A and B. These promissory notes run thus: "We both individually promise to pay to you or to your order the sum of Rs. .... on the promissory note executed by the late Chinna Veeranna." In the signature portion of all these promissory notes the names of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 appear without any qualification. Though these promisory notes thus present some special features, they agree in this respect that each of them is stated in the preamble to have been executed by defendants Nos. 2 and 3 "as executors" and signed by them without disclosing their representative capacity.

Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer, the learned Vakil for the appellants argues that the language used in these promissory notes distinctly shows that the appellants have not undertaken any personal liability to pay the promissory note debts and that the learned Judge was wrong in applying s. 29 of the Negotiable Instruments Act in deciding this case, inasmuch as it is clear that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 cannot in law be considered executors as the deceased Veeranna had no power to execute a Will, the property being joint family property. Section 29 being inapplicable and the language of the documents showing that there was no personal liability, the learned Vakil argues on the analogy of various decisions which he has brought to our notice that in this case, the only decree that could be passed is one against the estate of the deceased Veeranna.

The important question for consideration is whether s. 29 of the Negotiable Instruments Act applies to this case. Section 29 runs as follows:—"A legal representative of a deceased person who signs his name to a promissory note, Bill of Exchange or cheque is liable personally thereon, unless he expressly limits his liability to the extent of the assets received by him as such." The term 'legal representative' includes executors or administrators. If this section is applicable, defendants Nos. 2 and 3, are liable personally on these promissory notes, as they say in the preamble of the notes that they have executed them "jointly as executors appointed in accordance with the registered Will of the late Chinna Veeranna." The argument that defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are not, strictly speaking, executors and, therefore, s. 29 is inapplicable, cannot be accepted; for we are dealing with promissory notes and it is well known that those are intended to pass freely from hand to hand and a party who takes a negotiable instrument of the class we are dealing with is not expected to decide for himself whether the person who has executed the instrument in his capacity as an executor is really an executor in the eye of the law or not, before accepting the note. If this principle is not given effect to, the very object of a negotiable instrument would be defeated. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 having described themselves as executors, persons dealing with them on the promissory notes will naturally treat them as executors, and the promissory notes will be passed on from hand to hand distinctly on that understanding. It is, necessary, therefore, that s. 29 should be applied in a case like the present one, and if so, defendants Nos. 2 and 3 are clearly liable personally, unless they are able to show that they have expressly limited their liability in original to the extent of the assets received by them as such. The language of the promissory notes that I have already referred to speaks with no uncertain voice. In none of them is the liability of the executants expressly limited in any way to the extent of the assets received by them as such while in all of them there is a distinct promise to pay made by the executants. The cases cited by Mr. Krishnaswami Iyer in this connection need not be considered in detail, as most of them deal with the question how far can recourse be had to the estate on notes executed by an executor, or guardian of a minor, or trustee of a property. The decisions in Padma Krishna Chettiar v. Nagamani Ammal (6), Batchu Ramajogayya v. Vajjula Jagannadham (7) and Ammalu Ammal v. Namagiri Ammal (8) and the other cases cited by him do not deal with the question with which we are here concerned. As the executants of the promissory notes in question have not in any way expressly limited their liability to their extent of the assets received by them, I must hold that s. 29 of the Negotiable Instruments Act applies to this case and that the decision of the learned Judge is right. I dismiss this Letters Patent Appeal with costs.

L. P. A. No. 65 of 1924.

The language of the promissory notes in these appeals is different from the language of the notes already examined. The preamble speaks of these notes as promissory notes executed "by guardians under the Will of the late Veeranna, as Viswanatham happens to be a minor.

In L. P. A. No. 66 the body of the note, amongst other things, contains the statement that "On demand the amount of principal and interest accrued upto date... will be paid by either of us". In this appeal the two executants signed the promissory note with their names without describing themselves as guardians. The language of the promissory note, Ex. A, which I have noticed above distinctly shows that the executants intended to incur personal liability on this note. Though there is no specific provision in the Negotiable Instruments Act regarding the liability of a guardian on a promissory note executed by him, it seems to me that the principle underlying s. 28 regarding the liability of an agent signing a promissory note may well be applied to such a case. Section 28 of the Act deals only with the case of agents and principals, in this respect differing from s. 26 of the English Act which deals generally with the liability of persons signing in a representative capacity. In two decisions of this Court the principle underlying s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act has been applied in deciding on the liability of a guardian executing a promissory note on behalf of the minor. In Ramaswami Mudaliar v. Muthuswami Iyer (2) the second defendant in the case was described in the body of the note as the guardian of the first defendant who was at its date a minor, and the necessity for borrowing was stated in it as arising from the first defendant's father's debt. The learned Judges state, "We are not, however, prepared to treat these facts alone as sufficient to indicate that second defendant signed as first defendant's guardian or did not intend to incur personal liability". The second defendant was, therefore, held liable on the promissory note. The extract from the judgment shows that the learned Judges in deciding the case have assumed that the principle of s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act is applicable to the case of the guardian and ward. (See also the unreported decision in A. S. No. 306 of 1922 on the file of the High Court). The decision of the Privy Council in Firm of Sadasuk Janaki Das v. Kishan Pershad (1) supports the view that a general application can be given of the principle underlying s. 28 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Defendants Nos. 2 and 3 in this case have not indicated that they signed the promissory note as agents or that they did not intend to incur personal liability. On the other hand, the language of the promissory note, in my opinion, distinctly shows that they are personally liable. The decision of the learned Judge is, therefore, right and this Letters Patent Appeal No. 66 should be dismissed with costs.

IN L. P. A. No. 65 OF 1924.

In this appeal the language used in the preamble and in the body of the promissory note indicating the liability of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 is like the language in the promissory note in Letters Patent Appeal No. 66, but the executants in signing the promissory note describe themselves in the signature portion as "guardians of minor Viswanatham". This is a distinctive feature of this note and in this respect it differs from the promissory note Ex. A just noticed. When we read the promissory note bearing this feature in mind, the conclusion is irresistible that the executants have signed this note merely as guardians excluding thereby their personal liability. It, therefore, follows, that, on the language of this note, defendants No. 2 and 3 are not personally liable. As the construction that I am putting on the language of this promissory note is different from that given to it by the learned Judge, the decision in Second Appeal No 999 of 1921 must be set aside. The plaintiff in this case will only be entitled to a decree against the minor's estate and not against the guardians personally. This Letters Patent Appeal is allowed with costs throughout.

As pointed out by my learned brother, we have not allowed the learned Vakils for the appellants to argue a new point which he desired to raise in these appeals.

NAGPUR JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 440 OF 1924.

December 1, 1925.

Present:—Mr. Findlay, Officiating J. C.

VINAYAK—PLAINTIFF—APPELLANT

versus

KANIRAM AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—

RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, r. 63

--Attachment, objection to, dismissal of--Title suit-- Fraudulent transfer--Consideration--Possession--Good faith--Burden of proof--Intention to defeat creditors
--Transferee not party to fraud, effect of

Where an objection to an attachment of certain property in execution of a decree, by a person claiming to be a transferee of the property from the judgment-debtor, is dismissed on the ground that the transfer was intended to defeat the creditors of the judgment-debtor and was fraudulent, and the unsuccessful objector brings a suit to establish his title to the property, the burden lies upon him of proving not merely the passing of adequate consideration and his possession over the property but also his own good faith [p. 812, col 2.]

Where, however, consideration and possession are established a much lighter burden lies on the plaintiff with regard to the establishment of good faith [p. 813, col 1.]

In such a case, however, the all essential point is whether the plaintiff was a party to the fraud on the creditors. An intention to defeat the creditors may well exist on the part of the transferor, and yet the transfer will be valid unless the transferee was also a party to the fraud. [ibid]

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Bhandara, dated the 24th July 1924, in Civil Appeal No. 35 of 1924.

Messrs M. V. Abhyankar and A. V. Wazalwar, for the Appellant.

Sir B. K. Bose, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiff-appellant sued the defendants-respondents for a declaration that the 3 annas 6 pie share in Mouza Tadgaon and 10.40 acres of malik makbuza land in the same village are not liable to attachment and sale under the decree obtained by the defendant-respondent Kaniram in Civil Suit No. 47 of 1922 against one Garu Patel. The plaintiff-appellant had unsuccessfully objected to the attachment in the execution proceedings. The plaintiff's case is that he bought the property in suit under a sale-deed, dated 21st June 1922, from Karu Patel for Rs. 10,000. The defendants pleaded that the alleged sale in favour of the plaintiff by Karu was a fraudulent and collusive one, intended to defeat the creditors of Karu. They also pleaded that the sale was without consideration and that there was no pressing necessity on Karu to dispose of his property as he did.

The Subordinate Judge found that Karu had duly executed the sale-deed in question in the plaintiff's favour. He also found that out of the consideration, Rs. 3,516 in cash had been paid before the Sub-Registrar and that the plaintiff had paid off two instalments of the mortgage-deed executed by Karu: cf., receipts P-2 and P-3. In fact, the first Court's finding so far was that consideration had been paid in the manner mentioned in the sale-deed. On the question of possession the finding of the Subordinate Judge was a somewhat halting one. At the end of para 6 of his judgment he tells as follows:—

"The plaintiff also proves from the entries in his account books that he spent some money and grain for the cultivation of lands in Tadgaon, and his witnesses Nos 3, 4, 5, 7, 8 and 9 and he himself as P. W No 1 depose that Karu's lands have been in possession of plaintiff."

Thereafter in para. 7 of his judgment the Subordinate Judge went on to find that mutation had been effected in the plaintiff's favour but that his name was subsequently struck off by the Tahsildar when the plaintiff's objection in the execution proceedings failed. On the evidence of the Revenue Inspector also the Subordinate Judge held that had it not been for the failure of the objection, the plaintiff's name would have appeared in the khassra and mutation register. Thus having held that the plaintiff had proved that he was in possession of the property he purchased, the Subordinate Judge went on to point out that consideration and possession were not the only tests of the genuineness of a transaction like the present. From this point of view he considered the following circumstances suspicious:—

(a) that there was no reason given for Karu's subsequently selling the property,

(b) that he only retained a few acres of occupancy land, a house and a kotha, as well as a right to occupy the sir lands on the expiry of the 5 years' lease he granted to the plaintiff;

(c) that the plaintiff had not made any enquiries as to the necessity for Karu's selling the property, as to whether it was ancestral property and the like,

(d) that the financial embarrassments of Karu at the time did not justify the sale. In particular the mortgage-deed was an instalment one while the other creditor Atmaram had only some Rs. 1,500 due to him,

(e) that the sale transaction was carried through in a hurried and hole and corner manner, and

(f) that Karu and plaintiff are relatives.

On these and connected findings the Subordinate Judge held that the sale in favour of the plaintiff was a collusive and fraudulent transaction and accordingly dismissed the suit.

The plaintiff appealed to the Court of the District Judge, Bhandara. The District Judge reversed the finding of the Subordinate Judge regarding consideration and held that no consideration had in reality passed from the plaintiff to Karu. He likewise held that possession of the property also had not passed to the plaintiff.

The judgment of the District Judge, however, is one which it is exceedingly difficult to appreciate in its present form. In arriving at the findings he does, as regards consideration and possession, he relies apparently entirely on the more general aspects of the alleged sale transaction. That transaction he describes as having been carried out in a romantic way; whatever this adjective may mean in this connection. He lays great stress on the fact that there was no enquiry made about the debt due by Karu on the incumbrances on the property. He also is greatly influenced by the fact that the sale was carried out hurriedly and he seems to hold that arbitrary prices were put on the various subjects which passed. He also lays stress on the fact that the vendor and vendees were relations and that other relations and interested parties assisted in the negotiations and the transaction. The District Judge held that although the amount of Rs. 3,516 12 0 was paid to Karu before the Sub Registrar, this was a mere nominal payment intended to give an air of reality to the transaction. On these and other findings the District Judge confirmed the dismissal of the suit by the first Court.

In a case like the present it is unfortunate that there is no indication whatever in the District Judge's judgment on whom he regarded the onus of proof as lying in the present case. This was an all essential matter to be primarily determined. Admittedly, the burden of proof as regards consideration primarily rested on the plaintiff. The first Court, however, held that that burden had been discharged, for it gave a finding that consideration had duly passed. A further question arises, however, as to on whom the burden of proof rested after the passing of consideration had been held proved by the first Court. On behalf of the appellant it has been urged that consideration having been established, and particularly as the Subordinate Judge held that possession had also passed, the burden of proof shifted on to the respondents of showing that the sale transaction was a fraudulent and collusive one. The decision in Mahomed Haneef Meajee v. Mozhur Ali (1) is not peculiarly apposite in the present connection. There it was the vendor himself who asserted that he had not received the consideration although he admitted receipt before the Registrar. In those circumstances naturally a heavy onus rested on the plaintiff before he could hope to avoid the effect of his own admission. A similar remark applies to the decision in Sham Chand Pal v. Protap Chand Pal (2) and that in Ali Khan Bahadur v. Indar Parshad (3). Had the present suit been between Karu and plaintiff, the decisions quoted would have applied proprio vigore, but I cannot see that they are applicable in the circumstances of the present case.

On behalf of the respondents it has been urged that the burden of proof throughout rested on the plaintiff; firstly, because he was the plaintiff, and secondly, because he had failed in the objection proceedings: cf., Narayan Ganesh Ghatate v. Bhioraj (4). I so far agree that the burden of proof was on the plaintiff of proving not only consideration and possession but also good faith. In the present case, however, there is no indication whatever that the District Judge had any regard whatever as to how the question of burden of proof lay, and the first point he had to decide was whether, in view of the findings of the Subordinate Judge on the question of consideration and possession, the plaintiff had sufficiently established the good faith of the sale transaction. In this connection it is pertinent to observe that consideration and possession having been established, a much lighter burden lay on the plaintiff with regard to the establishment of good faith.

It seems to me, however, that the lower Appellate Court's finding on the question of consideration cannot stand in its present form. The all important question it had to consider in this connection was whether the consideration was adequate or not and whether the consideration was disposed of in the method stated in the sale-deed. There is, in reality, no specific finding on this point. The Judge of the lower Appellate Court seems also to have assumed that only one instalment of the mortgage-deed has been paid off by the plaintiff, whereas the evidence on record shows that two such instalments have been satisfied. What the lower Appellate Court has done in reality was to have regard, first of all, to the questions of good faith and possession and having decided these against the plaintiff, deduced from them that consideration had not, in reality, passed. The case should, of course, have been approached from the exactly opposite point of view. The burden of establishing the passing of consideration rested on the plaintiff, that was obviously the primary question to determine. The lower Appellate Court should have first decided that point and this having been done it should have, in turn, decided the question of possession. If these points were found in favour of the plaintiff-appellant, the onus of establishing good faith would still rest upon the latter, but would be much lighter one. On the other hand, if the lower Appellate Court finds that consideration was not paid and possession did not pass, the possibility of establishing good faith would be more remote.

(1) 15 W. R. 280.

(2) 1 C. W. N. 594; 25 C. 78; 24 I. A. 183, 7 Sar. P. C. J. 217, 13 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 53 (P. C.)

The case has, moreover, from another point of view not been properly handled by both the lower Courts. The all essential point in a transaction like the present is whether the transferee, that is the present plaintiff, was a party to the fraud. In a transaction like that we are concerned with, an intention to defeat the creditors may well exist on the part of the vendor, yet the sale will be valid unless the vendee was also a party to the fraud: cf., Natha v. Magan-chand (5) Ramasamia Pillai v. Adinarayana Pillai (6). The case in Nana Mansaram Shet v. Rautmal Tarachand Shet (7) relied on by the lower Appellate Court was, it need hardly be said, of an entirely different nature. There the vendor had reserved absolutely no property to himself. The plaintiff bought it without seeing or valuing it; the consideration consisted of time-barred debts or debts which were not payable at the time and the said consideration was grossly inadequate. The said decision, therefore, was an entirely inapposite one for application to the facts of the present case.

I would add also that one other matter requiring consideration at the hands of the lower Appellate Court is whether or not the consideration was inadequate. There has been no finding of any value on this point.

The appeal must, therefore, go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-disposal on the merits with advertence to the above remarks. As I have already pointed out, the finding arrived at with regard to the consideration is really based on more or less extraneous matters and requires much more specific and precise consideration. This point having been adjudicated upon, the District Judge must then take up the point of possession and good faith and in arriving at his conclusion on the appeal as a whole he must remember that the bed-rock test of the good or bad faith of a transaction like the present is whether the vendee, that is the present plaintiff, was also a party to the fraud, even assuming that a fraudulent intention was present on the part of the vendor Karu.

The judgment and decree appealed against are reversed and the case will go back to the lower Appellate Court for re-disposal of Civil Appeal No. 35 of 1924 on the merits with advertence to the above remarks. There will be no certificate for refund of Court-fees. The costs incurred in this appeal will follow the event.

When an oath has been administered it is too late for the Court to pass an order allowing its retraction

Petition for revision of a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Fourth Class, exercising the powers of a Judge, Small Cause Court, Jhang, dated the 19th July 1924.

Mr. Devi Dayal, for the Petitioner.

Lala Parkash Chand, for Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—Plaintiff's next friend offered on the 18th July 1924, to be bound by the oath of the defendant, and this offer was accepted by the latter on that very day. It appears that no application allowing the plaintiff to revoke the agreement to be bound by the oath was presented to the Court until after the oath had been administered, but that an application to that effect was made to the Commissioner before the administration of the oath, and the question for determination is whether the plaintiff should have been allowed to revoke his offer to be bound by the defendant's oath.

Now, there is nothing in ss. 9, 10 and 11 of the Indian Oaths Act which allows a party, who has agreed to the administration of an oath by his opponent, to revoke his offer after it has been accepted by the latter; but as held in Thoyi Ammal v. Subbaroya Mudali (1) the Court has discretion to allow retraction if good grounds are shown therefor. I am, however, unable to hold that any ground has been shown which would have justified the revocation. Indeed, as pointed out above, the application to the Court was made after the oath had been administered, and it was, therefore, too late for the Court to pass an order disallowing the taking of the oath by the defendant.

The statement on oath made by the defendant is conclusive, and the application for revision preferred by the plaintiff is accordingly dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.

Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The question to be decided in this appeal is whether the defendants gave permanent occupancy rights in the land in question.

The facts may be briefly stated. The Rajah of Vizanagaram granted in the year 1810 to Chintalapati Rayappa Razu a portion of the village of Lakkavaram on what was described as "Harasala Cowle" or permanent lease. The assessment and other dues payable to the zemindar were fixed at Rs. 1,421-6-0 and the grant contains the words that "the profits are to be enjoyed hereditarily from son to grand-son." It may be useful to give the rendering of the grant itself (Ex. 1).

"Harasala Cowle granted by Sri Pusapati Narayanagajapathi Raju Maharajulungaru to Chintalapati Rayaparaju on Saturday the 5th day of the bright fortnight of Margasira of the Promodutha year. Yearly money rent for the village of Lakavaram in the Purganah of Veddadi excluding the existing temple, Brahmin, mirasi inams from the year Pramothudha.—

Rs. 1,400 jamabandi or assessment

* * * * *

Rupees one thousand four hundred and twenty-one and annas six is settled and kadapa having been filed, Harasala Cowle is granted. Therefore, for this the instalments every year are —

* * * * *

In default of payment on due dates the amounts should be paid along with interest. Cultivating this village extensively, the profits left after payment of the Sircar jamabandi or assessment from its produce, are to be enjoyed hereditarily from your son to grand-son. The laws enacted by the company should be observed towards ryots and other people."

In 1823 there was what purported to be a relinquishment in favour of the zemindar and an endorsement was made on the Cowle to the effect that the land was relinquished. Taking his stand on this relinquishment, the zemindar sued for possession in 1825. His suit was dismissed in 1827 by the Provincial Court, Northern Division, on the ground that the parties who made the relinquishment had no right to the land and that Simhadri Razu, the adopted son, of Rayappa Razu was the person entitled.

We have no information as to the subsequent history of this nam excepting that the family became split into three branches and a third share was held by a widow belonging to one of them, by name Sundaranarasayya. She granted to Sripati Purushottam about 6 acres of land out of her share. The grant is not before us and we have to decide what was the nature of the grant that was then made. Nor is it known when the grant was made excepting that it should have been previous to 1874 as Sundaranarasayya died in that year. On her death, the zemindar of Vizanagaram claiming that certain sums were due from her, resumed her share of the inam. The only information that we have in regard to the plot granted to Sripati Purushottam is that on the 8th of February 1893 he executed Ex. B in favour of the zemindar. It recites that the suit plot which had been granted to Purushottam and had been for long in his enjoyment, is at his request allowed to continue to remain with him and he agrees to pay an annual kattubadi of Rs. 6 and obtain receipts from time to time. We have to decide what is the nature of this grant and what light does it throw on the previous grant by Sundaranarasayya to Purushottam.

We have evidence in the case as to how Purushottam was enjoying these lands subsequent to 1893. Exhibit D is a kadapa executed by one Jarripotula Bhimanna in favour of Purushottam wherein he agrees to pay a kist of Rs. 43-8-0 for the land in question and to give up possession at the end of the year for which the lease was granted. This recites that one Dummi Appadu was cultivating the land during the previous year. Again in 1899 the same Bhimanna executed another kadapa, apparently for one year, agreeing to pay a half share of the produce and a further sum of Rs. 3-8-0 half of Rs. 7 the kattubadi payable on the land. In 1903, the 4th defendant who contests the suit, executed Ex. C-1 agreeing to take the land on lease for three years at a yearly kist of Rs. 22-8-0 and to surrender the land at the end of the period. In 1909, again, the 4th defendant executed to Purushottam another kadapa (Ex. C) for a period of three years on a yearly kist of Rs. 30 agreeing, as before, to give up the land at the end of the term. This recites that this very tenant was in the possession of the land during the year previous to the kadapa. These documents show that the land was being actually cultivated by tenants and that Purushottam leased to such lessees from time to time as he pleased. The evidence also makes it clear that the 4th defendant was originally admitted as tenant about the year 1900. On the death of Purushottam, his sons executed a sale-deed for the suit land in favour of the plaintiff. The suit is for recovering possession and the 4th defendant resists it on the ground that he has permanent occupancy rights.

The plea, namely, that occupancy rights were expressly conferred on the defendant by Purushottam may be easily disposed of. The terms of the kadapas C and C-1 are inconsistent with any such hypothesis and it is impossible to hold, in the face of his undertaking to surrender the land at the end of the term, that by contract such rights were granted to him.

The next question then is, can the 4th defendant claim occupancy rights in virtue of the Estates Land Act? The defendant can succeed by showing either that the land in question is an estate within the meaning of s 3, cl. (2), of the Act or that the plaintiff is a land-holder as defined in cl. (5) of the same section. What was granted to Rayappa Razu was itself less than a village and s 3 (2) (e) does not apply even to the original grant. Rayappa Razu was himself a minor inamdhar and the portion granted to Purushottam cannot possibly be an estate within the Act. This proposition is not disputed. The defendant, therefore, strongly seeks to make out that the plaintiff is a land-holder.

Mr. Varadachari, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff, contends that according to the true construction of Ex. E (1) it constitutes a grant only of the kudivaram interest. But for the purpose of the present appeal he does not propose to take his stand upon this. I have, therefore, to deal with the case on the footing that Rayappa Razu and Sundaranarasayya are minor inamdars. That they will in that event be land-holders must now be taken as settled. Jurugumilli Brahmayya v. Chelaghali Achthiraju (1). That case is an authority for the proposition that although the grant of a post-settlement inam comprises both the varams, the grantee is a land-holder and the ryot can claim occupancy rights. Now, the short question is, did the grant in favour of Purushottam comprise both the varams, in other words, was there a grant in inam to him, or as the plaintiff contends, was he merely inducted to the land as a ryot? To put it in another way, what was the subject of the grant in favour of Purushottam?

(1) Was it of malvaram alone; in which case he would be a land-holder?

(2) Was it of malvaram and kudivaram; in which case again he would be a land-holder?

(3) Was it of kudivaram alone; in which event he would be merely a ryot with the result that any under-tenant cannot claim rights of occupancy?

At the time of the grant, the land was waste and there were no cultivating tenants on it, and what was granted, therefore, could not be melvaram alone. This hypothesis is, therefore, out of the question. The question, therefore, narrows itself into, was the grant of both the varams or was it only of kudivaram, in other words, was it the land that was granted or was the grantee introduced on the land merely as a ryot?

The contention of Mr. Varadachari, the learned Vakil for the plaintiff, is two-fold. On the date of the grant by Sundaranarasayya the land was clearly waste. Where melvaram and kudivaram interests do not exist as two independent entities but only notionally (as in the case of waste land) it is not correct to describe the grant as being in the nature of inam. Such a conception is erroneous in law. The transaction can amount only to admission of a tenant to waste land as in the case of a darkhast grant in ryotwari tracts. Dealing with this contention, I must say I am unable to accept the theory that an inam grant of waste land is in law impossible. Mr. Varadachari's second contention cannot, however, be so easily disposed of. He contends, assuming that there is nothing to prevent the transaction from being a grant in inam, this transaction must be construed as a disposition in favour of a tenant. He argues that the land being waste, a favourable rent would be a normal feature and points to s. 26 of the Estates Land Act and urges that it contemplates the co-existence of low rent with mere kudivaram grant. In effect he maintains that the transaction is not an out and out grant but it should be viewed in the nature of a perpetual lease, there being a remission of a part of the rent. The distinction between a grant in inam and a perpetual lease on a favourable rent is indeed very fine although in law it is quite sound and this distinction is very material in the consideration of the present question. To understand, therefore, what the true nature of the transaction is, a very careful scrutiny of the evidence becomes necessary.

In this connection I must point out that there is no suggestion that at the time of the grant by Sundaranarasayya the grantee was in possession of the land or that any person had any kudivaram interest in it. In para 5 of the plaint it is stated that the land was waste at that time and the 4th defendant in his evidence admits that the land was then waste. Marina Veeraswamy v. Baynappalli Venkatarayudu (2) and Ganjam Manaikyamba v. Pasala Mallayya (3) are, therefore, inapplicable. The only other positions that remain to be dealt with are, first, that there was a simultaneous grant of both varams and, secondly, that there was a grant of kuduvaram alone. In the former case Brahmayya v. Achiraju (1) directly applies and the grantee would be a land-holder.

To clear the ground, I should like before discussing the evidence to make another observation. Exhibit B very clearly shows that there was no fresh grant by the zemindar but that he merely confirmed the original grant, whatever it was, imposing probably a kattubadi for the first time or enhancing a previously existing kattubadi. With these remarks I shall examine the evidence.

(1) Exhibit B is more consistent with the theory of an inam grant than a lease on favourable terms; especially the use of the word "kattubadi" favours this view.

(2) K-4 is a receipt by the zemindar in favour of Purushottam. He is described in it as inamdar and the sum of Rs. 6 payable by him as "darimila kattubadi".

There are other receipts where the word "pattadar" appears but I attach importance to the word "inamdar" which was specially written in ink, whereas the word "pattadar" appears in print in a common form of receipt.

(3) Exhibits 1-A, 1-B, and 1-E, dated 23rd December 1904, 10th December 1903 and 2nd May 1907 respectively are receipts granted by Purushottam to the 4th defendant. In the first and second of them, the rent is described as inam kist, in the third it is described as "kist in respect of a manyam lands".

(4) Exhibit D one of the kadapas executed in favour of Purushottam describes the land as "inam wet lands".

(5) The landlord's share alone is fixed at Rs. 43 8-0 in Ex. D, at Rs. 22-8-0 in Ex. C-1 and at Rs. 30 in Ex. C, whereas the kuttubadi is only Rs. 6.

(6) A holding in perpetuity is in the circumstances more consistent with the grant being in the nature of an inam.

(7) Exhibit A refers to the sums payable in respect of land as taxes and what is even more conclusive the property is described as post-settlement inam.

Beyond this, there is no evidence worth mentioning and as we must reach a decision only upon this material, I am of the opinion that the grant was in the nature of an inam. The plaintiff, therefore, is a land-holder and I must in this view uphold the judgment of the Subordinate Judge.

The appeal, therefore, fails and is dismissed with costs.

Madhavan Nair, J.—I agree. The main question for consideration in this appeal is, what was the nature of the grant of the suit land by Sundara Narasayya to Sripati Purushottam? Was it the grant of a land in inam, or, as is contended for by Mr. Varadachariar, the learned Vakil for the appellant, did the grant only amount to an admission of Sripati Purushottam to the land as a tenant, in which case the 4th defendant would not be an under-tenant under him? The decision of the question must depend entirely upon a scrutiny of the evidence in the case.

The original grant is not before us, but we have to proceed on the assumption that the land when it was given was merely a waste land. It is so described in the plaint and it is admitted by the 4th defendant in his evidence. From the nature of that land itself nothing definite as regards the character of the grant can be inferred. It is quite possible that only a kuduvaram interest was granted to Sripati Purushottam. Section 26 of the Madras Estates Land Act shows that it is quite possible to make a grant of such a limited character, and the decisions quoted to us also suggest that the idea of such a grant is not an unfamiliar one. But the other evidence in the case which I shall presently examine makes me think that the grant in this case was in the nature of the grant in inam. This evidence consists of three classes of documents (1) kadapas executed in favour of Sripati Purushottam, namely, Exs. D D-1 and C, C-1; (2) Receipts granted by the Vizanagayram Estate to Sripati Purushottam, namely, Exs. K series (3); Receipts granted to Sripati Purushottam to the 4th defendant; and (4) Exs. A and B.

(1) The kadapas do not afford much valuable evidence in the case, but Ex. D executed by one Bhimanna in favour of Sripati Purushottam describes the land

(2) 57 Ind. Cas. 778, 39 M. L. J. 225; 12 L. W. 51; 28 M. L. T. 453.

(3) 82 Ind. Cas. 929; 47 M. L. J. 393, 20 L. W. 387; (1924) M. W. N. 779; A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 782; 47 M. 942, 35 M. L. T. 70.

"inam wet land." Exhibit C and C-1 show that Sripathi Purushottam was letting out the land for cultivation to tenants on lease. Taken along with the other evidence in the case, an inference though a faint one that Sripati Purushottam was an inamdar may be drawn from these documents.

(2) As regards the receipts granted by the Estate we have to note that in Ex. K-4 Sripati Purushottam is described as "inamdar." The word is written in ink though the printed word "pattadar", the usual word appearing in the printed receipts has not been scored out. In Ex. K-8 the land is described as "inam of No. 107 individual" and Sripati Purushottam is described as "inamdar," and the word is written in ink. No doubt in some of the receipts he is described as "pattadar," but it seems to me that importance is to be attached more to the description "inamdar" than to the word pattadar as the former word has, as already mentioned, been specially written in ink, whereas the printed word "pattadar" is the common word appearing in the receipts. It may also be noted that the kattubadi payable is variously described as "dharmilla kattubadi" and "dharmilla inam kattubadi." The words "inam kattubadi" appearing in Ex. K-4 are again written in ink.

(3) Dealing with the 3rd class of documents, Ex. 1-a is a receipt given by an agent on behalf of Sripati Purushottam to the 4th defendant. It mentions that the rent is paid as "inam cist for the land in Lakkavaram village." In Ex. 1-b also the same description appears. In Ex. 1-c the rent is referred to as "kist for manyam land". These receipts go to show how Sripati Purushottam himself thought about his right to the land.

(4) Exhibit A is the sale-deed to the plaintiff. There the suit land is described as "dharmilla inam land." Exhibit B is the agreement executed by Sripati Purushottam in favour of the Maharajah of Vizianagaram, dated the 8th of February 1893. This does not help us very much in finding out the nature of the grant in this case; but the use of the word "kattubadi" suggests that the land may have been granted in inam. The oral evidence in the case is not of much importance. On a careful consideration of the above evidence, I have come to the conclusion that the grant by Sundara Narasayya to Sripati Purushottam was the grant of the land in inam. The plaintiff is, therefore, "a landholder" within the meaning of the Full Bench decision in Dramayya v. Achiraju (1).

The decisions in Marine Veeraswamy v. Boyinappalli Venkatarayudu (2) and Ganjain Manikyamba v. Pasala Mallayya (3) are inapplicable to this case as at the time when the land was granted to Sripati Purushottam it is not suggested that there was anybody in possession of it.

As the plaintiff is a "land-holder" the judgment of the learned Subordinate Judge is right and this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal against a decree of the District Judge, Nagpur, dated the 8th April 1925, in Civil Appeal No. 217 of 1924.

Mr. M. R. Bobde, for the Appellants.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of this case are sufficiently clear from the judgments of the two lower Courts. It is firstly urged that the District Judge's finding as regards the ota in question is contrary to the pleading of both parties. The District Judge's finding is that the ota belongs to the public generally, although in practice it has only been used by the occupants of the surrounding houses. The defendant's position was that the ota is his exclusive property, while the plaintiffs' position is that it was the property of the occupants of the surrounding houses.

I have been referred to the decision in Nathu Piraji v. Umedmal Cadumal (1) in support of the appellants' proposition that the District Judge's finding that the land was public land was an illegal one in the circumstances. As a perusal of that case will show the facts thereof were entirely different and the decision does not seem to me applicable, even by an analogy, to the present case. Here the litigating parties alleged that a chabutra in an open space belonged to each of them. On the facts the lower Appellate Court held that neither of them had established their claim thereto and that the ota was public property and, therefore, the plaintiffs were not entitled to the relief which they claimed. The decision in Balkrishnadas v. Gobind (2) is full authority for the propriety of the lower Appellate Court's decision.

It has been urged, however, before me that even on the District Judge's finding that the ota is public property, an injunction should have been awarded to the plaintiffs in view of the fact that the defendant is claiming it as his exclusive property and that the plaintiffs have been using it for the purposes of their trade for years back. The Balkrishnadas v. Govind (2) just quoted is, in my opinion, authority for holding this contention to be incorrect. The plaintiffs came to Court alleging that the ota was their exclusive property. Had they filed the suit on behalf of the public generally, the preliminary steps under s. 91 of the C. P. C. would have had to be taken, and I may point out that building over any part of a public street or space constitutes a nuisance: cf. Queen-Empress v. Virappa Chetti (3).

I do not think, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in the present suit as framed and I am unable to see any ground for disturbing the decision of the lower Appellate Court. The appeal is dismissed without notice to the respondent.

An agent who was carrying on money-lending business on behalf of his principal was charged by the latter with breach of trust in obtaining an inadequate security from a third person in discharge of a pro-note that had been executed by a solvent debtor. The agent then produced a fresh pro-note alleged to have been since executed by the said debtor. A suit by the principal on this pro-note was dismissed on the ground that the note was forged. The cause of action on the original claim had by then become barred by time. In a suit by the principal against the agent for damages caused by his misconduct in forging the note and misleading the plaintiff into giving up the claim on the original note, it was found that the note was illegal and void being in contravention of s. 26 of the Paper Currency Act.

Held, that the plaintiff had no cause of action on which to maintain the suit, since even if the note had been genuine, a suit on that document must have failed and it could not be said that the loss of the litigation was due to the action of the agent in forging the note, the loss, if any, being due to the plaintiff's own neglect in not seeing what his rights were under the document. ## JUDGMENT.

Coutts Trotter, C. J.—This case has been in a state of confusion from the outset and it is only at the very last moment of it that our attention is drawn to a point that I am not sure we did find for ourselves and which would have rendered about two-thirds of the argument unnecessary. I do not blame the Bar, they had to pick out the facts from a tangled mess of documents and oral evidence. The judgment of the learned Judge is so confused that it is almost impossible to discover what he did find and what he did not. However in the view we take of this case, it is unnecessary to scrutinise the findings of fact of the learned Judge, because, to all intents and purposes, we may accept them. The facts are quite simple. The plaintiff is a Nattukottai Chetti who lives somewhere in the Ramnad District and has a branch business conducted in his absence by an agent at Palni. During most of the material time in the suit, that agent was the 4th defendant. A debt had been incurred by the 1st and 2nd defendants in the suit to his predecessor-in-agency and two promissory-notes had been given, Exs. A and A-1, dated the 12th January 1912 and 29th January 1912. Those promissory notes were for Rs. 900 and 100 respectively. After the 4th defendant had taken up his position as agent in succession to the other man, a very curious transaction took place. The 1st defendant on the 4th October 1913 executed a sale-deed transferring a certain piece of property to his mother-in-law for an expressed consideration of Rs. 2,000; and three days later on the 7th October, the same piece of property was mortgaged by the mother-in-law to the plaintiff through the agent, the transaction being carried out on the spot by the agent. The consideration for the mortgage was expressed to be the discharging of the debts evidenced on the promissory notes and a fresh advance of Rs. 403 which, according to the evidence, was actually made. The position apparently was that the original debtor, the 1st defendant (because the 2nd defendant is only a member of the family brought in under Hindu Law) was a well-to-do man and there would be no difficulty in getting the money. The position of the old woman was that, beyond this little bit of property which came to her from the 1st defendant in circumstances that are not beyond suspicion, she had nothing else in the world and apparently her husband was as impecunious as she was. Undoubtedly the transaction was one which the principal would be very likely to look at with very great suspicion; and, accordingly, when the principal, as in due course of time he did, visited Palni, he took his agent very much to task for exchanging a good security against a very solvent man for a very risky mortgage on a piece of land entirely problematical in value and said to be of much less value than a reasonably safe margin would demand. So there we have the agent at this stage treated as guilty of a breach of duty; and it may be that, had he then and there sued his agent for neglect and breach of duty, he would have been able to prove that the property was not worth as much as the debt and he would have got damages from the agent for his taking Ex. B instead of preserving the liability on Exs. A and A (1). But that cause of action is gone and hopelessly time-barred.

There is another suggested cause of action and that is a very curious one. When the 4th defendant was taken to task for releasing the 1st and 2nd defendants he said "O! that is all right. They quite acknowledge their liability continues and to show you that that is so, I will get you a fresh promissory-note executed by the 1st defendant." That he did and that promissory note figures in the case as Ex. H. Exhibit H has had a touring existence in various law Courts and the last pronouncement upon it was by the learned Subordinate Judge in this case who pronounced it to be a forgery, the theory being that the agent being frightened because of his misdeeds in regard to Exs. A and A-1 and B being found out sought to appease his principal by forging a promissory-note purporting to be executed by the original debtor, the 1st defendant. The Subordinate Judge went into the matter at enormous length but he entirely overlooked the point which cropped up at the end of the hearing here which renders the cause of action in our view untenable. The cause of action is this; "you represented to me that I was in possession of a new document on which I can sue you, the 1st and 2nd defendants, without recourse at all to the old promissory-notes." And thereupon, he says, he brought a suit on Ex. H and was damnified owing to being lulled into security by the false representation that Ex. H was a genuine document, forewent his remedy on Exs. A and A-1 and let them be time-barred. It is obvious that, if he proved his case at all, he would have been able to say in these proceedings on Ex. A and A-1. "It is quite true that these things look on the face of the transactions between the parties to be merged in Ex. B and to be gone but I am not in a position to show that Ex. B was a fraud and that, therefore, the original liability on the promissory-notes, Exs. A and A-1 was never in truth and in fact extinguished." We will assume that it is right. Speaking for myself, I think it would have been right, but there is one trifling flaw and it is this. Bys. 26 of the Paper Currency Act of 1910, "No person in British India should draw, accept, make or issue any Bill of Exchange, hundi, promissory-note or engagement for the payment of money payable to bearer on demand" with certain exceptions; and the effect of the section is to make such instruments absolutely illegal. Now, what is the position? There are decisions of this Court which, while formally settling the principle that such instruments are illegal, nevertheless point out that in certain cases the payee of the promissory-note can nevertheless bring proceedings on the original consideration. Some of them say that the promissory note may be relied upon as evidentiary of the original debt and consideration. It is unnecessary to discuss that matter here, because I do not think it arises in this case, but I should like to guard myself from being understood to say that I assent to that view of the law without further consideration and direct argument about it. But here what was the position? If the plaintiff could have said "you by your representations about the genuineness of this note prevented me from suing on the consideration," then there might be a great deal to be said but he has not said that. The note is payable to a named payee or bearer; and the contention at one time put forward was that that was not the mischief that it was intended to be hit by the Act. But there are several decisions of this Court which clearly decide otherwise; and, indeed, speaking with respect, I do not see how any Court could decide otherwise when it has really looked with any care at the Statute, what did the plaintiff do who we have assumed has been misled by the defendant's misrepresentations about the note? He did not come before the Court and say, "this is a promissory-note bad on the face of it and illegal but it has a perfectly good consideration behind it and I ask you to let me sue you on that debt. I put in a plaint purporting to sue on it and I ask you to let me sue on the promissory-notes merely as evidence of the debt." He brought a suit entirely framed on these promissory-notes and nothing else and the District Munsif decided against him on the ground that the notes were vitiated by the provisions of the Act. During the trial I suppose the District Munsif must have given him some intimation of what was in his mind. At the trial he did not ask for an amendment of the plaint and he did not apparently amend or was at any rate allowed to amend only when the case came on in appeal. The only conclusion is that, assuming the plaintiff to have been misled by the false representation made to him, assuming that the defendant, acted with a fraudulent intent and knew that the representations he was making were false, the chain of causation breaks down. It was not those representations that brought the plaintiff's case ill luck but it was the fact that he took an instrument which the law presumes him to know to be bad on the face of it instead of his old remedy and that, having that instrument he stuck to it as his sheet anchor and did not attempt to revive the original consideration. I may add that he would have been no better off on the finding of the learned Judge if in addition to suing on the promissory note, Ex. H, he had added an alternative claim on the consideration for that note for the simple reason that the learned Judge in this case—and it looks very much as if he was right—has found a fact that this promissory-note, Ex. H, was forged. Therefore, the only thing on which he could possibly have sued was the original consideration of the two old promissory-notes, Exs. A and A (1), and it was never suggested from first to last of this trial that it was any representation of the 4th defendant that prevented him from doing that. In my opinion this appeal must be allowed but, in view of the revelations of the 4th defendant's conduct, and, I may add, in view of the fact that the real point in the case was never taken until it had progressed several hours, we should not allow any costs.

Krishnan, J.—In this case the facts have been very clearly and fully set out in the judgment just delivered by the learned Chief Justice and it is unnecessary to state them again.

The 4th defendant is sued by the plaintiff on the ground that by giving him a forged note, Ex. H, he induced him to bring a suit on that note and as it was forged, he failed on the note and incurred the costs of that litigation unnecessarily and further that he was misled into giving up his claim under Exs. A and A (1) for the time being till that claim became barred by limitation. He contends before us, therefore, that on the finding that Ex. H is a forgery he is entitled to get from his agent, the 4th defendant, damages calculated partly on the costs of the litigation in which he failed and partly on the loss he suffered by not being able to claim against the 1st and 2nd defendants the amount due under the notes, Exs. A and A-1. The principal difficulty in his way is that Ex. H was not a document on which he could have based any action at all as it is a document rendered illegal by s. 26 of the Paper Currency Act. Even if it had been a genuine document, a suit on that document must have failed. That being so, it cannot be said that the loss of that litigation was due to the action of the 4th defendant, in forging the note. The plaintiff should have seen when he got Ex. H that, whether it be a genuine or a false one, it was not a document on which he could have maintained a suit; and, if he brought one, it was due to his own fault and I do not see how under the circumstances he could turn round and say that he lost his litigation on account of the action of the 4th defendant and that he should be made liable for the costs. It is contended before us that, even if we treat Ex. H as a document on which no action could have been brought, still if it had been a genuine document he could have asked the suit to be converted into one on the original cause of action, namely, the loans for which Exs. A and A (1) were given and got relief against the 1st and 2nd defendants. The answer to it is that, if he had taken proper care to see what his rights were, he could have in the very first instance instead of suing on Ex. H brought the action as he might have then done on the original loans for which Exs. A and A (1) were taken; Exs. A and A (1) themselves were promissory-notes which are hit at by s. 26 of the Paper Currency Act and hence could not have been sued upon. If any loss occurred to the plaintiff, it is clearly, therefore, due to his own neglect in not seeing what his rights were under the documents which are in question here. So far as any claim could be based upon the defendant's action in taking Ex. B in supersession of Exs. A and A-1 and a sum of money advanced at the time Ex. B was executed that claim is now barred by limitation; and no suit could be maintained by the plaintiff on any cause of action based upon the misconduct of the 4th defendant in taking Ex. B. It is only if he can sustain his present action on a ground based upon Ex. H that he has got any claim at all. As I have already stated I do not think that he is entitled to base any claim on Ex. H for the reasons I have already stated. That being so, it is clear that this action as against his agent, the 4th defendant fails. The 4th defendant's appeal must, therefore, be allowed and I agree to the order proposed by the learned Chief Justice. The suit is dismissed as against the 4th defendant.
